ATHLETIC DIRECTOR Max Urick speaks to Students for First Things First about the stadium expansion Sunday afternoon in the K-State Student Union. Urick and the group talked mostly about clarifications of numbers and figures dealing with the proposed stadium expansion.

CLIF PALMBERG Collegian

FIRST of an effort to explain the plan or consider alternate plans before bringing it to a referendum.

"It just feels like you're going full force and shoving this down our throats," he said.

Urick said he understood MacDougall Jr's position.

"If I were in your place, I might not vote for this plan," he said.

Urick also said he didn't have a personal stake in the project, and he understood the concern with other university expenditures, most notably Hale Library.

"I just want to present this thing on its own merits, but not against any other department," he said.

After Urick's comments, Engineering Student Senator Jason Ross pointed out that if the referendum passes, either of Urick's plans wouldn't necessarily be put in place by Student Senate.

"Senate can choose to do whatever plan they want," he said.

Ross offered the same plan which involved a surcharge on all ticket sales, with a guarantee that privilege fees would meet the difference on the debt.

Paul Robben, senior in chemistry, questioned the leadership on the part of Student Senate, which approved the referendum without the benefit of both sides of the issue, or even a concise plan by the athletic department.

"Why didn't they ask for more information before it passed?" he asked.

T.J. Schreiner, arts and sciences senator, said that students were consulted, but all seemed to favor moving forward with a referendum before more information was available.

He said the lack of interaction was regrettably typical of the relationship between Senate and the student body.

Ross took it a step further, and said he would love more student input and would be amazed along with the rest of Senate if more ad hoc groups like First Things First made presentations during Senate sessions.

"We would be such in shock," he said, "we'd probably be willing to do anything because we were in such a daze."

New storm hits battered, weary Mexican coast

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAXACA, Mexico — Hurricane Rick roared into Mexico's Pacific Coast on Sunday, pummeling fishing villages and tourist resorts still recovering from a deadly battering by Hurricane Pauline.

Oaxaca's state government said hurricane force winds hit the coast late Sunday afternoon, downing trees and washing out roads only recently repaired from the beating received from Pauline.

Hundreds of people were evacuated and seaports and tourist airports in areas such as Huatulco and Puerto Escondido were forced to close.

There were no immediate reports of injuries or deaths, but the storm knocked out communication with some small coastal villages. Officials suspended school indefinitely in the region, partly so school buildings could be used as shelters.

At 10 p.m. EST, Rick's eye had moved inland near the resort of Puerto Escondido, in the state of Oaxaca, and was moving east-northeast at about 13 mph, according to the U.S. Hurricane Center in Miami.

Hurricane force winds extended outward up to 35 miles from the center of the hurricane and tropical storm force winds extended outward up to 115 miles, largely to the south, the Center said.

Maximum sustained winds, which had reached 85 mph, had fallen to 75 mph with the move inland. The hurricane was expected to dissipate as it moved over land, but the Hurricane Center predicted strong winds and coastal flooding as the storm dumped 5 to 10 inches of rain.

GEOFF PYE, a doctor and intern in exotic animal wildlife and zoo medicine service at K-State, shoots a deer with a tranquilizer. The deer had wandered into Waters 41.

DEER

the deer and take it to the hospital. A crowd of nearly 20 people gathered to watch the deer be carried on plywood to a Vet Med minivan.

Geoff Pye, a doctor and intern in exotic animal wildlife and zoo medicine service at K-State, treated the buck overnight before releasing it into the wild near Tuttle Creek park on Saturday.

"We were very pleased with how it all went," Pye said.

Pye said the deer had a large laceration on the left chest area and the left hind leg and was lucky it had no fractured bones. He said deer jump through windows in that manner because they see the reflection and sense freedom.

The treatment of the buck was given on a good Samaritan basis by the university, paid for by a wildlife trust fund that is funded through private donations.

Pye said the case of the deer probably cost between $200 and $300, which is an exception. He said the hospital usually treats around 1,000 injured wildlife a year.

In the aftermath, the scene in the classroom was one of horror: Deep crimson blood was splattered on the crisp, white walls while bits of broken glass captured points of light on the floor. Students, slightly frazzled, scrambled in after the deer was removed to gather their books and notes — now blood-stained — and left class for the day.

"It was a lot bloodier than I thought it would be. It's all over the floors and walls," Verna Regier, junior in political science, said. "My heart is still pounding."

Wild animals on campus are not a rare occurrence. Foxes can occasionally be spotted running around the Quinlan Natural Area. Rabbits and squirrels are a part of daily campus life. However, contact with deer remains somewhat rare.

Schrag said this past summer a deer leapt to its death off of the top row of Memorial Stadium.

"When they get scared, they do crazy things," he said.

IRAQ

Despite the United States' refusal to negotiate, Iraq has demanded reduced American presence in the country, both on the weapons inspection teams and in aerial surveillance operations.

But highest on Iraq's wish list is a timeline for an end to stiff economic sanctions — a longtime demand of Hussein.

If there are no breakthroughs during Aziz's New York trip, Iraq has vowed to expel American arms inspectors. The United States, in particular, has insisted there will be no negotiations with Iraq about the inspections.

In Washington, President Clinton reiterated that the United States will not allow any moves that imperil the American surveillance flights, and has stressed that any attack will quickly be met with a counter-attack.

"We will not tolerate his efforts to murder our pilots acting on behalf of the United Nations, under United Nations Security Council resolutions," he said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott said on "Fox News Sunday" that Clinton would have Congress' full support for bombing runs against Iraq.

Britain also hinted that it, too, may line up behind the Clinton administration in the eventuality of military action.

"I have no doubt that as in the past we must stand absolutely firm and absolutely together," Prime Minister Tony Blair wrote to Clinton.

The Iraqi National Congress, a London-based opposition group, said Iraq had put its military units on alert, canceled military leaves and dispersed its tanks into small units, some of them hidden in civilian areas.

There was no confirmation of the report, which the group said came from sources in Baghdad.

Aziz himself has said that Iraqi antiaircraft sites were in a "standby mode."

Iraq for the seventh day Sunday barred inspection teams with Americans from sites in Baghdad, the official Iraqi News Agency reported.

The teams were told they could enter, but only without their American personnel. They refused and left, INA said.

After the teams turned back, a fourth team was recalled to U.N. headquarters before it reached the site it planned to inspect, INA reported.

Iraq insists that the seven American inspectors currently in Baghdad are spies, and that the United States intends to prolong the economic sanctions imposed after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait, which led to the Persian Gulf War.

The sanctions — which ban the sale of oil and bar air travel — cannot be lifted until the U.N. teams certify that Baghdad has complied with U.N. resolutions calling for the elimination of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction.

In Jordan on Sunday, Aziz met Crown Prince Hassan for brief talks at a hotel in the capital, Amman. "We discussed the whole issue and we will talk when I return," Aziz said afterward.

Arab diplomats said the deputy prime minister may propose rescinding Iraq's decision to expel the American inspectors if there is a promise of practical measures to lift U.N. sanctions.

Aziz also has said that Baghdad wants the weapons monitoring teams to better reflect the permanent membership of the Security Council, which consists of the United States, Britain, France, China and Russia.

U.S. National Security Adviser Sandy Berger told Cable News Network that Washington rejects that demand. "Saddam Hussein cannot dictate who the inspectors are. ... That's like the bank robber choosing who are the police."

Goering said this will be a valuable learning experience regardless of the outcome.

"Right now, I am trying to figure out what my strengths and weaknesses are and what I can offer the American Royal by hopefully serving as ambassador," Goering said.

"Personally, I think it will be a great opportunity to reach students and let them know about the opportunities in the agricultural industry," he said.

Mrozek said. "But I think we need to look at what's realistic. What are the real options. What I see as very ominous is I don't see how we get out of very substantial user fees. It really raises the prospect that the longer a student is at the university — the more that student is serious about an education — the higher the bill is going to be than ever before."

Don Roufa, professor of biology, applauded the task force for its accomplishments, but said he thought the real decision was with the state.

"This university is a state facility owned by the state of Kansas," Roufa said.

"And the fundamental question is, does the state of Kansas want a nationally competitive, full-blown research university? We already know we want an excellent university, which means an excellent library, but what does the state of Kansas want?" Roufa said.

Judge orders British au pair freed after reducing conviction

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — A judge freed British au pair Louise Woodward on Monday after reducing her second-degree murder conviction to involuntary manslaughter for the death of an 8-month-old baby in her care.

Superior Court Judge Hiller B. Zobel sentenced Woodward to the 279 days already served, mostly while awaiting trial, instead of the mandatory life without possibility of parole for 15 years that the second-degree murder conviction carried.

"I do not denigrate Matthew Eappen's death nor his family's grief," Zobel said. "I do, however, recognize that mercy is not less than appropriate. It is, in my judgment, time to bring the judicial part of this extraordinary matter to a compassionate conclusion."

Woodward

The prosecution said it would appeal Zobel's decision. The 19-year-old Woodward showed little response, but supporters outside the courtroom and in her home country of England cheered.

"Thank you Judge Zobel — Elton," one sign read, referring to her hometown near Liverpool.

Woodward's attorneys also praised Zobel.

"We have great respect for what he did and the courage he showed today," defense attorney Barry Scheck said. "This has been a very tragic case. Matthew Eappen is dead. Nothing is going to change that. This is a very sad matter for all those concerned."

He said Woodward would remain in Massachusetts pending the state's appeal.

At the sentencing hearing, Woodward addressed the judge briefly, insisting that "I maintain what I said at my last sentencing, that I'm innocent."

Prosecutors, however, had urged the judge to impose a sentence of 15 to 20 years. The maximum sentence for manslaughter is 20 years. There is no statutory minimum.

"The defendant refuses to accept responsibility for killing Matthew Eappen," prosecutor Gerard Leone Jr. said. He said she showed no remorse. Defense lawyer Andrew Good responded that Woodward had the right to maintain her innocence.

The recommended sentence in Massachusetts for involuntary manslaughter is 3 1/3 to five years.

In his 16-page ruling, released Monday, the judge said the evidence compelled him to reduce the verdict.

"I believe that the circumstances in which Defendant acted were characterized by confusion, inexperience, frustration, immaturity and some anger, but not malice (in the legal sense)," the judge wrote.

"After extensive, cool, calm reflection, I am morally certain that allowing this defendant on this evidence to remain convicted on second-degree murder would be a miscarriage of justice," he wrote.

The jury's Oct. 30 verdict — guilty of second-degree murder — stirred emotions on both sides of the Atlantic.

Defense lawyers said Monday they would appeal the manslaughter conviction but would not comment in detail on the judge's decision to reduce the conviction.

Matthew's parents were in seclusion and had no comment about the decision. His paternal grandmother, Achamma Eappen, said Zobel's ruling "still proves she's guilty."

"I guess the judge knows what he's doing, and as long as she pays for what she has done to baby Matthew," she said

Ceremony remembers students

JENNI EVANS
staff reporter

K-State ROTC members honored those students who were killed during the Vietnam War at a small ceremony Monday afternoon.

Cadet Lt. Col. Scott Cohorst and Cadet Col. Joel Bieberle placed a wreath of red and white carnations at the Vietnam Memorial behind All Faiths Chapel.

"The purpose of the ceremony is to honor the K-State students that died in the Vietnam War and all the other veterans who gave their lives for their country," Cohorst said.

The ceremony was brief but solemn as about 20 students gathered to pay their respects.

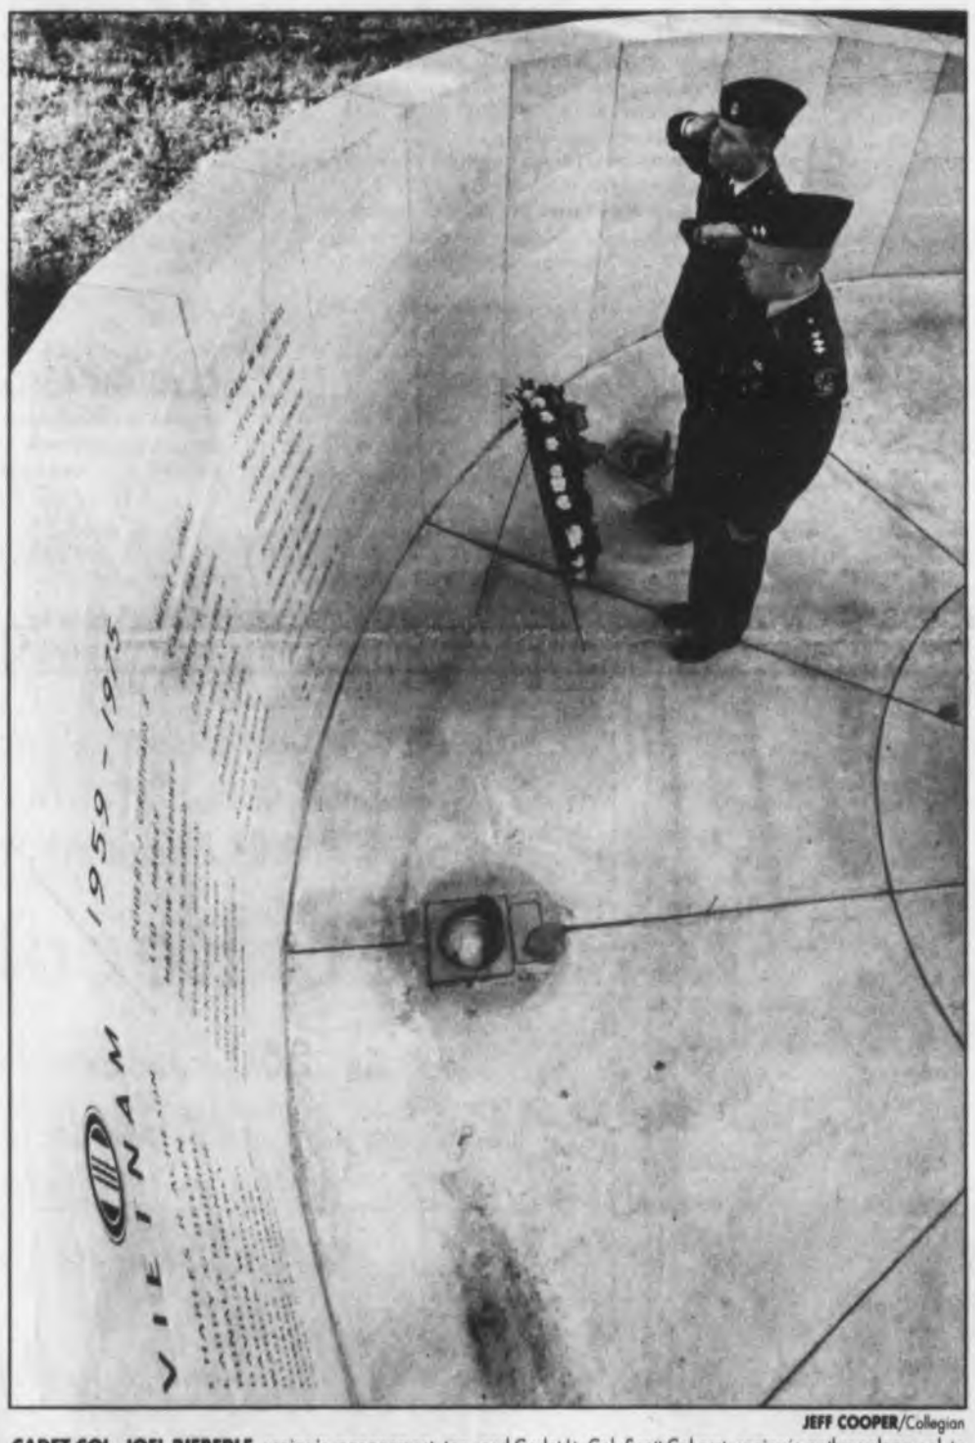
The memorial honors 42 K-State students whose lives were lost between 1959 and 1975.

"Without Veterans Day and Memorial Day, we tend to forget about those who have fallen and their contributions to our freedom," said Lt. Col. Bob Kennedy, professor of military science.

ROTC will also participate in a variety of activities throughout Veterans Day.

A pancake feed will be from 6 to 9 a.m. at the VFW.

After the pancake feed, the Veterans Day parade will begin at 10 a.m., moving from City Park to the Manhattan Town Center down Poyntz Avenue.



Sixteen Army cadets and 10 Air Force cadets from K-State will march in the parade. Other cadets will drive vehicles.

Immediately following the parade, a patriotic concert will be at 10:45 a.m. in front of the Riley County Courthouse.

A commemorative program will feature speaker Maj. Gen. Joseph Robles Jr. at 11 a.m. at the Wareham Opera House.

The Veterans Day Reception will begin at 5 p.m. at the Wareham Opera House and will feature hors d'oeuvres and entertainment.

"This gives us a chance to honor those men and women who have served their country either in war or in uniform, and it's a chance for us to remember the contributions that they have given our country," Kennedy said.

JEFF COOPER/Collegian

CADET COL. JOEL BIEBERLE, senior in management, top, and Cadet Lt. Col. Scott Cohorst, senior in anthropology, salute during a ceremony at the Vietnam Memorial behind Danforth Chapel. "The purpose of the ceremony is to honor the K-State students that died in the Vietnam War and all the other veterans who gave their lives for their country," Cohorst said.

Dedication planned for veterans memorial on Statehouse grounds

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Kansas military veterans finally will have a memorial on the Statehouse grounds.

The Veterans Memorial and Walk was set for dedication on the south side of the Capitol grounds.

Among those scheduled to attend were Gov. Bill Graves and U.S. Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan.

"This pays tribute to those who served, are serving or will serve and those who lost their lives in the defense of our country," Charles Yunker, state adjutant for the Kansas American Legion, said Monday.

The long walkway, with an 8-foot granite obelisk in the center, marks the first statewide monument for Kansas veterans since the turn of the century when a building was dedicated to Union solders, Yunker said.

The Memorial Building is a few minutes' walk to the southeast from the Statehouse.

"There are all sorts of city and county memorials, but this will be the first statewide memorial to all veterans," Yunker said.

One side of the obelisk notes: "May their sacrifices serve as a reminder of the duties, responsibilities and obligations of every citizen of our great state and nation."

The walkway is near the group of Freedom Trees, planted during the mid-1970s to honor prisoners of war and those missing in action during the Vietnam War.

Yunker said plans first called for the monument to be crafted from limestone, similar to the Medal of Honor monument for Kansans at Valley Forge, Pa.

However, he said that granite will last longer and will blend better with the Statehouse steps at one end of the walkway.

The walkway will include two large flower beds and two smaller flower beds on either side of the obelisk.

Yunker said the push to raise $95,000 in private donations began in 1992 and the Legislature agreed in 1994 to allow the memorial on the Statehouse grounds. Construction began in September.

Board approves check-cashing fee in K-State Union

LAURA POPE
staff reporter

A 75-cent check-cashing fee for the Commerce Bank in the K-State Student Union was approved by the Union Governing Board by a 7-1-2 vote Monday.

Beginning Jan. 1, the fee will affect all students who wish to cash a check who do not have a Commerce Bank account.

"I have a real problem with the direction that the Union is going in," Wendy Strevey-Tien, UGB vice president and the only member who voted against the measure, said. "I was the only one who voted against it, and I think the whole student body has a problem with the check-cashing fee."

Bernard Pitts, Union director, said less than 10 percent of the operating budget for the Union is supported by student fees.

"This suggests that revenue has to be produced," Pitts said. "A bulk of our money comes from user fees. We offer $9 million worth of services, and the students are getting them for $1 million."

Several members said students are still getting a good deal because it will cost less to cash a check than to get money from one of the ATMs.

"We have three options here," Matt Jones, UGB student member, said. "There are two other banks that have ATMs in the Union. If you bank there, you don't have to pay to use them."

Tracey Mann, Student Senate vice chair, said he and many other students feel like they are being "nickled and dimed to death."

"We would like the check-cashing fee to be free or nearly free," Mann said.

Mann said he plans to make it an issue and said Senate will be discussing it in a future meeting.

Woman brutally killed; no suspects in custody

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARASOTA, Fla. — A 13-year-old girl described the scene in a frantic call to 911: her mother's body in a pool of blood. The woman's quadruplet toddlers crawling nearby, unharmed, each wearing a life vest.

"My mom is dead," the sobbing girl told the dispatcher as one of the toddlers wailed in the background. "There's blood from the laundry room all the way to. ... Oh my God, who would do this?"

Investigators had no suspects in the slaying Friday of 35-year-old Sheila Bellush, who had moved to Sarasota from Texas with her husband and children a little more than a month ago.

She apparently knew her killer, they said. There was no evidence of a break-in.

"It was a very bloody, horrendous scene, especially with those toddlers in there running around," Sarasota sheriff's Lt. William Stookey said.

The 23-month-old quadruplets were wearing life jackets, perhaps because their mother was preparing them for a swim in the backyard pool. Authorities said it also was possible the killer outfitted them to make sure they didn't wander into trouble.

Police would not release a cause of death and gave no other details of the investigation.

Detectives traveled Monday to San Antonio to interview Bellush's ex-husband, Allen Blackthorne, and released a composite sketch of a young man who had asked directions at a gasoline station to the street where the Bellush family lived.

Bellush, husband James and the children moved to Florida from San Antonio, where the 1995 birth of the quadruplets transformed them into local celebrities.

Bellush's lawyer, Ken Nunley, said the family had moved to escape mounting pressures, including fighting allegations of abuse involving a 12-year-old daughter, raising the quadruplets and coping with intense media scrutiny.

"They moved to Florida to get the hell out of San Antonio," he told the St. Petersburg Times. "Everyone thought it was a good idea for the children. Get away from reporters. Start over."

Stevie, her 13-year-old daughter from a previous marriage, found her mother when she returned from school.

"The kitchen drawer is open," she said on the 911 tape through hysterical sobs. "There's blood all over the phone. This is my mom."

The girl said on the tape, released Saturday, that her mother's throat had been cut. Blood stain patterns showed Bellush might have tried to crawl on the

Greer stays on as Manhattan city manager

DAVID FAIRBANKS

The Manhattan City Commission met in a special executive session Monday evening to discuss Gary D. Greer's future as the city manager of Manhattan.

"We're looking forward to the continued employment of our city manager," Manhattan Mayor Bruce Snead said.

This annual evaluation process was based on a number of city-related goals given to the city manager last December, Greer said. The city manager must see to it that those goals are met.

In October of this year, Greer provided commissioners with the list of goals and an outline explaining how they would be achieved. The commission then evaluated him based on the job he has done.

"We definitely want him to continue on," Snead said. "We're all very satisfied."

Commissioner Steve Hall said there are three options the commission can take when evaluating a city manager. It can discontinue the contract, keep the contract and make no alterations, or decide to keep the contract and make alterations to it based on the quality of the job.

The commission chose the third option, but the alterations have not yet been finalized, Snead said.

From here, Greer will continue as city manager with the contract alterations taking effect on Dec. 1. The City Commission will evaluate Greer again next November.

Equipment fee dies in committee

▶ COMMITTEE DROPS EQUIPMENT FEE, reviews athletic department fee.

SARA BURDETTE

The Student Publication Inc. equipment fee died Monday night because the Privilege Fee Committee voted to withdraw its name from the bill.

Board of Student Publications Chairman Todd Simon said he supported the committee's decision.

"Because they didn't vote for it favorably, I wanted to drop it until we can reach a commitment favorably," Simon said.

The committee voted unfavorably to send the proposal for an additional two years of funding for Student Publications Inc. to the Student Senate floor on Oct. 27.

Simon said he plans to continue to work on a proposal but is in no hurry to get a solution.

"We've gone for seven months already without the money, and if we can make it this long, we can take a little longer to find a solution," Simon said.

In addition, the Privilege Fee Committee reviewed the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics' fee. As of now, the department is operating under the fee passed

Newborn doing well after being found in Disney World toilet

ORLANDO, Fla. — An infant girl dubbed "Princess Jasmine" by nurses was in stable condition Monday, doing well after she was found in a toilet at Walt Disney World over the weekend.

As the newborn dined on formula with other infants at Arnold Palmer Hospital for Children and Women on Sunday, staff fielded calls from people interested in adopting her.

The girl apparently was only minutes old when found Saturday night in a restroom in the Magic Kingdom's Tomorrowland. The baby's head was above the water with the umbilical cord wrapped around her neck.

Dr. Kenneth Goodman of Cleveland had just finished his third ride on Space Mountain when he heard cries for a doctor coming from the restroom.

Investigators were working with local hospitals and hotels to find the mother, who could face charges ranging from child endangerment to attempted homicide if she is found.

A psychologist who works with children's services said the baby's mother was probably a teen-ager who concealed her pregnancy and didn't plan the time and place of birth.

2-month drop in gas prices slowed due to Middle East unrest

LOS ANGELES — The two-month drop in gasoline prices has slowed in the past two weeks because of concern about stability in the Middle East, an industry analyst said.

The average price of gas nationwide, including all grades and taxes, was $1.2614 per gallon on Friday, down seven-tenths of a cent from two weeks earlier, according to the Lundberg Survey of 10,000 stations nationwide.

Prices have dropped since early September because of strong gasoline supplies and lower demand at the end of the summer driving season, Trilby Lundberg said Sunday.

Iraq has threatened to shoot down American U-2 spy planes flying under the United Nations flag. President Clinton said the United States would not tolerate any attacks.

According to the survey, regular gasoline at self-service pumps averaged $1.2079 per gallon, mid-grade was $1.3084 and premium was $1.3908. At full-service pumps, regular averaged $1.5787, mid-grade was $1.6636 and premium was $1.7322.

Topeka Goodyear plant to expand in response to truck-tire demand

TOPEKA — The Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. has announced plans for a $15 million expansion at its Topeka manufacturing plant.

The announcement came Monday from Goodyear's headquarters in Akron, Ohio.

The expansion is a response to growing consumer demand for medium radial truck tires and steel/steel light truck tires, said John C. Orr, vice president of manufacturing for Goodyear's North American Tire region.

"Because of its continuous operations and the manufacturing efficiencies you get from flexible scheduling, Topeka was the best choice to invest capital for this immediate need," Orr said.

Topeka's plant, which began operations in 1945, now covers 3 million square feet and employs about 2,260 people

Parking Services is trying to find a way to help K-State students deal with parking problems on high school senior days.

On senior day, high school seniors from around the state visit K-State to learn more about the university. The problem occurs when the high school students park in areas of Lot D-1 hear West Stadium, which are usually set aside for K-State students.

Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services, said Parking Services has received some negative feedback from K-State students about the problem.

He also said although some students are not happy about the situation, it is one that students must deal with from time to time.

"It's a necessary evil," Abbott said. "If we (K-State) are going to continue to exist, we need students. This is just something we need to do to ensure that K-State remains strong for the future."

Abbott said he does not see any better way around the problem, except to inform K-State students when senior days will be conducted so they can make other plans.

Susan Hanson, assistant director of new student services, said the ideal place for the high school seniors to park would be in Lot A-30 near the K-State Student Union, but it is always full, which means the next option is West Stadium.

"Their (high school students') events are primarily in the Union, so the best solution is the West Stadium lot," Hanson said.

Hanson also said student response to the senior days is normal.

"Fall is a heavy time for campus visits," Hanson said.

Hanson said there haven't been any senior days set up for the spring semester yet, but there are generally fewer senior days during that time.

Art department changes curriculum

ANDREA COREY
staff writer

K-State's Department of Art was overhauled two semesters ago and both students and faculty are seeing the benefits.

Duane Noblett, associate professor in the art department and assistant department head, described the old system as inefficient and cumbersome because students could take core classes at any time during their college careers. He said it was hard to track students' progress because they developed skills in an unorganized fashion.

Students were not familiar with the courses taught in the department.

"They weren't able to get a feeling of the offerings," he said.

Noblett said the way the new curriculum works is not only better for students, but also better for the department.

One change is that most art classes used to be worth two credit hours. Now they are worth three. The art department did this by adding a separate studio time that students can use to work on projects assigned to them during class time.

"It's working very well in that we had to tighten up room usage," he said.

Tightening room use by using studios ensures that students get studio time. Before the studio time was added, students often had to take projects home or find an open classroom or another place to work on them.

> "It's almost worth staying around because there are more classes to take. I think students might also be missing something if they leave."
> junior in graphic design

The extra credit hour added to each class also means that students can get the 24 hours of required credit by taking eight classes. In the past, students had to take 10 two-hour courses and one three-hour drawing course. These classes totaled only 23 hours of credit, and students would often end up taking a one-hour class of independent study of art, Noblett said.

He said this "dangling credit hour" posed problems because professors wanted to help their independent-study students, but didn't always have the time. Some students did fall through the cracks, he said.

With the changes in the department, there are now eight core classes all art students have to take in their freshman and sophomore years. Then they can then advance to classes in their concentration, Noblett said.

Content for numerous classes was also changed and the department is working on making more than the current number of eight areas of concentration.

Besides making the changes for the department, the changes will also help when the school is reviewed for accreditation, which will happen this spring, said Anna Holcombe, associate professor of art and department head.

But for Holcombe, the changes are more about the importance of curriculum.

"I guess I always thought of it as the foundation to any college," she said.

Holcombe came to K-State three years ago, after having worked at the State University of New York in Brockport for 10 years. She said she had always been interested in developing a curriculum there, and continued when she arrived at K-State.

"I think I came in with a fresh eye and saw there were areas that needed improvement," she said.

Ryan Thomas, junior in graphic design, said even though classes are often crowded, the changes in the department seem to be working well.

"It's almost worth staying around because there are more classes to take," he said. "I think students might almost be missing something if they leave."

Iraq asks for hearing before Security Council

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — The United States asked the U.N. Security Council on Monday to condemn Iraq and threaten it with serious consequences unless Baghdad backs down from its refusal to cooperate with Americans on U.N. weapons inspection teams.

Despite the harsh words, the United States appeared more interested in preserving council unity than punishing Iraq.

Russian Ambassador Sergey Lavrov said his government opposes any threat or use of force in the crisis and indicated Iraq's complaints needed to be heard.

The U.S. envoy to the United Nations, Bill Richardson, said the United States opposes Iraq's request for a Security Council hearing to air its grievances. Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz, who made the request, wants to argue Baghdad's case that the Americans are manipulating the U.N. inspection teams.

Arriving for the private council meeting, Richardson said he would ask the 15-member body to adopt a strong resolution to condemn Iraq, demand full compliance with U.N. orders, impose a travel ban on Iraqi officials who interfere with inspections and warn of "serious consequences to follow."

Richardson said if the council refuses, "all bets are go, all options are open."

Significantly, council diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the American proposal did not declare that Iraq had breached the 1991 Gulf War cease-fire — a condition for military action to force compliance.

The council meeting ended after about 2 1/2 hours and there was no indication when a vote would be taken. U.N. officials said they expected it by midweek.

The diplomatic sources said France argued that Baghdad should be given more time to comply with U.N. orders before the council adopts punitive measures.

They said U.S. and British diplomats were working Monday night on a draft resolution. Faced with Russian and French objections, the final draft was expected to soften the warning from "serious consequences" to simply "consequences."

Washington is furious at Iraq for refusing to cooperate with American weapons inspectors and threatening to fire on U.S.-piloted U-2 surveillance planes flying U.N. missions.

France, China and Russia have joined Washington in demanding that President Saddam Hussein rescind his decision to expel the six American inspectors from Iraq.

A U.S.-British proposal imposing an automatic travel ban failed last month to gain support of five of the 15 council members. But U.S. and British officials were hopeful they would change their minds.

Before the council session, Aziz said Iraq wanted a reduction in the number of Americans in the U.N. Special Commission on Iraq. Iraq also wants a timetable for ending the inspections and lifting economic sanctions imposed after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait, which led to the 1991 Persian Gulf War.

But U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan said the composition of inspection teams is strictly a matter for the United Nations. Richardson said Washington would not accept any reduction in the number of Americans working for the inspection program.

The inspectors are trying to determine whether Iraq has complied with orders issued at the end of the Gulf War to destroy all long-range missiles and weapons of mass destruction. Only then will the council lift the crippling economic sanctions.

At the same time, Iraq turned up the heat surrounding its demand that the United Nations stop using American planes to fly aerial surveillance missions over its territory. A U.S.-piloted U-2 flew a mission Monday despite Iraq's threat to fire on it.

In a letter to Annan, Iraqi Foreign Minister Mohammed Said al-Sahhaf said his government no longer considered American U-2 flights part of the U.N. inspection program and would respond to future missions "in a manner that preserves Iraq's sovereignty and security."

Veteran's Day a time to remember those who served

Today is Veteran's Day, also called Remembrance Day. This day was created to remember the end of World War I. On the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month, all the treaties were signed and the war was officially declared at an end.

Even though every war is fought with the intention of being the last, we know that realistically this is not true, even though we try. As more veterans fight and die, this day has been used to honor all of those people who have given their lives in the service of their country.

Some people feel that those who lay down their lives during a war in a far-off land are not making much of a sacrifice. Whether the war is right or just is not the issue. The fact is that they agreed to go so that others could stay.

K-State and Manhattan have many close ties to the military. We live close to a military base. Many students are in ROTC. On a more personal level, many of us are the children, grandchildren and students of veterans. Take a moment to remember what they did.

There will be many ceremonies and events today on campus and in town to honor veterans. By showing up, you will be telling them that you recognize what the veterans did and appreciate the sacrifice.

Stop by the Vietnam veteran's memorial behind All Faiths Chapel and consider the fact that most of the names listed there belong to college students just like us. These were people our age, who probably liked to do the same things we do now. Consider the bravery it took to go to a country far away to do what they felt was the right thing.

No matter how you feel about war, remember that wars are created by politicians but fought by people. Giving a life in the service of your country is always honorable and should be remembered that way.

Privilege fees, lack of money not a problem with huge tax base

VIEWPOINT

JON KURCHE

Annoyed.

That's what this whole privilege fee/library/stadium/voting thing makes me. I'm frustrated because there's no money, I'm frustrated that the library improvements just glossed over a bad situation, and I'm frustrated because I went to Texas last weekend.

You see, in Texas things are different.

Texas is big. The signs don't lie. Don't mess with Texas — they'll put you in the barbecue sauce. The Cowboys, the Longhorns, the Alamo, television's "Dallas," riding off into the sunset, Pancho Villa, confederates, carpetbaggers, mesquite, oil and of course, George Bush — all of these attest to the hugeness of Texas. It's the old west, gun slinging, cattle roping, argy-bargy we were all accustomed to in John Wayne or Clint Eastwood movies.

It's football.

Texas is crazy about football. I'm serious. It's legal to kill people if they openly criticize the Cowboys. That's why the state executes so many people every year.

JUDGE: Steven Jones, you have been accused of reckless public ridicule of Barry Switzer. How do you plead?

DEFENDANT: What are you talking about?

JUDGE: Sir, this is a very heinous offense. I suggest you take it seriously.

DEFENDANT: But I haven't done anything.

JUDGE: Sir, you are trying my patience. Did you say that Barry Switzer was NOT the winningest coach of all time during his college coaching career?

DEFENDANT: He isn't.

JUDGE: Blasphemy!

DEFENDANT: It's true! Knute Rockne of Notre Dame is above Switzer with an 88.1-percent college winning average.

JUDGE: Sir, in Texas we don't care about the truth. We care about football. I sentence you to death by being forced to watch "Growing Pains" reruns.

DEFENDANT: Noooo!

That's the way it is in Texas. Really.

I went to Lubbock, Texas, for the Wildcats, but I left thinking Texas Tech had put on a pretty good show. It wasn't its football team that impressed me, though. It was the atmosphere.

At Texas Tech, large crowds of people followed the band into the stadium before they allowed themselves to be seated. At Texas Tech, everyone knew the school fight song (ours goes, "... so fight, you K-State Wildcats, For alma mater fight ..."). At Texas Tech, they rode a horse around the field in celebration. (We have a bigger agriculture school, so I'm sure we can do better — maybe someone can find an actual wildcat to bring. It could eat the other mascots. Cool.) At Texas Tech, all the band, color guard, cheerleaders and baton people marched onto the field simultaneously. They shot guns. They cheered in unison. It gave me chills.

I would like to see the same thing happen here at K-State. I would like to see the band lead everyone in spirit. I would like to see everyone cheering in unison. I would like to see Skyhooks from Fort Riley land on the field at the climax of the opening routine. I would like to see them shoot off the big Howitzers every time we score a touchdown. The crowd needs to get pumped. They need to get obnoxious. We are the 12th man, right?

I would like to see the stadium expanded. By whatever means possible. I would rather pay $5 more per ticket than $2 a credit hour, though.

Unfortunately, I would also like to see the library do better. I would like to pay for their improvement. I think research is critical to any place claiming to be an academic institution.

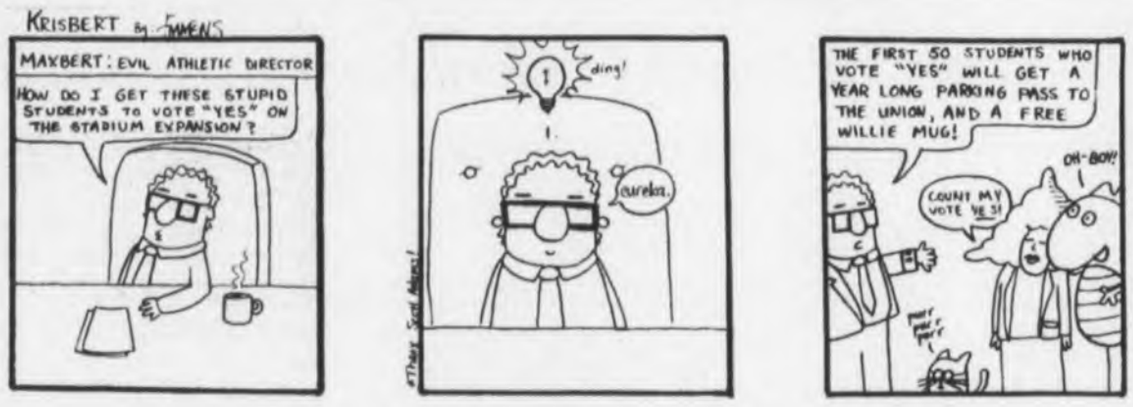
So what do I do?

I'm not sure I want to choose, especially when everyone makes it sound like an all-or-nothing deal.

The problem is that, in Kansas, we want to keep costs down, we want to keep academics high, we want to offer all kinds of services, we want to cater to all tastes by running six public universities and we have a tax base a fraction of the size of other states in the Big 12 — like Texas.

Perhaps it's time for some downsizing. We need to cater to our representative population. Let's face it, we are a smaller state school — albeit one of the best — in a smaller state.

We need to fashion ourselves to maintain good quality in academics and athletics. Quantity shouldn't be our priority right now. I don't think we pay our faculty enough as it is, and I don't think we need to overextend ourselves.



How about a 10-year revision/fund-raising period where Student Senate could hear grievances, followed by a three-year building period, hmm? Take time to evaluate, then build big?

A small credit-hour fee increase ($3) is acceptable to me if it keeps us from paying more down the line. Combine it with money from other sources, and there's no reason we couldn't be the best in the Big 12 for our size, but we need to get at the roots of the problem.

I want all university presidents to hold a conference over the rising cost of journals.

I want the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics to plan for any contingency and then build a stadium that won't need to be expanded for a long, long time.

That's what Knute Rockne would do, anyway — most winning coach.

JUST SAY NO to Mad Max

It was perhaps inevitable, given the comeback of our football program in the past decade.

Max Urick, director of the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics — or "Mad Max," as he is called by his detractors — wants students to fund an expansion to the football stadium through a privilege fee.

The reason usually cited is that ticket sales cannot legally be used to pay off the revenue bonds that would have to finance this construction. However, Urick has not explained why money is not available from other, even more reliable sources to amortize these bonds, such as the state Legislature or the city of Manhattan.

VIEWPOINT

JONATHAN WINKLER

JONATHAN WINKLER is a senior in physics. You can send e-mail to Jonathan at jnw@ksu.edu.

Instead he has requested from the Student Governing Association a flat-fee increase of either 50 cents or a dollar per-credit-hour with a promise to hold student ticket prices stable.

He must think SGA is exceptionally credulous to have come to it with a fee increase to pay for something that most students won't be able to use during their college career and that does not contribute to the university's educational mission.

If the proposal is approved by the student body — and that means you, voters — then students coming to school today, and staying for perhaps five years to finish an undergraduate degree, will be required to pay off something that will last many times longer and that they will probably not use at all once they leave school.

Furthermore, the football stadium is used by the students (and the public at large) only when there is a football game in town. This occurs at most seven times in the fall — the library is open 16 hours a day and classes are in session five days a week.

The stadium expansion ought to be paid for by the people who will derive benefits from it after it is completed. The Manhattan business community already benefits from tourism revenue when people come into town to watch a home game. More seats in the stadium means more people who spend money here. So why aren't Manhattan businesses offering to finance what is, after all, a paying investment for them?

The same argument applies, albeit with less force, to the state at large when an out-of-state university plays here. The Legislature ought to chip in a little money too.

More importantly, the student body should not be asked to pay for or even to underwrite bonds for stadium construction when there are pressing needs (such as a more realistic acquisitions budget for our library) that directly affect the university's ability to educate people.

The library is so short of books that a friend of mine who wrote an undergraduate honors thesis on the Shroud of Turin had to order most of her sources through interlibrary loan — including quite a few from (gasp) the Wichita Public Library.

Many departments on campus are also desperately short-staffed as a result of a hiring freeze that the provost has imposed to divert money for needed infrastructure improvements.

The Department of Math recently complained that being required to cut its periodicals was like being asked to commit suicide en masse, and it may as well have literally done just that for all the people it has now to teach courses.

So we must reject any variant of Urick's plan that requires students to contribute money to a stadium expansion unless these other needs are met first. They have to do with education rather than athletics, and their fulfillment will benefit students who are here now to learn rather than students who are here later to watch games.

Except with regard to these other necessities, SGA should be tighter with the students' money than a tree is with its bark.

On Nov. 17 and 18 — just say no to Mad Max.

Student upset after being misidentified in Collegian

Editor,

I would like to express my appreciation to the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee for organizing this year's College Bowl Competition. I thought it was very well-run and fairly judged.

I would also like to comment on the participation or, more appropriately, lack thereof. Only eight teams were fielded this year (one of which didn't even show up) as opposed to last year's 12 teams. In a student population upward of 20,000, I think this is a very poor showing.

As to Corbin Crable's rather misleading and sometimes misinformed review of the tournament, I would encourage him to take better notes when conducting interviews. My major is microbiology, not biology, as stated in the article. There is a difference.

This would normally not have bothered me, but seeing as how another participant's major was correctly quoted in the article as microbiology and that I repeated my major to Crable at least three times, I think my concern is well-founded.

Finally, I would like to acknowledge the outstanding performance of my fellow team members who composed Four Jerks and a Squirt and whose names were never mentioned in the article: Alex Stucky, Will Hageman and Marshall Moluf. These guys rule.

Reader offers suggestions to stadium/library dilemmas

Editor,

There are two big money concerns on campus: 1. A need for money to expand the football stadium, and 2. a lack of funds for books and journals to place in our new, but empty, library.

One of the proposed solutions to the first problem is to have all students pay even more money, on top of what we already pay for tuition and student-activity fees. Personally, I think the university should find some very rich, football-crazed patrons to pay for all the stadium expansion, on the condition the new stadium be named after them like it did for the new library and art museum.

My solution to the second problem is, if it is legitimate to ask all students to pay for the stadium expansion, then it is equally legitimate to ask all those who go to the football games to help contribute to a library fund.

I figure with 39,200 seats currently at the stadium, an extra buck or two for student tickets and an extra $5 for non-students could help out quite a bit in filling up our new library.

CD-ROM teaching leaves students confused, irritated

Editor,

There is a serious problem with the structure of the Introduction to Personal Computing class at K-State that only a few people are aware of. As technology changes, the classroom changes. But sometimes these changes are for the worse.

CIS 190, which used to be known as CIS 110, has undergone many changes this semester. The traditional form of teaching has been replaced with multimedia teaching. Classes are taught through CD-ROM, which have completely replaced teachers.

This type of impersonal teaching is leaving students confused and unmotivated to learn. Electronic media should be used as an extension of teaching, not used as a replacement for faculty members and their expertise.

The K-State administration has forgotten the priceless interaction between the teacher and the student in its attempt to advance K-State into the next century.

We are not asking for a complete return to the old CIS 110 class, but a combination of the two, where technology and teaching assist students in learning.

Manhattan would benefit from stadium expansion

Editor,

On the issue concerning the expansion of KSU Stadium, I feel we as a university would greatly benefit from such an expansion.

Not only would it provide more student seating,but it also would provide public seating. The public seating will bring in a lot of revenue to the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, which is split among all sports at K-State.

More seating will bring more people into Manhattan on game days, thus increasing the money spent at local stores. That money is then taxed and allotted back to the university through government programs. The money that comes back to the university benefits all students.

The expansion is a great way to show the team we're behind it. I feel we should vote yes on the referendum and help the university as a whole.

Council to consider sorority grade-point requirements

COLE EHMKE

Panhellenic Council, the governing body of K-State's sororities, will consider establishing grade point average requirements for sororities as it amends its bylaws.

The change establishes a cumulative GPA requirement of 2.4 on the four-point scale, which must be maintained every semester by sororities. If a sorority's average GPA falls below 2.4, it would have to write a scholarship program to improve grades that must be presented to Panhellenic's executive council for approval.

If the GPA doesn't improve for a second semester, the sorority's executive committee would have a hearing before Panhellenic's executive council. The sorority would state why no improvement has been made and outline a plan to improve.

"If a problem did arise, then we would have a way to address it," Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said.

Jennifer Gorman, Panhellenic president, said the measure was mainly preventative because sororities have never needed a minimum GPA.

"No house has ever really been close to this," Gorman said.

The average GPA for all sororities is between 3.0 and 3.1, Robel said.

Interfraternity Council, the governing body of K-State's fraternities, already has a 2.2 GPA requirement. The average fraternity GPA is 2.9, Robel said.

Another suggested change is to allow new sorority members to run for officer positions in Panhellenic. With the change, a new member in the spring semester could run in the fall semester, Robel said.

Officer selection occurs in March or April of each year. Robel said the change would allow more people to participate because only active members run and new members have to

Supreme Court rejects strip-search case

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Two Alabama girls who say they were forced to submit to strip-searches after a second-grade classmate accused them of stealing $7 lost a Supreme Court appeal Monday.

The justices, without comment, turned away the girls' argument that their constitutional protection against unreasonable searches had been violated.

The girls were both 8 years old when the incidents allegedly occurred in 1992.

Lower courts ruled that the teacher and guidance counselor who allegedly conducted the strip-searches were immune from being sued because strip-searching 8-year-old students was not clearly unconstitutional five years ago.

Educators still have no clear-cut policy on student searches, said Birmingham lawyer Valerie T. Kisor, who represented the teacher and guidance counselor. "I represent a lot of school systems, and the bottom line is they are terrified about what is allowable," she said.

The girls' attorney, Devarieste Curry of Washington, said the effect of the high court's action is that children are left without protection.

"Do we wait until there's further abuse?" asked Curry, who represented the girls and their parents along with lawyers from the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

Both girls are black. The classmate who accused them of stealing and the educators who allegedly strip-searched them are white.

Monday's Supreme Court action, although not a precedent-setting decision, left intact the lower court rulings in the Alabama case.

In other matters, the court:

•Left to a federal judge in Detroit, all lawsuits nationwide against Dow Corning about alleged health problems caused by silicone breast implants. Dow Corning, based in Midland, Mich., sought the consolidation to better manage the complaints about leaky implants.

•Turned down a request for the removal of a Texas federal judge presiding over a lawsuit by Branch Davidian cult members against the government stemming from the fiery end to their 1993 standoff. The cult members said the judge was biased.

In the strip-searches case, Cassandra Jenkins and Oneika McKenzie were second-graders at Graham Elementary School in Talladega, Ala., when, on May 1, 1992, one of their classmates told the teacher that $7 had been taken from her purse.

Other students accused Cassandra and Oneika of stealing the money.

After searching for but not finding the money in Oneika's backpack, their teacher took the girls outside the classroom to question them.

Another teacher, Susannah Herring, came by and took charge of the questioning. She and Melba Sirmon, a school guidance counselor whose office was nearby, took the girls to a restroom where, the girls say, Herring told them to remove their clothes.

The girls' lawsuit says they complied with an order to undress in separate toilet stalls and to come out with their underpants down to their ankles. A second strip-search of each girl allegedly was conducted a short time later. No money was found.

The Talladega school board investigated the incidents and concluded that the girls had not been strip-searched. A subsequent investigation by the Office of Civil Rights also concluded there was insufficient evidence of strip-searches.

The girls' parents sued Herring and Sirmon, but U.S. District Judge Robert Propst threw out the case.

The 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the dismissal by an 8-3 vote in June, ruling that the alleged strip-searches would not have been clearly unconstitutional in 1992.

The appeals court took into account the Supreme Court's 1985 ruling in a New Jersey case that said the Constitution's Fourth Amendment right against unreasonable searches applies to searches conducted by school authorities.

In that decision, the justices said such searches must be "reasonably related in scope to the circumstances which justified the interference in the first place."

Pauline prepares Mexico for Hurricane Rick's wrath

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PUERTO ESCONDIDO, Mexico — Hurricane Rick walloped Mexico's southern coast, an area still hurting from last month's visit by Hurricane Pauline. But residents learned their lesson, and this time they were prepared.

Mindful of the extraordinary force of Pauline, villagers who greeted that storm with cynicism, fled to sturdy houses on high ground for Rick's arrival Sunday evening and stayed away from the banks of rivers.

And while Pauline killed at least 230 people in its charge up the coastline, not a single death was reported in Rick's romp.

It also helped that Rick, a Category 1 hurricane, was not nearly as strong as Pauline, a Category 4 — the second-most severe level and the same as Hurricane Andrew, which hit south Florida in 1992.

"It wasn't that bad this time because we were prepared," Floselo Palomec Antonio, 37, said Monday as he made the rounds in Puerto Escondido selling mescal, a harsh cactus-based liquor.

"We picked up experience with Pauline," Palomec said. "This time people weren't caught asleep on the sides of the rivers."

Hurricane Rick reached Oaxaca's coast Sunday evening, washing out roads, toppling trees, destroying crops and picking apart flimsy homes.

By Monday, it was downgraded to a tropical storm, then to a tropical depression as it moved inland over the neighboring southern state of Chiapas.

The Pacific hurricane season in Mexico has been particularly intense this year, which some blame on El Niño, a weather pattern that creates droughts in some areas while generating heavier-than-normal rain in others.

Chiapas officials nervously watched for signs of flooding along the coast and in upland river valleys, already saturated by three previous storms. In the coastal town of Arriaga, officials reported uninterrupted rains since late Sunday.

Officials evacuated some families living near rising rivers in the town of Tuxtla Gutierrez early Monday, Civil Protection spokesman Alfredo Chan said.

At its strongest, Rick's 85-mph winds were much weaker than Pauline's 115-mph winds, which battered the same stretch of the Oaxacan coast on Oct. 8 and inflicted widespread destruction before moving northwest to Acapulco and unleashing deadly flash floods.

But Rick was still a powerful storm, and many here believe the toll would have been much worse had people been caught off guard.

Few had been ready for Pauline. Hours before Pauline whipped into this coastline, many people had doubted it would arrive at all, citing numerous hurricane warnings over the years that had amounted to nothing.

But having seen Pauline's destruction, nobody wrote off Rick.

"The other one took us by surprise," said Salomon Ramirez, a 44-year-old farmer in the nearby village of La Zulillo. "But we were waiting for Rick's arrival for a day."

In some places, Rick hit harder than Pauline did. In the village of El Tomatal, 10 miles southeast of Puerto Escondido, Fiesta or Cotton? Yes, but in 1998 stakes will rise

Fiesta or Cotton?

That's the only element of surprise left in this season, which will be the first 11-1 finish in K-State history.

It's been that way since the Wildcats embarrassed Texas A&M earlier this season.

Oklahoma? Whatever.

Texas Tech? Mild scare.

Kansas? Iowa State? There's a couple punch lines for you.

Colorado? Yeah, it's good this year. Almost as good as Texas.

A second-consecutive Cotton Bowl appearance wouldn't be too bad. An invitation to the Fiesta Bowl, an Alliance Bowl, would be even better.

VIEWPOINT

SAM FELSENFELD

SAM FELSENFELD is a senior in print journalism. You can send your e-mail to Sam at sef8701@ksu.edu

But last Saturday, for about 10 minutes, I started thinking about making my travel plans to the Orange Bowl.

That's right. K-State was one kicked ball away from battling Tennessee for the national championship. Nebraska ended up winning Saturday, so the Cats will have to wait until next year (but not until 1999) to finish the season No. 1.

Most people who listen to my theory think I'm crazy.

But I'm a pretty smart guy, and I've never been wrong before.

Here's how K-State almost won the national championship on Saturday:

Like I said, the Cats were one kicked ball away from winning it all.

For those of you who went to Mars this weekend, Nebraska scored a touchdown on a pass that was accidentally kicked into a receiver's hands as time expired in regulation, forcing overtime at Missouri.

The Cornhuskers eventually won, erasing the brief title hopes for the Cats.

But a Nebraska loss would have put us into the Orange Bowl.

We will beat Colorado this weekend. For lack of a better non-profane word, the Buffaloes are quite poor this season. The Buffs stand a chance Saturday, but only if they're allowed to use 12 players and we're forced to drop to 10. It would still be a good game, though.

With the loss, Colorado drops to 5-5 with only a home game against Nebraska remaining. With two weeks to prepare, and a win necessary to qualify for a bowl game, Colorado pulls it out.

If Nebraska would have lost to Missouri, then the loss to the Buffs would give the Huskers two defeats in Big 12 Conference play.

K-State, with one loss, advances to the Big 12 title game. There the Cats would meet Texas A&M. They beat the Aggies 36-17 earlier this season, and if you ignore two bad turnovers, it's more like a 36-3 or 43-3 victory.

The second time through, however, Texas A&M is a little better prepared, and it shows. But so are the Cats — no turnovers. K-State 36, Aggies 6.

With the Big 12 Championship, K-State receives an automatic Alliance bid. The other schools receiving automatic Alliance bids are the Big East champion, SEC champion and ACC champion.

The Big East champion — Virginia Tech, Syracuse or West Virginia — will have at least two losses and be out of the running for the national title.

Florida State, the ACC champion, will lose to Florida because that would be what's best for the Cats, and that's what I want to happen. The late-season loss drops the Seminoles behind us in the polls.

That leaves K-State and Tennessee, the SEC champion, for the Orange Bowl, because the at-large spots will go to teams that didn't finish first in their respective conferences, and therefore have no shot at the national title.

Michigan will go into the Rose Bowl undefeated and No. 1, but it will lose because that would be what's best for the Cats, and that's what I want to happen.

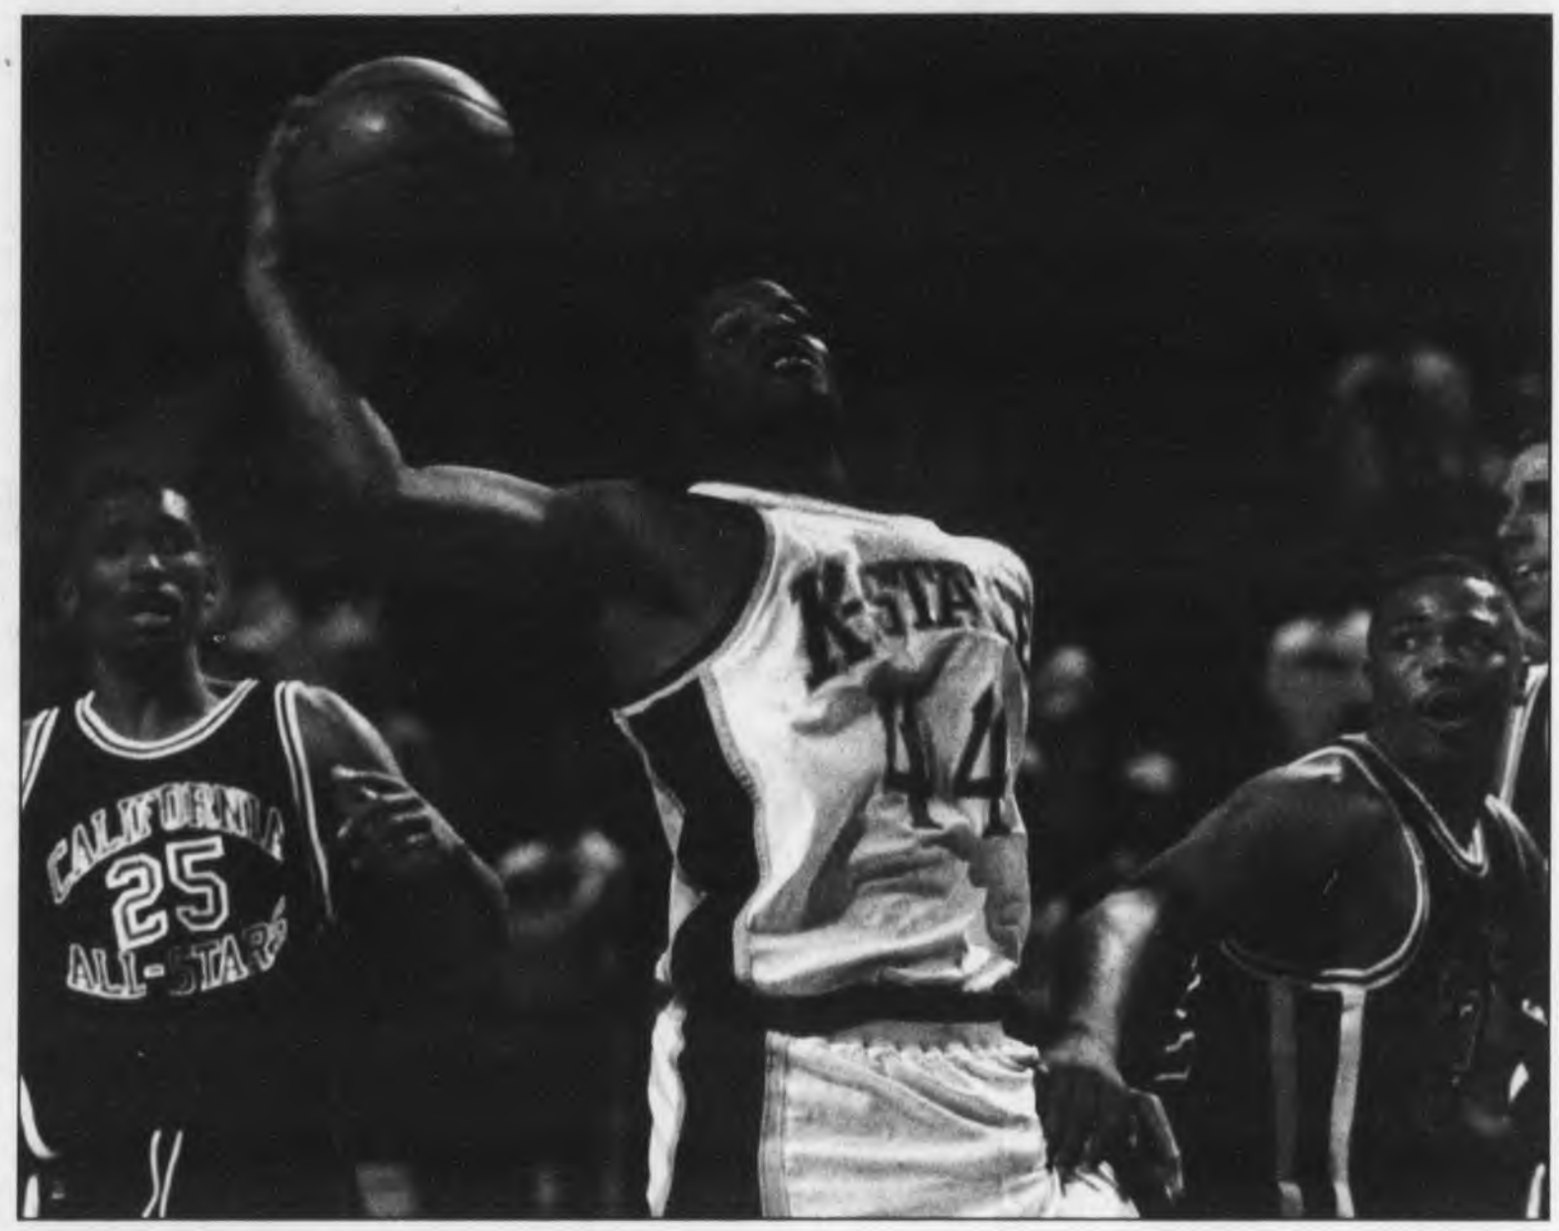
That makes the game between K-State and Tennessee the deciding factor for the national championship. Cats defensive end Darren Howard sacks Peyton Manning hard, six times in the first quarter, knocking him out of the game.

K-State rolls, 38-21.

But Nebraska won, behind the kicked ball, so now it will be Fiesta or Cotton.

No Oranges.

But either way, the Cats gain a respectable win and finish the season in the top five. K-State will beat the Big East champion if it makes it to the Fiesta Bowl, or the Cats will beat the Pacific 10 runner-up — UCLA, Washington State, Arizona State or Washington — in the Cotton Bowl. Either way, it's a huge win for K-State, the hugest in school history.



Even without winning the national title, K-State will easily finish in the top five. All the sportswriters voting in next year's preseason polls will know that K-State will only lose four starters this season and the Cats will start the year in the top 10.

They'll beat Texas and Colorado early in the season, and they don't meet Nebraska until the Huskers come to Manhattan in November. K-State will be undefeated and ranked in the top three.

And let me be the first to say ...

Michael Bishop. Heisman Trophy candidate.

Cats improve work on glass, win exhibition finale 97-89

JOEL WHITE
staff writer

The Wildcats survived a barrage of late second-half three-pointers after keeping a large lead over the California All-Stars to escape their final exhibition game with a 97-89 victory.

"We were down there and executing on offense, but they'd go down and hit a three on us," Coach Tom Asbury said.

The All-Stars' Kamau Alexander hit a three-point shot to make the score 77-67 with six minutes left in the game. He then hit another three-point shot at the five-minute mark after two free throws from Cat forward Ty Sims. The shot cut the Cats' lead to single digits for the first time since two minutes, eleven seconds to go in the first half.

Sims scored again off Cat guard Chris Griffin's assist, but Alexander reeled off another three-point shot, cutting the Cats' lead to eight.

The teams then traded baskets until the All-Stars Gimell Martinez made a three-point shot with 2:45 left to play, making the score 85-78.

Martinez and Billy Dreher each hit two three-pointers in the final 2:45, and they put the Cats at the free-throw line several times in that time period.

The Cats iced the game at the free-throw line, making 12 of 14 free throws in the final 2:30. Senior guard Aaron Swartzendruber went six for six from the line down the stretch.

"I wasn't pleased with how we finished the game defensively," Asbury said. "But it started to come together better tonight."

Junior guard Ayome May led the Cats with 23 points and 10 rebounds. He made 10-of-12 shots from the field, including two-of-two from the three-point line.

Junior forward Ty Sims had a strong performance in the front court with 14 points, all coming in the second half.

Joining May and Sims in double-figure scoring was Swartzendruber (19), freshman guard Adam Lopez (13), and junior forward Shawn Rhodes (10).

Lopez, who played at point guard for 12 minutes, said he felt more comfortable than he did Friday night.

"I was a lot more relaxed tonight," he said. "I didn't have the jitters this time."

With Cat guards Duane Davis, Lopez and Griffin at the point, Swartzendruber said he was able to shoot the ball more effectively at the off-guard position.

"I felt a little more comfortable out there," Swartzendruber said. "The pressure is off me now at the point, although I can still play it."

The Cats started the game strongly, with an 18-4 run in a five-minute span.

Sophomore guard Josh Reid, who was hampered by the flu, started the run with a three-point shot three minutes into the game. May, senior forward Marcus McCollough, sophomore forward David Ries and Swartzendruber all scored in the run which was capped off by Ries to Cat forward Jay Heidrick for a slam dunk.

The Cats led 47-34 at halftime.

The All-Stars' Tyrone Davis, former Wildcat, scored six points and had five rebounds in the game.

"I wish I could have done better in front of the home crowd," he said.

New seasons bring new players to new teams. This year's Wildcat basketball team brought a man from the North to what he calls "paradise."

"Believe me, it's 10 times colder in North Dakota than it is here," community college transfer forward Ty Sims said. "This place is paradise compared to North Dakota. I thought there'd be palm trees in Kansas."

No palm trees, Ty, but the Big 12 court has players as tall as trees. Coach Tom Asbury said Sims is undersized for this league, but can have success based on his attitude.

"Ty was real solid tonight," Asbury said. "He showed why we recruited him. He is undersized, but like a lot of guys who've had success in this conference, he's played himself into playing time."

In the first half against the California All-Stars, Sims had one defensive rebound and one steal in 10 minutes of play. Sims attributed it to the type of offense K-State ran the first half.

"In the first half, we ran early offense," Sims said. "I'm not really comfortable with it yet."

But in the first few minutes of the second half, Sims stepped up and put six points on the board. For the game, Sims was five-of-nine in field-goals and four-of-six in free throws for 14 points, third-highest on the team. He also had four boards to his credit.

Nevertheless, Sims said nerves have affected his playing, and he still has a lot to learn.

"I missed some shots," Sims said. "I air-balled one of them, and I wasn't real pleased about that. I missed the front end of a one-and-one, but that's just settling down and playing ball."

Sims graduated high school at age 17 and wasn't ready for college life just yet. He attended a prep school in Hudson, Ohio, to prepare himself, and walked on to the University of Akron basketball team his first semester.

"We had some intense practices," Sims said. "The team wasn't that good, but we played some great teams. It was helpful to me for what I'll see here."

After an unsatisfying semester at Akron, Sims returned to his home in Minneapolis, Minn., to work and regroup. North Dakota was the furthest thing from his mind until he attended a high school game.

"My high school coach was talking to North Dakota (State College of Science), and I wasn't excited about it at all," Sims said. "I was like, 'What would I want to go to North Dakota for?' But I went for a visit and liked it. Everyone from there has had success in Division I programs."

Now, his hands aren't shaking from the cold. The shakes are just nerves from moving to the big time in the Big 12.

"The first game last week, I was nervous, and my hands were sweating," Sims said. "Since that first game's over, I can just relax and play ball. It's just like regular basketball."

Fitting in is something senior guard Aaron Swartzendruber said Sims will have no problem with, especially after Monday night's performance.

"He looked real comfortable in the second half," Swartzendruber said. "He banged it inside, and that's what we're going to need from him."

Sims looked so comfortable, in fact, that former Cat and All-Stars forward Tyrone Davis was trying to shake him up.

"I was trying to break him in because he had my jersey on (No. 44)," Davis said. "He was making a lot of moves I used to make. I was real impressed with him."

Sims would like people to reserve judgment for a while as he adjusts to the advanced play.

"Division I college basketball is a lot different than junior college," Sims said. "Junior college is a lot like high school. They teach you a lot more here. I'm still adjusting, and trying my best to figure it out."

"THEY TEACH YOU A LOT MORE HERE. I'M STILL ADJUSTING, AND TRYING MY BEST TO FIGURE IT OUT."

K-STATE SPORTS INFORMATION

The K-State women's rowing team posted a 16-9 victory over Kansas in the first fall duel between the two programs. The duel consisted of six races, three varsity races and three novice races. The Wildcats brought home wins in all three varsity matchups.

After a three-hour delay due to foggy conditions at Tuttle Creek Reservoir, K-State got off to a quick start in the novice women's fours with its first victory of the day. K-State's "A" boat posted a five-second victory over Kansas' "B" boat.

The Cats also posted victories in the third novice eights, the second varsity eights and the regatta's lead race, the first varsity eights. Rowing crews are traditionally judged by the strength of their first varsity eight, as that boat will contain a crew's eight best rowers and coxswain. K-State edged Kansas by just less than three seconds in the first varsity eights.

Coach Jenny Hale said she was pleased with the varsity's efforts in the new regatta.

"I thought the varsity executed very well on the water," Hale said. "This regatta is a nice finish to a very successful fall season."

Hale said the progress of K-State's crew program, in just its second year as a varsity-level sport, is encouraging.

"For us to be taking on a program that has varsity programs established for three or four years with our young team bodes well for us this spring," Hale said.

The team will now take the boats and the training inside to prepare for next season.

"We've got a lot of hard indoor work ahead of us this winter," Hale said. "This team is performing with a great deal of maturity for their level of experience, and that bodes well for us."

Vietnam: Ghosts of the past

Cyclo drivers provide tours of Ho Chi Minh City, sell marijuana to visitors

The cyclo driver told me in his broken English as wheeled me through the congested streets of Ho Chi Minh City, "My government, my people, not care about war no more. Over, in the past. Now, only care about money. Business."

After all the bloodshed, turmoil and pain both Vietnam and the United States endured, I really have to wonder, what was it all for? Was it really necessary for so many to die, in a war to keep Vietnam from being communist? It is a system that 20 years later is eager to have everything money can buy.

Of all the places we're visiting this semester, Vietnam was the most anticipated and dreaded. My generation grew up in the shadow of the Vietnam War. We have seen the movies, heard the horror stories, know a little of what the United States did. We have parents, aunts, uncles or family friends who served in Vietnam. Our folks protested it or supported the war back home. An air of expectation hung over the ship.

When I woke up on the morning of Oct. 18, I looked out my cabin window and saw jungle. Lush, green, virgin jungle as far as the eye could see.

We were steaming up the Saigon River to Ho Chi Minh City, our home for the next six days. Every so often, we'd pass a grass hut along the shore or a family of fishermen in their boats, and we'd be reminded of how untouched by the modern world many of the residents of this nation are.

It was also a testament to the strength of the people of Vietnam, these feisty "primitives" who hold the singular honor of being the only nation on Earth to ever kick the United States' ass, militarily speaking. The people living in these grass huts along the shore might be "undeveloped" by Western standards, but they are incredibly intelligent, resourceful and persistent. The United States learned that the hard way. I can't help but admire them for that.

A couple of hours upstream, we arrived at Ho Chi Minh City. While small when compared with the other ports we've visited thus far, it was obvious that they weren't intending it to stay that way. In another 10 years, this will be just another big Asian city, like Shanghai or Tokyo.

Getting off the boat, though, we learned quickly that this wasn't Japan or China we were dealing with. The signs of a 20-year economic embargo were evident. In the shadow of the glittering new high rises and Pepsi advertisements was a crumbling infrastructure, run-down buildings and an astounding amount of poverty.

Beggars were everywhere we went. I have never encountered such persistence in street hawkers, who would not take no for an answer. Sure that we had vast amounts of wealth in our pockets, they were bound and determined to have a piece of it. But I guess in a country where the average person earns the equivalent of about $100 a month, the small amount of spending money I was carrying around would be a fortune.

Vietnam's economy remains pretty weak when stacked up against the rest of the world's, given the U.S. embargo was only lifted two years ago by President Clinton. When we arrived, the exchange rate was about 11,000 dong to the U.S. dollar, and that 11,000 dong will go a long, long way. I exchanged $100 of U.S. currency when I arrived and received well more than a million dong in exchange. It was kind of neat, being a millionaire for a day.

This is a totally cash-driven society. U.S. dollars are also commonly accepted everywhere, and boy, were the people ever glad to see our dollars coming into the country. Case in point: the cyclo drivers. A westerner can hardly walk a block in Ho Chi Minh City without being offered half a dozen rides in these ubiquitous bicycle-driven rickshaws. They are pretty aggressive about soliciting fares, and try to outdo each other in order to be the lucky one to bicycle around us cash-rich foreigners. These guys look forward all year to the S.S. Universe Explorer docking here, because they know it's a cash bonanza for all of these students to be in town. Their families will eat well in the wake of our arrival.

As many Semester-at-Sea students soon discovered, the cyclo drivers weren't only aggressive about selling rides to us — they also were eager to sell us pot. Walking down the street, I often heard a cyclo driver saying, "Me drive you? No? Me marijuana you?" Pot is both plentiful and cheap in Vietnam - $10 from any cyclo driver for a cigarette pack of 20 filter-tipped joints. They remember what young Americans' tastes are like from back during the war, and were ready for the arrival of 600 rich college students. A substantial number of students spent their evenings in Ho Chi Minh City, riding around in cyclos and smoking dope. A few were even stupid enough to carry their pot back on the ship with them and smoke it there, where they got caught. Semester at Sea has a zero-tolerance policy on drugs, and the guilty were expelled and had to fly back home to the states.

I have to admit I felt pretty guilty about riding in the cyclos myself. I'm a big guy, weighing in at about 130 kilos, and these guys driving us around were thin as rails and looked pretty hungry. It's obviously hard work riding those things around all day. But since it is the best way to see Ho Chi Minh City, I went ahead and did it, and made sure to pay the guy extra for his hard work.

On my third day in port, I decided to experience a little of the history of the war, and hired a car and driver to go to the Cu Chi tunnels about 90 km north of the city. There, I got to crawl around in the famous tunnels that were the source of so much consternation for the U.S. military during the war.

Initially built during the years of Japanese occupation of Indochina during WWII, this extensive network of tunnels, most only a meter high, run for more than 200 km through the region. With hidden entrances that were almost impossible to find, air vents disguised as termite mounds, and riddled with traps of deadly bamboo spikes, the Cu Chi tunnels made an almost impenetrable bunker system from which the Viet Cong held off U.S. forces for years. The U.S. tried to bomb the tunnels during the war, but to little avail. The huge bomb craters made by the armaments dropped from B-52's are still visible in the Cu Chi Park, where visitors come to crawl down into this incredibly complex hive.

On my last day in Ho Chi Minh City, I went to the Museum of War Atrocities, where examples of hundreds of acts of senseless violence committed by Americans on the people of Vietnam were on display in vivid, gruesome detail. Photos of children, their eyes burned out by napalm. Fragmentation grenades full of nail-like projectiles, used on civilians. A display on the birth defects of children, both in Vietnam and the United States, born to parents who had been exposed to Agent Orange. Photos of our G.I.'s, smiling as they proudly display the decapitated heads of executed Viet Cong.

But the exhibit in the museum that moved me the most wasn't the one that contained the displays on atrocities. It was the room that had collected in it examples of the anti-war demonstrations all over the planet. It was overwhelming, the amount of anger the world was directing toward the United States during those difficult years.

The people of Vietnam are incredibly gracious. After all the grief we caused them: a foreign invasion to keep their country from unifying, millions of people dead, millions more maimed for life and economic hardship imposed by a 20-year embargo. They were by far the kindest, most hospitable people I have encountered on this voyage.

Could we be so gracious had we gone through the same thing? I doubt it. But they welcomed us with open arms and friendship, as equals, into their beautiful country. Of all the places I have been to thus far, Vietnam is the only country I intend to return to some day.
Ciao, Vietnam.

Man convicted of CIA murders

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FAIRFAX, Va. — A Pakistani man was convicted Monday of killing two CIA employees in a shooting spree outside agency headquarters in 1993 and could receive the death penalty.

A jury deliberated four hours before finding Mir Aimal Kasi guilty of one count of capital murder, another count of first-degree murder and three counts of malicious wounding.

Kasi showed no emotion as the verdicts were read.

After the verdicts, Kasi was sentenced to life in prison for the fatal shooting of Lansing Bennett. Jurors will return Tuesday to decide whether to recommend the death sentence or life in prison for the capital murder conviction in the shooting of Frank Darling.

Kasi also received maximum sentences of 20 years each for the three malicious-wounding counts and 18 years for firearms violations.

Darling, 28, and Bennett, 66, died in their cars while stopped in morning traffic in Langley. Two other CIA workers and a telephone company employee were wounded.

Earlier Monday, prosecutors told jurors there was no question that Kasi gunned down the two CIA employees.

"In this case, there's no mystery. It's not even close — the killer, the shooter, is right there," Commonwealth's Attorney Robert Horan said, pointing to Kasi. "He was there to shoot CIA employees. He did what he went there for."

FBI agents said Kasi confessed to the shootings and was angry about the U.S. bombing of Iraq and the influence America exerts abroad, especially in Muslim nations.

Kasi's lawyers put no witnesses on the stand, instead arguing that the prosecution did not prove Kasi intended to kill anyone. His confession came only after he was held in shackles, defense attorney Frank Romano said.

"It is simple to convict a person if you believe he is guilty," Romano said.

While acknowledging that the victims were innocent, Romano said, "Their innocence is not proof of Mr. Kasi's guilt."

Horan explicitly and, at times, emotionally described the carnage from the Jan. 25, 1993, shooting.

He showed the jury photos of the victims and described the way in which Kasi walked up to a line of cars waiting to enter CIA headquarters and fired a dozen shots from an AK-47 assault rifle.

Horan focused on Darling who, after being shot in the back, told his wife seated next to him, "My God, I've been shot. Get down."

Moments later, Horan said, Kasi walked back up the line of cars and Darling watched helplessly as his killer approached.

"He's looking at this guy — he's looking at him, he sees the route of travel," Horan said. He then described the killing shot which, "ripped out one whole part of the top of his head."

Kasi remained a fugitive for four years, prompting an international search before he was captured in a hotel in Pakistan in June.

Ribavirin shows promise in treatment of hepatitis C

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — An experimental combination of drugs shows promise in treating patients suffering a relapse of hepatitis C, a liver infection that kills more than 10,000 Americans a year.

Dr. Gary L. Davis said Monday that a new study showed that a drug called ribavirin, when combined for six months with interferon, the standard treatment, boosted the effectiveness of interferon tenfold.

The combination produced long-term improvement in 49 percent of patients, compared with less than five percent in patients treated with interferon alone, the University of Florida professor of medicine said at a meeting of the American Association for the Study of Liver Disease.

Liver disease from hepatitis C is the most common reason for liver transplants in the United States. The virus infects an estimated 4.5 million Americans, but most don't know it because the virus initially causes flulike symptoms that are often mild.

When acute infections go untreated, up to 90 percent progress into long-term disease, such as cirrhosis, cancer or slow liver failure. Even with treatment of the early infection, only 40 percent of patients respond favorably. Of those patients, half to four-fifths of them have a relapse.

The only approved treatment for hepatitis C is interferon, a synthetic version of a protein that the body produces to fight viruses.

Davis' study, carried out by more than 50 investigators in 11 countries, involved 173 adult relapse patients who were assigned to get the combination regimen for six months and 172 assigned to take interferon and a placebo. The patients were followed for six months after treatment ended.

The only significant side effect from adding ribavirin was anemia, Davis said. Twelve percent of patients had their doses reduced because of that, and in general, the anemia went away when the treatment ended, he said.

An expert not involved in the research called it a significant advance.

"This is the first time we've shown undoubtedly that a combination of drugs in the relapse patients is superior to just a single therapy," said Dr. Norman Gitlin, chief of hepatology at Emory University Medical Center in Atlanta.

People most likely to be infected by the virus are drug abusers, people who had gotten tattoos or had their bodies pierced, and patients who received transfusions before 1990 or have undergone kidney dialysis.

WorldCom/MCI merger biggest in history

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — WorldCom Inc., an upstart Mississippi company led by a former high school basketball coach, beat the telecommunications giants Monday to win a takeover battle for MCI with a $37 billion deal — the biggest merger in U.S. history.

The deal, which is subject to approval by regulators, would transform the landscape of the telecommunications industry. It could also speed up merger talks by other companies trying to take advantage of changes in federal rules governing competition.

The combined company, which would be called MCI WorldCom, would be a behemoth selling a full range of services — from local and long-distance to Internet connections — to 22-million customers in more than 200 countries. The new company expects to have $32 billion in revenue next year.

WorldCom's bid, made up mostly of stock, leapfrogged a $28 billion cash offer from GTE Corp. and also thwarted a $24 billion merger agreement MCI had reached with British Telecommunications PLC.

MCI is already the nation's second-largest long-distance company, behind AT&T, and would remain so after the merger with No. 4 WorldCom.

"GTE is a fine company. We didn't dismiss it lightly," MCI chairman Bert Roberts Jr. said. But "MCI has made the best possible choice with this alignment with WorldCom. The two companies have complementary strengths."

GTE said it was reviewing the situation and would not comment on whether it planned to sweeten its bid.

The boards of both MCI and WorldCom unanimously approved the agreement after WorldCom sweetened its offer by more than 20 percent.

The deal would eclipse the largest U.S. merger so far, a $25.6 billion marriage between Bell Atlantic Corp. and Nynex Corp., completed in August.

"We have aligned ourselves with a management team and employees who share our entrepreneurial spirit and continue to pioneer competition in our industry," said Bernard J. Ebbers, WorldCom president and chief executive.

Roberts will become chairman of MCI WorldCom. Ebbers will be president and chief executive.

Ebbers, a Canadian who came to Mississippi on a basketball scholarship, was a coach before investing in several businesses, including a small long-distance company called LDDS, which became WorldCom in 1995. The Jackson, Miss.-based company, with 13,000 employees, has expanded through more than 40 acquisitions over the past decade.

MCI, founded in 1968, grew from a mobile radio company to become the fiercest challenger to AT&T.

A federal law intended to force more competition in telecommunications has touched off a spate of attempts by the industry's biggest players to buy their way into each other's businesses.

MCI has been spending billions to build local networks. That contrasts with plans by Sprint and AT&T to lease lines from local phone companies. MCI also is a leader in selling long-distance service to large companies.

That made MCI attractive to companies attempting to expand to take advantage of the regulatory reform.

MCI stock was up 13 percent, or $4.81 1/4 to $41.68 3/4, in afternoon trading on the Nasdaq Stock Market, where WorldCom's stock was down five percent, or $1.75, at $31.37 1/2. U.S. shares of British Telecom were up 3.5 percent, or $2.68 3/4 a share, at $79.68 3/4 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Saturday, November 22, 8 p.m.
Public: $18 Seniors: $16 Students: $9

Let your imagination run wild for a night of high-energy laughs from this Lawrence-based group. With kooky sound effects and on-the-edge excitement of live radio, the Imagination Workshop transmits more bizarro humor than a Jim Carey festival.

Recent shows have poked fun at the Clinton health care program, the O.J. Simpson trial, the controversy over gays in the military, the 1996 presidential campaign, the fall TV season, and popular films.

Enjoy the unique humor of this team of zany Kansans when the Imagination Workshop spins into Manhattan.

Call McCain at 785-532-6428
You can charge your tickets to VISA, MasterCard, or Discover. Or stop by the box office, noon to 6 p.m. weekdays.

Presentation of the Imagination Workshop is supported by the K-State Fine Arts Fee.

Presented in part by the Kansas Arts Commission, a state agency, and the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency.

from her home in Hinsdale, Ill. "All that we wanted was for us to know what has really happened, and this still shows that she's guilty."

Matthew died Feb. 9, five days after he was taken to a hospital. Prosecutors said evidence of a 2 1/2-inch fracture to the back of the baby's head and bleeding behind Matthew's eyes indicated the baby's head had been slammed against a hard surface.

They said Woodward hated her job because it interfered with her social life. The baby's parents said they had to reprimand her about her late hours and what they considered lapses in her duties.

But the defense said the baby actually had been injured two to three weeks before Feb. 4, pointing to testimony that a clear fluid was found in the baby's skull. Woodward denied hurting the child, saying she only shook him a bit when she found him unresponsive in his crib after a bath. She denied telling police she might have been "a little rough" with Matthew.

Several jurors had said they wished they could have considered manslaughter as an option. They had been barred from doing so by an all-or-nothing defense strategy of giving jurors only the options of murder or acquittal.

Monday's ruling pleased one of the jurors. "I am greatly relieved at this decision," said Stephen Colwell.

Under Massachusetts law, Zobel had four options in deciding the appeal of the conviction: Let the verdict stand, dismiss the conviction, order a new trial or reduce the finding to manslaughter.

Manslaughter, not murder with a mandatory life sentence, best fits the scenario suggested by the evidence, the judge wrote: a young, inexperienced teen struggling with the demands of baby care. A finding of malice under the second-degree murder count meant concluding the defendant committed a deliberate act that a reasonable person would have known was likely to cause death.

"Frustrated by her inability to quiet the crying child, she was 'a little rough with him,' under circumstances where another, perhaps wiser, person would have sought to restrain the physical impulse," he wrote. "The roughness was sufficient to start (or re-start) a bleeding that escalated fatally."

The ruling, which was to be released over the Internet, was delayed more than an hour by a power outage that occurred as the decision was about to be sent, said Whitney Brown, first assistant clerk magistrate for the court. The decision was released on paper, and then finally showed up on the Internet by late morning.

Awaiting the decision, reporters were asked to leave the courthouse. Woodward was in the women's prison in Framingham, where court officials said she had access to a television.

Woodward's supporters, who had been keeping vigil outside the courthouse, were asked by the judge to wait instead at a neighborhood restaurant. "A manslaughter sentence is better than life, but she should be set free," said Kelli Kane, one of the supporters, after word came out.

In Woodward's home town of Elton, England, resident Margot Thomson-Moore said she was disappointed because "I felt that there was reasonable doubt and, if there was reasonable enough doubt, they should have acquitted her. In this country, she wouldn't have been convicted."

Defense attorneys had conceded they made a mistake in their strategy of limiting the jurors to consideration of either acquittal or first- and second-degree murder, and not manslaughter. In Monday's decision, the judge said it was a rational strategy for the defense to take at the time.

The prosecution said Woodward and her lawyers were just looking for a better deal and should not be allowed a reduced finding unless she admits what she did.

The verdict prompted sob-filled bewilderment from Woodward, portrayed by prosecutors as frustrated and angry with Matthew for fussing. She cried to jurors: "I didn't do anything. ... Why did they do that to me?"

The case, with no eyewitnesses and conflicting medical testimony, was closely followed across the country and in England, where many were stunned by the verdict and swift sentence.

There was criticism at home, too, even before the verdict.

Some said Matthew's parents, Deborah and Sunil Eappen, both doctors, should not have left the baby and his now 3-year-old brother, Brendan, with a low-paid teenager who had come to the United States for adventure. A family friend said last week that the Eappens had left the state to avoid reporters.

Fee

Commerce Bank showed evidence that it will be losing $8,000 by not charging a fee this semester. The loss will not occur after the fee is implemented.

"If they are willing to risk that much for the students it should be factored in the equation," Strevey-Tien said.

Carl Boger, Faculty Senate representative to UGB, said students have other options, such as opening an account with Commerce Bank.

"This is a nice win-win situation if a student doesn't want to pay the fee," he said. "It's all in the students' control who they bank with and where they cash their checks."

Jones said he was not in favor of subsidizing the fee. A prior motion to implement a 50-cent fee and subsidize the remaining 25 cents through existing students' fees funneled through the Union was discussed, but was not approved.

"We should stop thinking of them (Commerce) as part of the Union," Jones said. "They are a branch of Commerce Bank, and this is their policy."

UGB President Patrick Carney said the subsidizing was meant to strike a balance between students paying a little bit instead of being hit all at once.

In other business, UGB approved a motion to allow the bronze Wildcat sculpture to be placed within the Union plaza area.

The decision as to where the sculpture will be placed is to be decided by K-State's Beautification Committee. The motion only gives the committee approval if it decides to place the sculpture in the plaza area, Pitts said. Other areas are also being looked at by the committee, he said.

Pitts said 10 inquiries have been made on the hamburger concept restaurant for the Union Food Court. A mandatory meeting will take place on Friday for all interested businesses.

the floor of the rented home before she died, investigators said.

Bellush apparently was last seen alive when her husband, a pharmaceutical representative, went to work and Stevie went to school, Stookey said. Bellush has been in seclusion and unavailable for comment.

Bellush had Stevie and another daughter, 12-year-old Daryl, with Blackthorne. After they divorced in 1988, she took custody of the two. Blackthorne gave up parental rights several months ago.

Felony assault charges had been filed against Bellush shortly before the move to Florida, stemming from allegations made by Daryl, who said she had been beaten with a belt that raised welts on her legs.

Child Protective Services caseworkers investigated and later dropped the state's effort to take temporary custody of the girl. Caseworkers and four therapists said there was no evidence of "any injury that amounts to child abuse" and there was no indication that the Bellush home was not a "safe, stable and caring environment."

The four tots — Frankie, Timothy, Joseph and Courtney — and the older girls were staying with members of the Sarasota Baptist Church, where the family attended services.

"They're struggling," said church representative Greg Lester.

A third change would shift responsibility for planning and implementing the all-greek philanthropy to the vice president from the rush coordinator. The rush coordinator now shares responsibility with the public relations director for planning the semester events.

Gorman said the change would allow the vice president more responsibility.

The changes will be voted on at the council's Dec. 1 meeting. A three-quarter vote of the council is needed to amend the bylaws.

the storm destroyed at least eight houses and tore the roofs off many more.

No one was injured in El Tomatal, and villagers attributed that to their readiness.

"About 8:30 last night it started blowing strong, and everyone ran to stronger houses," Olivera said. "Thank God, that even though we may be homeless, we're OK."

On Monday, 52-year-old farmer Liborio Lopez Perez enlisted neighbors to help him cut down what remained of his wooden house with machetes. He planned to start building a new one today.

"We rode out the storm in another house," he said, looking over at his wife and seven children. "I may have lost my house, but at least we saved our lives."

Many of the farmers in town worried most about their crops.

"What little Pauline left for us Rick took away," said Jose Manuel Santiago, 22. "Pauline came to harvest the corn, and Rick came to harvest the peanuts."

for 1995-96, which is set at a level of $600,989 each year for two years.

The fee includes all intercollegiate sports, the K-State Marching Band, other non-revenue sports and the K-State sports clubs. Sports clubs include activities such as rugby, lacrosse, Rodeo Club, rappelling, soccer, water skiing and men's crew.

The committee wrote the bill favorably to continue the athletic fee at the same level. The athletic department will maintain its policies, but it is still waiting on the results of next week's stadium expansion referendum to reach a decision on changing ticket-price structure.

Athletic Director Max Urick said he was nervous about changing ticket prices now and wanted to wait until after the stadium referendum on Monday and Tuesday before dealing with ticket prices.

"I have taken a stand on what ticket prices should be, and I don't want to mess with that right now," Urick said.

Student football tickets would be at least $2 cheaper than general admission tickets per game. Basketball tickets would be $1 less than general admission tickets per game.

Nontraditional students would be allowed to buy tickets under the family plans at student rates. Student seating would equal no less than 5,908 for basketball and 7,500 for football.

The last time the athletic department budget was reviewed, it was kept constant although some funds were reapportioned. Some money was taken from the football program and given to the band.

The Privilege Fee Committee will invite student senators to voice their opinions on percentages allocated to each division of the athletic department.

Clinton's visit might be reality

Clinton

LANCE SCHOEN
staff reporter

The rumors of a presidential Landon Lecture at K-State on Monday night are beginning to look like a real possibility.

Although no official word has been given from the White House, President Jon Wefald's office or Bramlage Coliseum, an anonymous source said President Clinton's office has expressed interest.

Clinton will be in Wichita on Monday for the dedication of a Cessna job-training facility and White House spokesman Mike McCurry said, "there may be other events that day as well."

Chuck Reagan, executive assistant to Wefald and head of the Landon Lecture Series, said he also got information from sources who want to remain anonymous.

"We have no confirmation from the White House, but we have heard that it might be on the agenda," he said.

The White House was not available for comment Tuesday because of Veterans Day, but the president's press office said Monday that it could not confirm a possible visit. An official statement from the White House should be made today.

If Clinton does deliver the 112th Landon Lecture, he will be the fifth president to address a Landon Lecture audience.

U.S., Britain ask for Iraqi travel ban

▶ RESOLUTION RESPONDS TO EXPULSION of U.N. arms inspections teams.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — Declaring that Iraqi defiance has reunited the Gulf War coalition, U.S. and British diplomats asked the Security Council on Tuesday to slap a travel ban on Iraq and warn of "further measures" unless it cooperates with U.N. arms inspectors.

But the resolution did not include the threat of military force should Iraq continue refusing to rescind its Oct. 29 order to expel American members of the U.N. weapons inspection team.

The draft also omitted a warning of serious consequences because of opposition from the French and Russians.

U.S. Ambassador Bill Richardson said Tuesday the council would vote on the resolution today and he expected near unanimity among the 15 council members.

"This resolution is going to be passed tomorrow," Richardson said. "And we think it sends an unmistakable signal for Iraq to comply immediately."

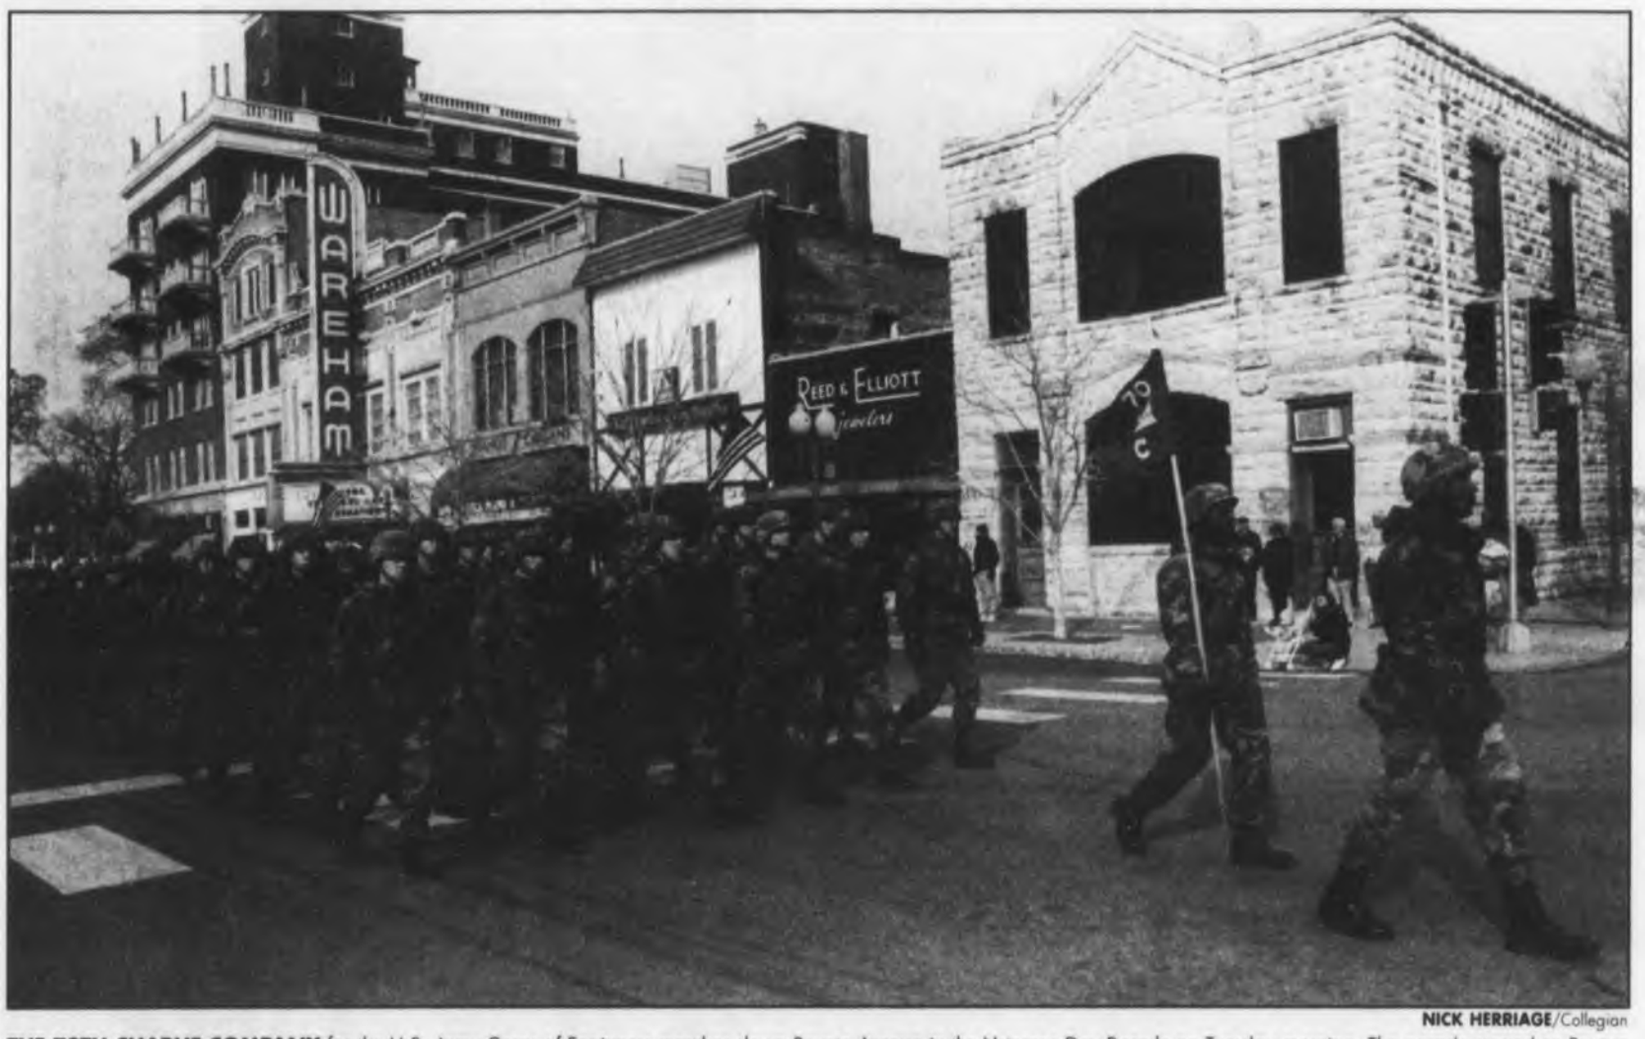
Richardson predicted a unanimous vote. Diplomatic sources said the lone holdout was China, which said it needed to consult Chinese leaders before deciding how to vote.

Council sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said several members would try before the vote to persuade the Iraqis to rescind the decision against the Americans.

Britain's acting U.N. ambassador, Stephen Gomersall, said there were "diplomatic efforts by a number of members of the council with the Iraqi government at this moment."

"We hope to hear positive news from that tomorrow," Gomersall said. "But as of now, the intention is this resolution will be voted on around noon tomorrow."

The resolution would ban Iraqi officials who interfere with U.N. inspectors from traveling abroad, condemn Iraq for its expulsion of American inspectors and suspend further reviews of economic sanctions against Iraq until the inspectors certify that Baghdad is cooperating. The Security Council imposed the sanctions in August 1990 after Iraq invaded neighboring Kuwait.



"The coalition has reunited itself because of Iraqi behavior," Richardson said. "We believe that there's strong unanimity and consensus on the council that Iraq's behavior has been unacceptable."

Despite the strong rhetoric, U.S. and British diplomats worked throughout the day to polish and sometimes weaken language in hopes of a unanimous vote. The French raised questions about the timetable for reviewing Iraqi compliance.

Threats of force were deleted from the resolution in hopes of winning support from Russia, France, China and other nations anxious to resume lucrative trade links with Iraq once sanctions are lifted.

THE 70TH CHARLIE COMPANY for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers marches down Poyntz Avenue in the Veterans Day Parade on Tuesday morning. The parade started on Poyntz Avenue at City Park and ended at the Manhattan Town Center.

ROTC cadets, community remember veterans

KEN BOESE, a Manhattan resident and World War II veteran, takes a moment to view some photographs of the Cold War that were on display Tuesday morning in front of City Hall. In World War II, Boese served as a Tech 5 in the Medical Corps. Tech 5 is equivalent to corporal.

CATHY BACH
staff reporter

Future veterans showed their support for veterans by participating in Veterans Day events on Tuesday.

Bart Ransom, commander of the joint ROTC guard and Bosnia veteran, said community support for the parade was encouraging.

"I was happy to see the support," Ransom said. "It's better in the long run to have this kind of support, because it's there in the future when you need it."

Capt. Steve Dorfman, commandant of the Air Force ROTC, said he was pleased with cadet turnout at the events.

"None of them were forced to be here," Dorfman said. "It's a calling or interest, and they are honoring history."

Dorfman said students had many reasons for wanting to participate in the day's events.

"The cadets have a sense of duty, an obligation that comes from within," he said.

Dorfman said cadets organized and participated in the events on their own. The planning is considered part of training, and Dorfman provides guidance to the cadets.

"If they're wrong, they learn and go on," he said.

John Bales, Air Force ROTC cadet and colorguard coordinator, said participation by the cadets was strong.

"There was a pretty good turnout," Bales said. "I think that reflects the general feeling that we all have towards Veterans Day and veterans in general."

Mark Williams, Air Force cadet coordinator for Veterans Day activities, said the main focus of the activities was honoring veterans.

"'They serve, we honor' was the theme," Williams said. "It gives cadets a chance to show support for those who died."

Williams said this was the first year the Air Force ROTC and the Army ROTC cadets had worked together on this event.

In the past, joint projects have been limited, but both groups are trying to coordinate more activities together.

"The interaction is good for both corps," Williams said.

The day's events included a breakfast at the American Legion, a parade on Poyntz Avenue, a patriotic concert in front of the Riley County Courthouse, a POW/MIA display by the Arnold Air Society at the K-State Student Union, and a commemorative program and reception at the Wareham Opera House.

The Army and Air Force cadets participated in the events by serving breakfast, providing a Colorguard for the parade and attending events when class schedules allowed.

Barry Adams, captain of the Army ROTC, said all 106 Army ROTC cadets participated in one way or another.

The cadets run the program, and they have participated in the event ever since the ROTC program has been here.

"I commend cadets for amount of effort they put in," Adams said. "They put in a lot of extra effort, and I'm really proud of them."

RCPD member arrested for DUI

MATT KREPS
staff writer

The assistant director of the Riley County Police Department was arrested Sunday for driving under the influence of alcohol.

Larry B. Woodyard was arrested after being involved in a two-car collision on Tuttle Creek Boulevard near the Fancy Creek Bridge.

Woodyard has served more than 25 years in Manhattan-area law enforcement.

The Kansas Highway Patrol responded to the accident and arrested Woodyard. He was transported to the Riley County Jail and later released on $500 bond.

All RCPD officers were directed to send inquiries to Director Alvan Johnson. Johnson was out of the office for the Veterans Day holiday.

No news releases or information other than the log report on the incident were made available.

An officer who did not wish to be named said DUIs in Riley County are frequent offenses. He would not speculate on what the punishment might be if Woodyard were convicted, saying factors such as driving record and prior offenses weigh in the decision.

No one was available to comment on how the arrest could affect Woodyard's job status.

Faculty shares views about hiring freeze

KRIS ROBL
staff reporter

The hiring freeze is getting some mixed responses from K-State professors.

The reason for the two-year hiring freeze is to pay for technological enhancements in classrooms and teaching labs.

James Coffman, provost, said the hiring freeze has not been decided on yet but is being discussed case-by-case with faculty for its long-term benefits.

"It's pretty obvious that if there is a hiring freeze, it would affect teaching," said Lawrence Rodgers, associate professor and head of the Department of English.

Rodgers said the hiring freeze doesn't really have a lot to do with the writing program, though.

He said most of the recitations and writing courses are taught by graduate teaching assistants, who will not be included in the hiring freeze.

"Fewer sections will mean that more students will be packed into classes," said David Yetter, associate professor in mathematics.

This will also increase the ratio of students to teachers, which will decrease the availability of instructors, Yetter said.

"As soon as the hiring freeze is lifted, we can hire more instructors, but for now, it deprives us of the opportunity to hire good teachers," Yetter said.

Brian Spooner, director of the Division of Biology, said he didn't know whether the two-year hiring freeze would be beneficial.

"My understanding is that, presumably, there will be a downtrend in the number of students over the next two years. The university wants to take advantage of this and put more money into other beneficial programs," Spooner said. "I understand what they are trying to do, but I haven't seen enough information at this time to determine anything."

Yetter said technological enhancements were being substituted for staff.

He said computers and overhead projectors should not be depended on to educate students. Technological enhancements should be used to encourage enthusiasm in learning.

"There are many things a student can learn from an instructor that technological enhancements cannot provide," Yetter said.

Coffman said it was hard to say what will happen, but his priority is to improve teaching and overall education.

K-State Student Union expansion, enhancement to be completed by 2000

ZACH VADER
staff reporter

The expansion and enhancement of the K-State Student Union should be complete by the year 2000, Bernard Pitts, Union director, said at Tuesday's Faculty Senate meeting.

"We figure that after it is all said and done, the K-State Union should be in full operation by the year 2000 after the completion of the project," Pitts said.

Pitts described many of the new additions, as well as the way the Union will look at the Seaton Hall and Anderson Hall entrances.

"As you walk into the Seaton entrance, the walls will be lowered," Pitts said. "You will be able to see the dining area."

Pitts also said a new food court will be added and that 54 percent of the construction will be infrastructure, so most of the activity will be on the main floor.

He said the construction will happen in 14 consecutive stages. The first three will involve life safety, temporary dining halls and the new food court. The food court should be completed 10 months after the project begins.

Pitts also said there will be a plaza between the Union and Seaton.

"The area to the north of the Union will be very impressive," Pitts said. There will be a stage for concerts and free speech, a grass area and an outside dining area.

During the time of construction, this area will be used by the construction company for trailers and other equipment.

Pitts said the project will cost $11.5 million in student fees and has a 15- to 20-year bond, costing each student $23.

"We need to bring the building up to code, and this will be a great way to do it," Pitts said.

Senate also approved five resolutions of the Academic Affairs Committee.

Some of these included increasing the credit hours for the school counseling masters degree from 42 to 48 hours, and the counselor education and supervision doctorate in counseling and educational psychology from 60 hours to 66-78 hours. Both degrees are in the Department of Counseling and Educational Psychology.

"This will bring the requirements more in line with the students' curricula," said Don Fenton, professor of mechanical engineering and faculty senator.

The Faculty Affairs Committee also proposed an amendment to the faculty handbook that dealt with faculty privileges, benefits and responsibilities.

After a lengthy discussion, the amendment was tabled until the next meeting.

The motion was brought forth by Aruna Michie, associate professor of political science.

"I really need to think about this," Michie said. "I think we need to table it, so I can talk about it with my colleagues and so you can talk about it with yours."

Eastman Kodak cuts 10,000 jobs due to sluggish sales, profits

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — Eastman Kodak Co. said Tuesday it is eliminating 10,000 jobs, or 10.5 percent of its work force, as part of a plan to cut costs by at least $1 billion and revive sluggish sales and profits.

It is the latest in a series of overhauls since 1983 at the world's biggest photography company, which has encountered increasingly fierce competition from Japan's Fuji Photo Film Co.

The cuts will be made in the next two years, at least half of them by the end of 1998. Kodak plans to set aside at least $1 billion during the fourth quarter to pay for the job cuts and other expenses of the restructuring.

The layoffs among Kodak's 95,000-strong labor force worldwide will account for only about half of the savings, company executives said.

Kodak also will reduce its sales force, hire other companies to do more of its manufacturing and look for more joint ventures and partnerships.

The job cuts will be made unit-by-unit and employees are expected to be notified by Dec. 1 at the latest.

Apple to sell Macintosh computers directly over World Wide Web

CUPERTINO, Calif. — Apple Computer Inc. is changing the way it makes and sells its products, building computers to order and allowing customers to buy over the Internet, as well as from retailers.

The company hopes the changes announced Monday will help to get its wares to customers and make it easier to buy a Macintosh computer.

Steve Jobs, the company's interim chief executive officer and co-founder of Apple, unveiled the Apple Store, the online site where customers can choose among several versions of Macintosh computers or order customized models and arrange payment and delivery.

The site, store.apple.com, was up and running after Jobs' presentation at the same auditorium where he unveiled the original Apple Macintosh personal computer more than a decade ago.

Apple is by no means giving up retail sales. The company has been working more closely with retailers to give the Mac and other Apple products greater prominence in stores.

Bramlage victim of weekend burglary with $2,600 in losses

A weekend burglary resulted in the loss of an estimated $2,600 of electronic equipment from the K-State men's basketball locker room.

The theft, occurring sometime between 11 p.m. Friday and 8:30 a.m. Sunday, might have been the result of an unlocked door, said Jim Muller, associate director of Bramlage Coliseum.

There were no signs of forced entry.

Taken from the locker room were a VCR, video cable and a camcorder with an adjustable tripod.

Muller said details about the theft were sketchy.

"We do know some items were taken from the men's locker room," Muller said.

Because of the Veterans Day holiday, K-State police officers were not available for further comment on the investigation.

Bonds provide money for improvements

CATHY BACH
staff reporter

If the KSU Stadium expansion referendum passes next week, the construction costs will be funded as a bond issue, but the expansion wouldn't be the only K-State change that has been funded as a bond issue.

Projects such as the K-State Student Union, Hale Library renovations and the construction of the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and Bramlage Coliseum were financed by bonds.

Bonding is a financial tool used to pay for capital improvements, construction of new buildings or the acquisition of equipment for the improvements when the university does not have the money up front to pay for construction.

Students must approve the issuance of bonds when they approve referendums, because the projects are supported through student privilege fees. If students don't approve referendums, the university must wait until it can raise the necessary money for the projects.

Keith Ratzloff, university controller, said most of K-State's projects are capital improvements. Ratzloff said it is a problem trying to understand who this responsibility belongs to, the students or the university itself.

"Most of the discussion has been centered around: 'Is this really a student obligation, or is this a university obligation?' And you're asking the students to pay for it," Ratzloff said.

Tricia Morrissey, senior in architectural engineering, said it's worth paying the money to improve the campus.

"It's kind of like an insurance policy," Morrissey said. "When you pay it, you don't normally use it, but when you need it, you're glad you have it."

Aaron Otto, Privilege Fee Committee chair, said some students don't understand they don't have to pay for the whole project. A percentage of the project is paid for by student privilege fees, but most of the project is funded through outside sources.

Ratzloff said a misunderstanding students have with fees as they relate to bond issues is whether students will actually use or do use the facility they are bonding.

"I think the biggest misconception in fees is that they somehow equate to a use fee," Ratzloff said. "They're not a use fee at all. They're a privilege fee or an availability fee."

Fran Willbrant, associate controller at K-State, said everyone benefits from construction on campus.

"It's for the betterment of the campus," Willbrant said. "There's a lot of concepts, especially within the government that work on that theory."

Ratzloff said there are drawbacks to bonding.

"Any time you get into debt, there's a potential drawback," he said.

Ratzloff said bonding has raised the university's standard of living because the university doesn't have to wait until it has enough money to make improvements.

"If you had to wait 20 years to get money and put it away in a savings account to build a science building, how would you accommodate the science majors that need that building to further their education?" he asked.

Ratzloff said it's difficult for future students to understand why they are paying for a building that was built years ago.

"It's hard to explain to a student who's going to come here 20 years from now and have to pay a fee for a building that's sitting over there that's 20 years old," he said.

Ratzloff said for the first time, K-State obligated itself for an academic building with the $5 million it promised to Hale Library.

"That was a major step for the university, in terms of the academic mission of the university, as opposed to the social aspect, I guess," Ratzloff said.

Privilege fee allocations

The following shows how much students pay for each expansion.

Board of Regents mandated fee	Fiscal year 1997	Amount per Student
Recreation Complex requirement	$709,063	$21.23
Library expansion	$323,142	$ 9.67
K-State Student Union enhancement	$807,064	$24.16

HOW BONDS WORK

The Kansas Board of Regents must first approve the project for funding. If the school determines it does not have enough money for the project through state appropriations or internally, the group that needs help approaches the Student Senate to ask for money.

If the project is considered either a capital improvement or construction of a new building and is approved by the Senate, it is put to a campus vote.

Students vote on whether they want to pay a fee to pay off the bonds. If students decide to finance the project, their fees will increase, and they make a promise to the university that future students will pay.

A bill is then written and sent to the Kansas Development Finance Authority, a state financial agency, for approval. It decides whether to finance the project and issues a general obligation bond if approved.

These bonds are sold on the open market to private investors by brokerage firms for a low interest rate. The bonds don't have high rates of return, but they are seen as a safe investment for investors.

Because K-State is considered a municipality, the federal government allows the university to issue tax-exempt bonds. Therefore, neither the state nor the bond holder have to pay taxes on the interest earned by the bonds.

Debate continues about referendum

KELLY FURNAS
staff writer

Athletic Director Max Urick and Students for First Things First, a group opposed to funding the KSU Stadium expansion with student fees, continued their public debate about the expansion referendum at a forum Wednesday in Putnam Hall.

The forum, sponsored by the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, allowed students to ask questions and express concerns regarding the referendum, which students will vote on Monday and Tuesday. About 25 people attended.

Most concerns were centered around finding alternative sources of revenue to fund the stadium expansion.

"We've seen the costs of education increase faster than the rate of inflation," Rob MacDougall Jr., junior in political science, said. "What I don't understand is, why a privilege fee? Why hasn't the state, alumni, the community been hit up for money?"

Urick responded by saying he thought pursuing other lines of funding would compete with other projects the university is trying to fund.

Urick also fended off criticism of his use of money from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics' administrative budget to promote the referendum.

"If there's something I can do to promote this, I'm going to do it," he said. "If I could spend $500 to make all of you change your mind right

K-State has plenty to showcase for a Presidential visit

Dear President Clinton,

We hope those rumors floating around are true. We hope you come and visit K-State next week after your Wichita experience. There's so much we want to show you.

Every president has given a Landon Lecture since President Nixon. Even though a few were not president at the time, it was still a wonderful experience. And because you're president now, it would be even better.

K-State has more Rhodes, Goldwater and Marshall scholars than any other public university. And because you were a Rhodes scholar in your day, President Clinton, you'll be among peers. And even those students who don't fall into those categories are still really nice. We'll make you feel right at home.

K-State also has a rich history as the first land-grant college in the nation. Wouldn't you enjoy a nice afternoon basking in a place with such a plentiful heritage? We know we wouldn't miss out on that if we were president.

Such a visit would also give you an opportunity to let all K-State students know about how important education is to you. Perhaps you can bring Chelsea to show her what she's missing out on.

There are other fringe benefits to coming to K-State. You might just get a K-State sweatshirt. Just ask Boris Yeltsin. You can fill that presidential tummy with some Call Hall ice cream (we hear it's tastier than Dairy Queen any day).

Or you can stop by the K-State Student Union to visit the best Student Governing Association in the country. And while you're at the Union, you might as well trot across the street to Kedzie Hall to see the eighth-largest morning daily newspaper in Kansas.

All in all, President Clinton, we're really proud of our school, and we want you to come see all we have to offer.

K-State looks forward to seeing you.

Celebrating Land

Kansas farmland remains state's best asset

Aside from the weather, land is a common topic among Kansas farmers.

Not land in the natural sense, but as farm property, as acres of agricultural product. The sheer abundance of land in Kansas assures, without the dire need for, say, a national park, that pure nature will exist in some form in nearly every part of the state.

Establishing parks, even the Grasslands National Park in Chase County, only reaffirms Kansans' appreciation for the natural state of land. But this is not a consideration of the natural land, but of the semi-developed land of a farm.

VIEWPOINT

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

RUSSELL FORTMEYER is a senior in architectural engineering. You can send e-mail to Russell at rmf@ksu.edu

All sorts of measuring devices signify a hierarchial division of farmers, further broken down to ranchers, pig farmers and so forth.

The larger the farm, the more importance it is given, and so it goes. Jane Smiley wrote about farmers and their intense passion for land in her book, "A Thousand Acres." Perhaps Smiley didn't so much create her sweeping passages of earth worship as she did put into words what any farmer thinks on any given day. Smiley portrays both the good and bad things farmers do to the land.

Wes Jackson, the Salina visionary responsible for the Land Institute, was created from what the bad farmers have done to land. Jackson, in such tidy and sensitive books as "Becoming Native to this Place," argues for a return to natural and environmentally sound ways of farming the land.

That Jackson can, with such clarity of vision and assurance, write what are almost poems to land speaks for the spirituality of open land in the Midwest.

A Fortmeyer family tradition that has died along with the family patriarch was burying the blessed palms of the Catholic Palm Sunday on the four corners of the collective acreage. My grandfather would split open the still-cold March topsoil, firmly press the palms into the crevice and sprinkle it with holy water before covering it.

This yearly ritual strikes me, cynical as I have become, as sweetly spiritual. Perhaps these rituals were the last time I ever felt truly connected — part of the seasonal cycle of the land.

Every profession surely has its rituals done in the hopes of begging favor from some higher power. Farming has a rich tradition of rituals and unspoken rites of passage.

Again, in "A Thousand Acres," Smiley illustrates the problems that occur with the transfer of farm property from one generation to the next. The book's patriarch goes mad without his land, seeing his children as landmongers who don't do things the way he once did.

So it goes that whenever large amounts of land changes hands, Kansans sit up and take notice.

This past week, nearly 5,000 acres of Chase County grasslands were sold at an auction from the estate of Opal F. Lewis, a Matfield Green woman who died last year at age 94. The fact that a person of this age presided over 5,000 acres of land is a typical Kansas wonder in and of itself. But land is not taken lightly.

The auction itself was an event. There have been glossy auction posters on the table of the western store Jim Bell and Sons in Cottonwood Falls for at least two months. And it was reported that the buzz of auction attendees was that Ted Turner, one of the largest land owners in the world, was to be in attendance.

Turner owns large chunks of New Mexico, Montana and the Andes Mountain region of Patagonia, so he of all people understands the importance of land. Of course, he also owns a majority of what is the most intangible incarnation of the 20th century: television. Ted might think himself a monarch, which isn't too far from the truth.

Back in Chase County, the winning bidders in Thursday's auction paid nearly $2.4 million for the property, which was parceled up into various tracts in and around Cassoday, Matfield Green and Cottonwood Falls. That's a princely sum for land.

But what is most interesting is that it wasn't the big money that struck Lewis' cousin Crystle Deering. It was that some of the property went to Kansas City owners. Deering said she had hoped it would have all fallen into local hands.

Another spiritual level the land encompasses is that of familiarity. This is as deeply rooted in Kansas history as bluestem grass itself. Land can become personified. It can develop as a physical representation of presence — usually that of the owner — which is why farms are referred to as so-and-so's "place."

Land can change personages, as it does owners, from one side of the road to the other, simply because one farmer works it differently than the other. By a farmer knowing the land owners who surround him, a level of comfort is achieved in knowing friends are, in essence, all around you.

It might sound reactionary or dated to the 1930s to consider this simple pleasure important, but how many books don't treat the land with a reverent tone — even, in Smiley's case, while the people who reside on it crumble to pieces?

KRIS EMMONS/Collegian

Though communism's ideal shames capitalism,

BOTH fail in the end

SHANE FOSBURG/Collegian

Communism as an ideal shames capitalistic greed.

In communism — not Marxism, but pure communism — we find a dependence upon the good in humanity. No one person is above another. All are equal. People work together, not against one another. Success in pure communism depends upon the good that resides in each person's heart.

In capitalism we see a dependence upon all that is bad in humanity. All the most gifted rise to the top. Those who have not been endowed with the gifts necessary to "climb the ladder" are simply trampled. People work against one another, pushing and shoving in a desperate attempt to get to the top, whatever that is.

Success in capitalism depends upon the evil that resides in each person's heart — the greed that defines us all.

Without the greed of self-interested people like you and me, capitalism would crumble. However, because we are by nature very greedy and self-centered, capitalism flourishes.

Bill Gates did not rise to the top of the computer world simply because he loved working with computers. Definitely, his motivation to succeed and willingness to work hard are admirable.

However, the underlying motivation behind almost all capitalistic success stories — and most likely Gates' — is greed. This is not a commentary on Gates alone, but rather a statement of the general badness that resides within humanity.

People are driven by the desire to consume more and more, climb higher and higher, and push harder and harder — without regard for who or what is left in the wake of their "success." Left in the wake of such greed are those who, for whatever reason, cannot — or will not — prostitute themselves for what the system defines as success.

The capitalistic system both disturbs and disgusts me. In an ideal world, I would find communism preferable.

We do not live in an ideal world.

In our world today, communism does not work. That has been proven in the past decade. At the very least, it has been proven that communism apart from God does not work.

And, despite the number of "Jesus Communes" that have sprung up all over the globe, it has not been definitively proven that communism with God involved works. People are still far too selfish.

So we find that as a political system, communism fails. And, we find that as a system of morality, capitalism fails. Some would say the solution is somewhere in the middle — socialism, perhaps.

I would contend that when the strengths and weaknesses of the various political systems are taken into account, one system is not inherently better than another. The reason for this is that all systems are forced to be populated by humans. And these humans are always bad.

What, then, do I propose as a solution?

The only solution I see is a solution that takes away the inherent badness that resides within us all. All religions address the issue in one way or another.

Some deny that the badness exists. In "Krishna's Dialogue on the Soul," we see a dialogue between Krishna and Arjuna. In doing so, he discusses with Krishna where God resides (18:61). "God dwells in the heart of all beings, Arjuna," is Krishna's answer to what lies within the hearts of humanity.

Others would say all goodness and badness are but perceptions of reality.

In Romans 6:6, the apostle Paul says, "(K)nowing this, that our old man was crucified with Him (Jesus), that the body of sin may be done away with, that we should no longer be slaves of sin."

We can clearly see what is politically expedient and fiscally profitable is not necessarily morally right. People's greed keeps capitalistic countries fiscally and politically strong. However, it does not follow that capitalism is then morally right.

VIEWPOINT

KEVIN BAILEY

KEVIN BAILEY is a senior in elementary education. You can send your e-mail comments to Kevin at (kevinsb@ksu.edu)

So where can we find the key to the problem that besets all of our systems of politics and morality — the badness of humanity? We must turn to religion, as discussed above, to find what is morally right and true. But whose view is correct?

I state unequivocally that the only true answer to the badness of humanity can be found in the death of Jesus Christ on the cross. According to the scripture, he took all of humanity's sin (or "badness") upon himself, that we might live new lives apart from the evil that resides in all our hearts. No other God was willing to do what Jesus did for the people that he had created.

He became one of them.

In doing so, he overcame the problem that still besets all of humanity — sin. It is simply up to us now to accept the sacrifice that he made for us almost 2,000 years ago. There is no way around it. Where politics fail, religion — Jesus — must take over.

Communism — which, incidentally, was practiced with success by the church of Acts — is still not the answer. Capitalism never has been. There is no perfect political or economic system. But there is a perfect God.

He wants to make us perfect, too.

That is our only hope.

WILDCAT REPORT

compiled by Dan Merker, assistant sports editor

TELEVISION UPDATE

K-State's final two regular-season football games this year will be televised.

The Wildcats' home finale vs. Colorado on Saturday will be broadcast regionally on ABC. To accommodate ABC, kickoff has been changed from 1:10 p.m. to 2:30 p.m.

The Cats' final regular-season game will also be on television. The Nov. 22 game vs. Iowa State in Ames will be on the Big 12 Syndicated TV Network. Kickoff will be at 11:30 a.m. The game can be seen locally on WIBW-TV (channel 3) out of Topeka.

2 CATS TO BE IN SHRINE GAME

K-State head coach Bill Snyder has been selected to coach the West team of the 73rd East-West Shrine Football Classic, to be played at Stanford Stadium on Jan. 10.

Snyder

The East-West Game is America's longest-running college all-star football game.

Snyder will be assisted by Tyrone Willingham of Stanford and David Radar of Tulsa.

Tennessee coach Phil Fulmer will lead the East, assisted by Frank Beamer of Virginia Tech and Gary Barnett of Northwestern.

K-State offensive tackle Todd Weiner also has been invited to play in the game.

The East-West Shrine Game is played for the benefit of the 22 Shriners Hospitals for Children throughout North America. The Shriners hospitals provide medical care to children free of charge. Since its inception in 1925, the game has raised more than $14 million for the hospitals.

"I love what the Shrine hospitals have done," Snyder said. "I think that's really a special thing."

3 CATS AWARDED

K-State kickoff returner Gerald Neasman received the AT&T Long Distance award for Division I-A games Saturday. His 99-yard kickoff return for a touchdown in the second quarter was the longest that day.

In honor of his accomplishment, AT&T has donated $400 to the NCAA Foundation's Degree-Completion Scholarship Program, bringing total contributions to this fund by AT&T to $368,000. Neasman will receive an engraved plaque in recognition of his achievement.

Wildcat strong safety Jarrod Cooper was named the Big 12 Defensive Player of the Week. Cooper had 14 tackles (nine unassisted), along with two tackles for a loss. He also recorded his first sack of the season.

K-State place kicker Martin Gramatica has been named one of the 16 finalists for the first-ever Mosi Tatupu Special Teams Award, which will be presented to the best NCAA Division I-A special teams player.

Gramatica has the highest field-goal percentage (16-17, .941) among the top-40 field goal kickers in the nation. He leads the Big 12, and is tied for the national lead, with two field goals per game. Saturday against Kansas he became K-State's all-time leading scorer. He is also one of 20 semifinalists for the 1997 Lou Groza collegiate place-kicker award.

A winner will be named Dec. 8 and honored Jan. 18 at the Hooters Hula Bowl Maui All-Star Football Classic.

Other Big 12 players among the finalists are returner Dane Johnson of Texas Tech, punter Shane Lechler of Texas A&M, and coverage specialists Brock Olivo of Missouri and Ryan Sutter of Colorado.

CROSS COUNTRY TEAMS TO COMPETE IN DISTRICT MEET

The K-State cross country teams will compete in the District V Championships on Saturday in Ames, Iowa. This is the final scheduled meet of the season for the Cats.

The men's team is coming off a ninth-place finish in the Big 12 meet Nov. 1 in Stillwater, Okla., while the women finished seventh.

K-STATE FANS SET A RECORD

K-State has already set a new single-season attendance record for football. It would take 43,319 tickets to break last season's record of 42,980 people per game. Ticket office manager Carol Adolph said the record is safe, since K-State uses ticket sales instead of the number of people that walk through the gates to determine attendance figures. Even if people don't show up because of bad weather, a record will be set.

"It'll be about the same as last week," Adolph said. "We've already sold enough tickets to break the record."

BOWL REPS TO BE AT GAME

Having clinched a bowl berth, the Wildcats are receiving visits from bowl officials.

It has been confirmed that officials from the Holiday Bowl will attend Saturday's game, and officials from the Fiesta Bowl will also will be lilely to attend.

This would be a second visit for the Fiesta Bowl officials. Officials were also in attendance for the Texas A&M game Oct. 18, as were Alamo Bowl officials. Cotton Bowl officials have also made visits to K-State.

SENIOR DAY

Saturday is the final home game for K-State's seniors. There will be a ceremony before the game announcing each of them. This year's senior class includes Demetric Denmark, Jerome Evans, Jarrett Grosdidier, Chris Hess, Kendyl Jacox, Mike Lawrence, Bill Molitor, Monty Spiller, Casey Wehrman, Todd Weiner, J.W. Wight and Jesse Woodard.

"It means a lot to them," Coach Bill Snyder said. "It's their last time here with these fans in this stadium, so it's a special day and a special tribute to them."

Lynch MOB

Nickname used for inspiration, does not offend players

SUN DEE MILLS
sports editor

Sports Illustrated readers browsing through the Oct. 27 issue found K-State on page 22. Under "This Week's Sign That the Apocalypse Is Upon Us," this week's comment read, "The Kansas State defense has nicknamed itself the Lynch Mob."

The nickname has negative connotations because of its definition. Lynching is historically known as murdering by mob action without lawful trial, as defined by Webster's. African-Americans were lynched often during the years before and after the Civil War. But the term originated from Charles Lynch, a Virginia planter and patriot who, during the American Revolution, led an irregular court formed to punish Loyalists.

Perhaps it's not quite proper and polite, but then neither is the game of football, Coach Bill Snyder said.

"A lot of phrases are used in football. It's an aggressive sport," Snyder said. "I can see how some things that are said are viewed as inappropriate, and I'm sure if it strongly offended people, we would cease to refer to it."

The nickname, while only becoming public knowledge recently, has been around since 1991, Snyder said.

"It is something that the players in 1991 formulated," Snyder said. "It was a black player (defensive back William Price in 1991) who came up with that name. There were no racial connotations connected to it."

Although the "mob" has become so prolific and so successful in the Big 12 and the nation as of late, defensive coordinator Mike Stoops said his brother Bob, ex-Wildcat coach and defensive coordinator at Florida, would know more about the origin of the nickname.

"My brother Bobby was here when the concept of our present defense got started," Stoops said. "It's not been vocally spoken about in the press until the last four or five years, since we've developed into a good defensive football team."

Stoops said it simply refers to the style of defense the team wants to play, and nothing more.

"I think that people are missing the point about the whole thing, and the point is that the 'Lynch Mob' is an attitude that inspires them to play," Stoops said. "I think too much is made of it."

Snyder agreed, saying it is merely an adjective, not a personal statement.

"With the team, it is really approached as an attitude, an aggressive, attacking style of defense,"

Colorado game not just another game for seniors

SAM FELSENFELD
staff writer

K-State's senior football players have one more chance to play at KSU Stadium in their careers on Saturday, when the Wildcats take on Colorado.

The seniors plan to play tough, physical football and wear down the Buffaloes to beat them for the first time since 1984.

But it could be Kleenex time.

When the seniors step off the field Saturday, they'll never step back on.

"I keep telling myself I ain't gonna cry when I go out there. I know that," senior center Kendyl Jacox said. "But I've seen some people that you wouldn't expect to shed tears, shed tears."

Jacox is aware of the pressure the pressure to beat Colorado and the pressure not to cry. He stands in at 6-foot-1, 320 pounds. He's a big guy, and big guys. aren't supposed to cry.

But he'll be prepared if he loses the battle against tears.

"If I did cry, they wouldn't see my tears," he said. "I keep the shield on."

In addition to Jacox, the Cats will lose three other starters after the season. Left tackle Todd Weiner, defensive tackle Jerome Evans and cornerback Demetric Denmark will all play their final game at KSU Stadium on Saturday.

"It's kind of emotional, as far as it being your last game," Denmark said. "But actually, I really don't know how I'm gonna feel until the day comes."

Also, several second-stringers will play in front of K-State's fans for the final time. Tight end Jarrett Grosdidier, running back Mike Lawrence, fullback Matt Gangwish, linebacker Casey Wehrman and strong safety Monty Spiller will wear home jerseys for the final time.

Although playing at home for the final time will be tough, Lawrence could have one of the greatest going-out parties in K-State history.

For starters, Saturday's crowd will be the largest ever at KSU Stadium. The attendance record is 44,284, but there have already been more than that many tickets sold.

Also, the Cats could beat Colorado for the first time since 1984. K-State hasn't come closer than a 16-16 tie in 1993, but they're favored to win by 10 points Saturday.

And Lawrence, with a solid performance, could become K-State's greatest all-time running back. He already has the school record for rushing yardage in a game, gaining 252 against Iowa State last season. If he gains 117

K-State must beat Colorado to keep ranking, respect

VIEWPOINT

SUN DEE MILLS

Flashback: Oct. 18, 1997.

Wildcat fans buzzed about their No. 23 K-State team taking on No. 13 Texas A&M's vaunted rushing attack, led by running backs Sirr Parker and Dante Hall. A&M also had two quarterbacks ranked in high numbers for their passing efficiency. The Aggies were No. 14 in the country in total offense and No. 7 in total defense.

What happened? The Cats manhandled them, holding the Aggies rushing attack to minus 35 yards and 125 yards through the air. Meanwhile, the Cats ran up 420 yards in total offense, and quarterback/running back Michael Bishop wasn't the main provider of the rushing yardage as he had been the game before against Missouri.

Bishop, with a bum ankle, got pass-happy in the pocket and completed 10-of-21 passes for 173 yards, the most he'd passed all season.

All this might be history, but it is important to this weekend's game against Colorado for one reason: once again, the Cats have something to prove.

Going into the A&M game, the Cats had been beaten soundly by Nebraska and were one-point underdogs to the Aggies. If the Cats needed a win against a ranked team to attain legitimacy, this was the one.

Granted, the Cats are facing a luckless, unranked Colorado team whose record doesn't closely resemble the Buffaloes' teams of the recent past, but keep these things in mind:

• Like Nebraska, none of the players on this team know what it's like to beat Colorado (the Cats have not won this game since 1984, but there was a 16-16 tie at KSU Stadium in 1993). More than any year prior, the Cats have the talent and the opportunity to win this game, but without a doubt, the mentality of seeing a winning score on the board must be there.

• Against A&M, K-State coaches called some brilliant plays (such as the first-quarter, on-side kick), surprising the Aggies and taking them out of their game. To help win the game 38-6 in '84, K-State returned an on-side kickoff for a touchdown. More of the same will be necessary to get the Cats' confidence up.

• Need another confidence booster? The present line favoring the Cats is wavering between 9.5 and 10 points. On paper, the Buffs are an average team compared with the Husker and Aggie teams the Cats have already faced. But football isn't played on paper (although that football-made-out-of-paper game is fun, but don't do it in class).

Any Cat player will tell you the No. 112 Kansas offense was better than he expected, and Hawk running back Eric Vann can move. Plus, the Buffs are in the same bowl, er, boat as the Hawks. They need one win for a bowl invite, and it's either the Cats in Manhattan or the Huskers at Folsom Field. Which do they think will be easier? Maybe the Buffs should talk to Missouri.

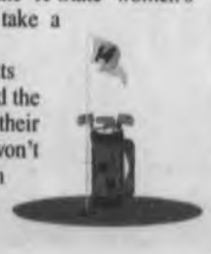
• KSU Stadium will need to be louder than the Huskers' Memorial Stadium and A&M's Kyle Field put together. The Cats and the Buffs have traditionally played tightly at Wagner Field. In 1991, the Buffs held out to win 10-0.

The tie occurred in 1993 and the Buffs rallied with two touchdowns in the final two minutes to win 27-17 in 1995, their last visit to Manhattan. With the crowd being such an important 12th man, noise less than deafening will be unacceptable.

• It's a must-win. With Colorado falling to A&M and Mizzou (teams the Cats dominated), it's a matter of taking care of business, senior tight end Jarrett Grosdidier said. "It's collectively known that this week is really big. We know how close we are to doing something really special this season," Grosdidier said. "It's something we need to do, not just something we want to do." Couldn't have said it better myself.

• It's personal. Especially to players involved in that '95 game, like junior linebacker Travis Ochs. "They got a lot of yards off of us, and there was a lot of talking," Ochs said. "It's just one that's always stuck with me."

• Although Colorado comes in with its worst record in a while at this point in the season (5-4), it's still a winning one. Plus, the Buffs have won three of their past four games. "Colorado is still Colorado," Grosdidier said. "We haven't beaten them. To overlook them because of their record would be insane." Once again, well put.



With their reputation on the line yet again this season on ABC regional television, the Cats need to go out and show they deserve to be exactly what they are: the No. 10/8 team in the nation. The Cats need to show the Holiday Bowl and the possible Fiesta Bowl reps in attendance that they would give as good a show over winter break as they'll give against the Buffs. And although it won't be easy, the Cats will do it.

Women's golf team ends fall portion of season after great start

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

With the weather turning colder, it's time for the K-State women's golf team to take a break.

The Wildcats have completed the fall portion of their schedule and won't return to action until late February.

K-State started the season off at the Chip-N-Club Invitational in Lincoln, Neb. After one round of play they were in second place with a score of 301. They followed with rounds of 313 and 312 and finished third out of nine teams in their inaugural tournament of the year. Only conference rivals Missouri and Nebraska finished ahead of K-State.

All five Wildcat golfers finished in the top 30.

"We had a great start," K-State coach Kristi Knight said. "It was a tournament low, a record for K-State women."

The Cats then traveled to Boulder for the Colorado Invitational. They finished fourth out of 13 teams there, again trailing only conference rivals Nebraska, Missouri and Iowa State.

K-State's next tournament was the Big 12 Preview in Columbia, Mo. The Cats finished 11th, 69 strokes off the lead.

Knight said the entire team struggled.

"We got off to a great start this year, and we had high expectations for this tournament," she said. "But we made a lot of mistakes, and we also had some bad luck."

The Cats recovered and had their best showing of the year in the Marilynn Smith Invitational in Wichita. K-State finished 12 shots behind first-place Kansas to finish second. Jane Yi shot a 228 to finish third individually, two shots off the pace. Edie Murdoch and Ann Slater also finished in the top 15.

K-State finished its season at the Roadrunner Invitational in Las Cruces, N.M. The Cats finished in 12th place out of 19 teams, 51 shots behind first-place New Mexico State.

The Cats will play five more tournaments in the spring, concluding with the Big 12 Championship in Norman, Okla., April 24-26.

IRAQ

Egypt insisted on language affirming the territorial integrity and independence of Iraq.

The council suspended its consultations for about 90 minutes while the Egyptian-requested paragraph was inserted into the final draft.

Iraq issued its order to expel American inspectors after five council members — France, Russia, China, Egypt and Kenya — abstained on a resolution last month threatening a travel ban.

U.S. and British diplomats believe Iraqi President Saddam Hussein saw the abstentions as a sign of divisions in the council and sought to exploit them by moving against the American inspectors.

Iraq's deputy prime minister, Tariq Aziz, admitted Tuesday that his efforts to fend off council action had failed. Aziz flew to New York on Monday to press Iraq's demand that the United Nations agree to reduce the percentage of Americans on the inspection teams, stop U.S U-2 spy flights and provide a timetable for the end of sanctions.

After meeting with council President Qin Huasun of China, Aziz said he had not received any promises of change in the council's position.

"If you don't have a change in the position of the Security Council, you cannot expect a change on the position of Iraq," Aziz said.

Aziz has met privately with ambassadors of France, China and Russia, the permanent council members most sympathetic to Baghdad.

Diplomatic sources said the envoys told him they could do little to argue Iraq's case as long as Baghdad defied U.N. orders. For the eighth time in nine days, Iraq banned an inspection team Tuesday because it included Americans.

The inspectors are in Iraq to determine whether Baghdad has complied with U.N. orders issued at the end of the Persian Gulf War requiring that Hussein destroy all long-range missiles and weapons of mass destruction. That is the main condition for the council to lift the sanctions.

The Iraqis claim the Americans are delaying certification of compliance to keep the sanctions in place.

The chief U.N. weapons inspector, Richard Butler, denied Iraqi allegations of undue U.S. influence on his team. Butler said Tuesday that his U.N. Special Commission on Iraq has a staff of 180 people of 35 nationalities working in Baghdad, Bahrain and New York.

The largest percentage — 32 percent — is Chilean. Americans account for 14 percent; Britons 11 percent; New Zealanders 9 percent; Iraqis 6 percent; and Australians 5 percent, he said.

But Aziz said those figures do not reflect the extent of American involvement in the inspection program.

here, I think that would be a good investment. I don't apologize for being aggressive about this."

Part of the reason Urick was so adamant about the referendum was the importance of football to the athletic department.

"Football is the engine that pulls this whole train," he said. "We try to make as much money as we can so we can have the best athletic department we can."

Most of the students in the forum, however, were concerned about just how much money the athletic department was receiving.

"What we need is something guaranteeing that this expansion will somehow benefit the students as a whole," said Amy Spear, senior in social work. "And give this something a number so that we can see it."

Other students said it was unfair to have all students pay for the expansion.

"I love football. I love going to the games," MacDougall said. "But I would not expect someone to pay for me to go to the games. All of (the privilege fees) are coming out of my pocket, Joe's pocket, my dad's pocket. It's not fair to have them pay for me."

Snyder said. "If it's offensive, it's something that people allow themselves to be offended by. It's been an 'in-house' thing in the past."

Because the term was never intended for publication, none of the players thought much about it. Cornerback Demetric Denmark said he's not offended by it.

"I don't look at it like that. It's not a race thing at all," Denmark said. "It's just a title that promotes the energy that comes out of us. It's all aggressive, about us just going out there, just how we are as a defense. That's all that it is."

The experience of playing in this defense for three years has led junior linebacker Travis Ochs to see the nickname as a mental boost.

"We just go out there and get after people and really attack them no matter who they are," Ochs said. "The name itself has just been passed down. There's no real meaning to it, just a mentality and an experience."

Ochs said it was amazing that the in-house term has become an issue, especially because of the varied backgrounds of the Wildcat players.

"If people think about it, they've got to realize that the name came about with people of all colors and races," Ochs said. "If you really think about it, it has nothing to do with that at all."

The properness of the term lies in the eyes of the beholder, Snyder said. Stoops agreed, saying no one has ever promoted the nickname before except the players.

"It's something our players developed themselves," Stoops said. "It's not something we've wanted to promote as a special thing. It's been blown out of proportion."

yards, he'll pass J.J. Smith to become No. 1 all-time at K-State.

However, he'd rather that people didn't remember him for having the most prolific career in the 102-year history of K-State football.

"I want to be remembered as a player that would do anything to help his team win, regardless if it was at receiver, running back, blocking, running, pass-catching — a player that can do anything at any given point at any time in the game," Lawrence said.

"Returning punts, returning kickoffs. Just a player that had confidence in what he could do. When he got in there, he just did his job. Didn't argue or talk back or worry about anything. Didn't worry about how much playing time I got. When I got my chance I just did my job," he said.

While Lawrence is chasing down Smith's record, other players don't have that opportunity. But they still have visions of what a highlight film of their final game at KSU Stadium would include.

"For me personally, it would be playing well and maybe catching a touchdown pass," Grosdidier said. "But whatever I can do to help the team win would be fine."

A win over Colorado would give K-State nine wins for the fifth consecutive season. The record crowd would probably go crazy, the Cats would probably impress the Fiesta Bowl representatives who might be on hand, and K-State would probably be all but assured of going to a significant bowl game.

However, it would still be a somber day for some.

"It's gonna be an emotional point in my life. The years pass. Last year and the year before — you take for granted that next year I'll be coming out, I'll walk on the field, I'll play again," Weiner said. "I stop and think about it, and it's going to be very emotional knowing that this is the last time coming out on the field."

LOOKINGback

1940 - Walt Disney released "Fantasia." One critic called the film "as terrific as anything that has ever happened on the screen."

1946 - It was on this day that the first drive-up banking facility opened at the Exchange National Bank in Chicago. There were 10 teller windows with slide-out drawers.

1984 - Spacewalker Joseph Allen became the first astronaut to rescue a satellite as the Discovery space shuttle made a $35 million rescue.

1986 - For the first time in NBA history, both head coaches were absent from the game. K.C. Jones and Don Nelson were both too sick to coach the Boston-Milwaukee game this night. It became the 44th straight home victory for the Boston Celtics, as they beat the Milwaukee Bucks 124-116. So who needs a coach?

STARSHIP TROOPERS: NOT for the squeamish

JOHN FRANSON
staff writer

Ten years ago, director Paul Verhoeven first assaulted U.S. box offices with his science fiction shoot-em-up "RoboCop."

I remember the movie well. I was only 11, and the movie was R-rated, but my dad figured that with a cartoonish title like "RoboCop," it couldn't be that bad.

Big mistake. "RoboCop" was one of the bloodier films to have come down the line, and images from the movie haunted me for the rest of the night. I was shaken and numb. My dad said had he known it was so violent, he wouldn't have taken me.

Many parents will say the same thing after taking their kids to the cartoonishly titled "Starship Troopers." Verhoeven and much of the "RoboCop" team reunited for the film, and the result is, by no small coincidence, one of the most graphically violent movies ever. Think "RoboCop," multiply the carnage by 100, and you'll be close.

Not surprisingly, the plot of "Starship Troopers," based on the book by sci-fi author Robert A. Heinlein, is video-game simple.

The setting is the distant future. Women and men have become equals in every way. They play contact sports together, they go to battle together, they even shower in groups together (which we are shown). On the downside, they can't be citizens of the state unless they join the military to fight an alien race of giant "Bugs." The creatures are somehow hurling meteorites at the earth — which apparently contain the larvae of the species — in an attempt to eradicate life and colonize the planet.

Our heroes, a gang of bouncy, happy, model-attractive teen-agers, are more than willing to join the military. Johnny Rico (Casper Van Dien) joins only to be close to his perpetually smiling girlfriend, Carmen Ibanez (Denise Richards). He becomes fully committed, though, when a Bug meteorite hits his home city, Buenos Aires, wiping the city — and his parents — off the planet.

From there it's nothing but shooting and dying. That is, lots of shooting, and lots and LOTS of dying. We are treated, in unflinching detail, to hundreds of people being impaled, dismembered, beheaded, ripped apart, eaten, burned alive and otherwise folded, spindled and mutilated. One of the first shots in the film is of a man getting sliced in half. Along the way we get to see the result of previous Bug attacks, in the form of hundreds of realistic, mutilated human corpses.

The reason for this massacre is the humans' stupidity. They evidently forgot about the successful air tactics of the Gulf War, instead sending squadrons of ground troops with largely ineffectual machine guns to planets colonized by the Bugs. The film's publicity reported that the production set an all-time record for the most ammunition ever used in the shooting of a motion picture, but the Bugs barely notice. They greatly outnumber the humans and have razor-sharp pincers and legs, wings, spraying magma and sheer power on their side.

The filmmakers seem to take sadistic delight in picking off humans one after another. The only things breaking the tedium are a slew of truly amazing special effects (funded by more than $100 million) and a sex scene between Johnny Rico and Dizzy Flores (Dina Meyer), the powerful woman who has harbored a crush on Johnny since their high school days.

There are also intermittent government broadcasts, very similar to the TV broadcasts in "RoboCop," intended to recruit potential "citizens." These pieces are so slick and over-the-top they can only be construed as a farce of military propaganda, but they clash with the generally non-farcical nature of the battle scenes. Any message Heinlein's book had is lost in the morass of carnage.

The main characters are so sketchy that we don't really care what happens to them or anyone else. The humans eventually win, of course, but not without conveniently setting us up for a sequel. It's unclear how they'll outdo the violence and gore of this film.

Parents would be well advised to think twice about taking their children to this movie. Better to start them out with something a bit more tame. Compared to "Starship Troopers," "RoboCop" might be an adequate choice.

Atari Teenage Riot/Asian Dub Foundation split picture disc
(Damaged Goods UK)

I'm a huge Atari Teenage Riot fan, so I had to grab this as soon as I laid eyes on it. It's an import, so I had to pay a nice chunk of change for it, but it's worth it. Plus, it's a picture disc, so it looks really cool as it spins around on the turntable.

Atari Teenage Riot takes over the A side with a track titled "Paranoid." I first thought it was a Black Sabbath cover, but I was quickly proven wrong.

It's an insanely fast, crushing song that, in typical ATR fashion, mixes over driven, distorted jungle beats with sick, sampled hardcore guitar riffs and screaming vocals.

The vocals are distorted, but not on purpose. They were recorded on a 4-track tape recorder in vocalist Hanin Elias' apartment. It sounds like they just completely red-lined the meters with each scream.

There's also an unexpected ambient bit in the middle that is crushed by an evil guitar riff.

There may be techno beats on this, but just try to dance to this. You'll break your back trying. The song self-destructs into a smoldering wreck, with a cool false ending.

Just as you go to lift the needle to flip the record over, programmer/vocalist Alec Empire screams, "Paranoid!"

ATR can do no wrong.

Asian Dub Foundation uses side B to kick out "Free Satpal Ram," a cool hip-hop influenced track about an Indian man who was sentenced to life in prison for killing an attacker in self-defense.

The easy comparison would be to Rage Against The Machine, but that's not really fair. ADF's vocalist's rapping style is more forceful and angrier than Zack De La Rocha any day.

The beats are really catchy on this song, and I like the guitars and violin loop.

Because it comes from England, this picture disc is expensive but worth it. If you find it, don't hesitate to purchase it.

The Get Up Kids/Coalesce split single (Second Nature)

All I have to say about this single is, "Wow."

Second Nature Recordings has paired up two of Kansas City, Mo.'s best bands to share a slab of vinyl.

The Get Up Kids tackle a Coalesce song, and Coalesce takes on a Get Up Kids song on each side.

The Get Up Kids cover "Harvest Of Maturity" and change the title to "Burned Bridges."

There is no resemblance to the original version at all. The Get Up Kids completely transform it from a harsh hardcore song to a melodic, driving, upbeat emo song.

It is a wonderful take on an already great song.

Toward the end of the song, the Kids add a bit of heaviness to the song.

Wow.

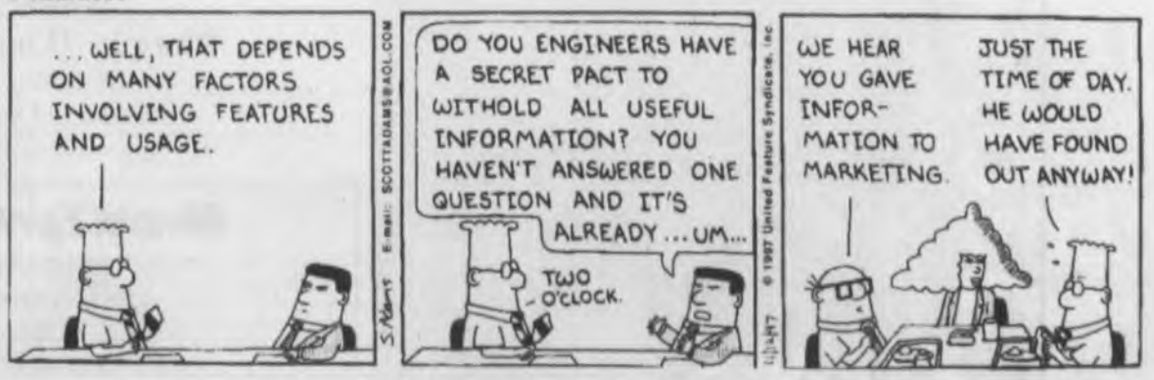
Coalesce rips The Get Up Kids' "Second Place" a new one.

The title is changed to "I'm Giving Up On This One," and amid all the chaos and destruction, the emo underpinnings are still audible.

There's still a hint of melody underneath it all.

Coalesce adds its trademarks to the song with Sean Ingram's throat-shredding vocals and Jes Steineger's crushing, evil guitar noise.

The breakdown is a killer. The crushing, lurching rhythm beat me senseless and left me begging for more.



Coalesce's song is over way too fast. I want more from both bands.

This single is a must-have. Do whatever you must to get it. Act fast though because it's on limited-edition, clear-orange vinyl.

Technology stops addition of cable channel

▸HALO ATTEMPTS TO GET Univision added by TCI, but efforts may be futile.

LANDON TRAWNY
staff writer

A campus group's effort to get Univision, an all-Spanish channel carried by TCI of Kansas, may have to wait for advances in technology, by both the cable system and the channel.

Univision is a cable channel that broadcasts news, sitcoms, dramas and other educational programs entirely in Spanish.

This semester, the Hispanic American Leadership Organization has continued to push to add Univision to Manhattan's cable line-up.

Richard Cofer, general manager of the Manhattan/Ogden Cable System, said TCI of Kansas has no plans to add Univision.

Cofer said under the systems's analog technology, TCI can carry only 40 channels.

With this technology, TCI would need to drop a channel to make room for Univision.

"If we added it, it would need to appeal to a broader audience," he said.

Douglas Benson, associate professor of Spanish and HALO adviser, said he is surprised Univision is not carried in the Manhattan area. He said the number of Spanish-speaking residents in Manhattan is small now, but it is growing.

"We're getting more people from Garden City, Dodge City and Kansas City," Benson said.

Benson said he believes Univision would benefit the 500-600 Hispanic students who attend K-State, along with the more than 1,000 students who are enrolled in Spanish language classes.

"It would be very useful for learning," he said.

Art Marquez, director of affiliate sales for Univision and Galavision in Los Angeles, said the situation in Manhattan isn't uncommon.

> If we keep doing what we're doing, I think Manhattan will get it.
> • Leo Prieto
> HALO president

"A lot of schools want Univision," Marquez said. "But cable operators have the final decision."

Univision is now broadcast in the Kansas City, Salina, Topeka and Wichita markets, along with smaller markets in western Kansas.

Cofer said TCI is surveying customers in the Manhattan area to find out what they want.

He said the research will help TCI determine which channels are popular, which ones are not and which ones viewers want added.

Leo Prieto, junior in pre-medicine and president of HALO, said HALO members have made copies of the TCI survey and passed them out in classes. The surveys are helpful, and the response has been good, he said.

"The surveys will let people voice their concerns," Prieto said.

Prieto said HALO has gathered more than 300 signatures on a petition to get Univision carried by TCI.

"Our goal is to get 1,000 signatures, but we'll keep on doing it even after we reach our goal," Prieto said.

Benson said another petition is being passed among faculty and staff in the Department of Modern Languages.

Heather Crist, marketing manager of Univision in Chicago, said Univision is trying to help wherever possible, including lending a hand to the HALO at K-State.

"We are sending them information on the Hispanic market to show how important it is and how it's growing," Crist said.

Despite the support for Univision, the all-Spanish channel might have another obstacle — technology.

Cofer said TCI is planning to update its system by adding a digitally compressed format alongside the analog format.

TCI now broadcasts only with an analog format.

The addition of the digitally compressed format is both a blessing and a thorn in Univision's side.

The new digital format will double the size of channel space available in the Manhattan area. However, Cofer said, Univision is available only on the analog format, which cannot be broadcast digitally.

This means that unless it goes digital, Univision will compete with other analog-only channels for limited space on the analog portion of TCI.

TCI is already preparing for digitalization, Cofer said, and expects the switch to be made after the beginning of next year.

Annette Salinas, marketing assistant to Univision in Chicago, said Univision is planning to go digital, but she isn't sure when the change would be made.

Crist said the best thing students and residents can do now is to let TCI know which channels they want.

Cofer said the best way for people to voice their opinions is to write them on the portion of the bill people send to TCI every month.

That way, TCI has people's concerns, questions and opinions better documented and can serve the community better, he said. Cofer also recommended people write letters and drop them off at TCI's main office in Manhattan.

Although the road looks difficult, Prieto said, he and the people who are working to get Univision carried in Manhattan are optimistic. The foundation of support Univision is gaining in Manhattan eventually will pay off, he said.

"If we keep doing what we're doing, I think Manhattan will get it," Prieto said.

Federal judge apologizes for lying about murder

▸RELATIVES OF BLACK YOUTH accept judge's apology 24 years later.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Relatives of a black youth killed by whites in 1963 have accepted an apology from a California federal judge who publicly lied about being the victim's brother.

U.S. District Judge James Ware of San Jose, Calif., expressed his regret to relatives of Virgil Ware during a weekend meeting in Birmingham, Mark White, a lawyer for the family, said Tuesday.

The judge flew to Alabama after asking for the meeting Sunday with the victim's real brothers, James Ware Jr. and Melvin Ware, White said.

"The result of this very candid and moving discussion was an acceptance of an apology by Judge Ware to my clients and their family," said White.

White would not comment further, saying it was "impossible to relate the details of these events in a few words or a few moments."

The judge, nominated by President Clinton for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, claimed in speeches and in interviews to be the brother of Virgil Ware who was shot to death by whites at age 13 on the same day four black girls died in the bombing of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church in Birmingham.

The victim's real brother, James, works for an Alabama coal-mining company.

The judge, a Birmingham native, admitted last week he had inserted himself into the story.

He withdrew his nomination to the appellate court.

The Senate Judiciary Committee had gotten word of a possible deception and contacted The Birmingham News, which reported the story Thursday.

Earlier this year the paper recounted Virgil Ware's killing, quoting his real brother in the story and printing a family picture.

That story caught the attention of U.S. District Judge U.W. Clemon of Birmingham, who had seen Judge Ware describe the 1963 shooting on C-SPAN last year.

Clemon then contacted the James Ware of Birmingham, which led to the unraveling of Judge Ware's story.

Virgil Ware was killed by two 16-year-old Eagle Scouts after they had attended a white supremacist rally. Michael Lee Farley and Larry Joe Sims each got seven months in jail and two years of probation on manslaughter convictions.

New papers might bring Clinton under scrutiny

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Imprisoned Whitewater figure James McDougal claims a recently discovered 1982 cashier's check payable to Bill Clinton was a loan from McDougal's S&L and that the two men agreed to conceal the transaction.

Clinton has testified under oath that he never got a loan from the institution. McDougal said the cashier's check and other newly found documents contradict Clinton and provide a big break for Whitewater prosecutors.

"They're going to hang them with the documents that they got," McDougal said in a telephone interview with the Associated Press. "It certainly proves the chief executive perjured himself when he said he never obtained a loan from Madison Guaranty."

McDougal, who defended Clinton before deciding to cooperate with Whitewater investigators after his conviction on 18 felony counts, leveled his latest allegations against his old Arkansas friend Monday from a federal prison medical center in Fort Worth, Texas.

A 1982 cashier's check payable to Clinton for $27,600 was among thousands of pages of long-missing documents from McDougal's savings and loan discovered last March in a tornado-damaged car abandoned nearly a decade ago near Little Rock, Ark.

The check wasn't endorsed by Clinton, who testified last year he never borrowed from McDougal's thrift.

McDougal said the cashier's check represented the proceeds of a loan to Clinton from McDougal's Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan, and it was used to pay off a Whitewater debt at the other financial institution McDougal owned, Madison Bank & Trust.

McDougal said Clinton had become worried about having his name on the loan for $27,600, and so the obligation was moved out of Clinton's name.

He said the loan to Clinton was repaid by someone other than him or Clinton. The repayment was followed by a series of related transactions culminating in a fraudulent, federally backed loan for $300,000 that was the focus of last year's Whitewater trial. A jury convicted McDougal, ex-wife Susan and then-Arkansas Gov. Jim Guy Tucker.

"Mr. McDougal has never told this story before, no loan documents support it, and it is flatly contradicted by the contemporary bookkeeping entry of his own accountant," the president's lawyer, Kendall, said Tuesday. "Given his own previous testimony under oath and his present circumstances, Mr. McDougal is hardly a paragon of credibility."

A prison spokeswoman, Sue Beasley, said McDougal appeared Thursday in front of a disciplinary hearing officer and was ordered into "disciplinary segregation" for seven days and had privileges, including telephone contact, restricted. She said the punishment followed McDougal's refusal to provide a urine sample randomly requested for contraband testing.

McDougal said he was unable to give the sample because of the medications he takes for various health problems.

Clothing donation spurs Klein visit

▸ FASHION DESIGNER donates 50 artifacts to Justin Hall collection

LAURA POPE
staff writer

Calvin Klein, known for his perfume and designer clothing, will be at K-State later this month.

Klein recently donated 50 clothing artifacts to the K-State Historic Costume Collection in Justin Hall.

Mitchell Strauss, professor and head of the Department of Clothing, Textiles and Interior Design, said the donation was made possible through a mini-grant prepared by his office.

"Calvin Klein asked schools to put together materials describing their current collections, what was being done with it and how it is used," Strauss said.

The mini-grant was then submitted, and the selected schools were contacted.

Strauss said some of the other schools selected include the University of Minnesota, Colorado State University and the Fashion Institute of Technology.

"We were in fairly select company," he said. "We were considered one of the leading marketing/design programs in the U.S."

The clothing artifacts will include samples of day and evening wear from spring, summer and resort seasons for both men and women. The clothing will range from the mid-1980s to the present.

"Our current collection is deficient in that area. It's a nice addition," Strauss said.

The new addition to the collection will be preserved for future generations to study. It will also be used in apparel design and marketing classes to study.

Janice Huck, associate professor in apparel design, said there are a number of ways her students use the Historic Costume Collection.

"It gives students an opportunity to look at the garments as a source of inspiration," she said. "Also, they are good for students to see how the garments were constructed."

Huck said the garments will likely be displayed for general viewing purposes as well.

"Students can see how a sophisticated company, like Calvin Klein, puts together a line for sale in the market place," Strauss said.

"We will likely use it in a case study context."

Jodi Honeman, senior in apparel and textile marketing, said Klein's generosity is appreciated.

"This addition is wonderful," she said.

"It gives students some current clothing from a leading designer to study."

Kansas nursing home fire claims life

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SOUTH HUTCHINSON, Kan. — Trapped elderly residents pounded on the windows of their rooms and screamed for help as firefighters arrived early Tuesday to put out a nursing home fire that killed one person and injured six others.

"There were people beating on the windows," said Bill Guy, Reno County Emergency Management director. "It was so smoke-filled. The whole hallway was full of smoke."

The nursing home did not have a sprinkler system.

The fire, discovered when an alarm sounded about 2:30 a.m., was caused by careless smoking by a male resident, who escaped unharmed after yelling to other residents that there was a fire, said Reno County Fire Capt. Doug Tallant. The resident had been flicking ashes into a trash can when the blaze began, Tallant said.

Resident Bernice Stout, 83, was pronounced dead at the Hutchinson Hospital after the fire at the Pheasant Acres Retirement Center in South Hutchinson, a central Kansas town of about 2,400 next to Hutchinson. She was found sitting in a chair in her room and had suffered smoke inhalation, but her exact cause of death was unavailable.

The retirement center was operating legally without sprinklers because it was built before such systems were required by law, Tallant said.

Rescuers got everyone out of the building, carrying some through windows to avoid the thick smoke. Tallant said 33 residents and two employees were evacuated.

> "It was so smoke-filled. The whole hallway was full of smoke."
> • Bill Guy, county emergency management director

Resident Sherri Straughter, 45, was in satisfactory condition Tuesday at Hutchinson Hospital after suffering from smoke inhalation.

Four other residents were taken to Via Christi Regional Medical Center's St. Francis campus in Wichita. Donald Cummins, 72, and Louise Bell, 73, were in critical condition with burns and smoke inhalation. Elmer Schwartz, 81, and Marie Kaiser, 82, were in serious condition after suffering smoke inhalation.

Many other residents were treated at the scene.

An employee also was hospitalized Tuesday in Hutchinson, but her family asked that no information be released.

Evacuated residents were temporarily housed at Silver Oaks nursing home next door. The two buildings are located behind a wheat field outside of South Hutchinson.

One resident, 86-year-old Dorothy Stark, said she had worried that residents who smoked in the nursing home would someday cause a fire.

She was sleeping when she awoke to a loud noise and flickering lights. A staff member helped her walk out of the building to safety.

"They ought to make it nonsmoking, period," said Stark's daughter, Joyce Ploog, 57.

Residents are allowed to smoke in the nursing home, said Joyice Sykes, administrator for both nursing homes. She wouldn't say whether the nursing home planned to change its smoking policy, or what would happen to the displaced residents.

Sykes said the alarm and safety equipment functioned properly.

"We also express our deepest remorse and regret at the loss of one of our residents," Sykes read from a prepared statement.

A nurse, who declined to identify herself, said officials had not decided whether officials would reopen part of the Pheasant Acres.

One wing was badly damaged, and the rest of the nursing home suffered smoke damage.

It was surrounded by police tape Tuesday afternoon, and residents crowded the lobby of the Silver Oaks facility waiting to find out what would happen next.

Standing outside Silver Oaks, Mary Southards said her mother, Opal Aberg, 77, was a little shaken up by the experience but was not hurt. Nursing home officials were monitoring her blood pressure.

"She was crying a little bit when I saw her," Southards said.

Howard Scott, 70, of Hutchinson, drove by the nursing home with his sister Tuesday morning. He was thinking of moving to Pheasant Acres before the fire.

"I don't think I'll move out here now," he said.

Ruling allows victims to sue publishers of hit man book

ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — Ruling that the right to a free press doesn't cover a how-to-kill book, a federal appeals panel said the families of a hired killer's victims can sue the publisher of a book that he consulted.

A three-judge panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals denied First Amendment protection to "Hit Man: A Technical Manual for Independent Contractors," saying publisher Paladin Press knew it would be used by murderers.

"The Supreme Court has never protected as abstract advocacy speech so explicit in its palpable entreaties to violent crime," the panel said in its ruling Monday.

The book was sold to James Edward Perry, who was convicted of killing Mildred Horn; her disabled 8-year-old son, Trevor; and the son's nurse, Janice Saunders, in Silver Spring, Md., in 1993. The women were shot between the eyes and the boy's respirator was unplugged.

Perry is on death row for the murders, and Lawrence T. Horn, Mildred Horn's former husband, was sentenced to life in prison for hiring Perry. Mildred Horn's motive was to collect $1.7 million from a malpractice settlement that her son Trevor won from a hospital after the accident that left him a quadriplegic.

Paladin has never challenged Perry's claim that he followed some of the 130-page paperback's advice.

"This decision says that if you're in the business of helping instruct murderers on how to slaughter innocent women and children, you aren't going to find any shelter in the First Amendment," said Howard Siegel, an attorney for the families.

In 1996, U.S. District Judge Alexander Williams ruled that the victims' families could not hold Paladin liable because of the First Amendment's guarantee of free speech.

CLASSIFIED AD WRITING TIPS

- List items or services first. Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
- Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
- Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Kaczynski's motive for bombings focus of ongoing Unabomber trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — The centerpiece of the Unabomber trial will be the mind of Theodore Kaczynski, the brilliant boy who turned into a technology-hating hermit embittered against everything from planes to pay phones.

With a mountain of evidence found in his Montana cabin pointing to him as the Unabomber, the trial that begins with jury selection Wednesday will focus on whether Kaczynski was a man with a "mental defect," not responsible for his actions, or prove that he's a rational, cold-blooded killer.

Kaczynski's own letters provide the raw material for both sides.

One item, a letter in which Kaczynski wrote, said "I can't wait until you die so I can spit on your corpse," suggests that the veneer of a socially concerned vigilante could well have masked childhood hatreds looking for an outlet, said Dr. Eugene Schoenfeld, a psychiatrist.

"And people will rationalize anger and violence through a cause — a greater good that justifies destruction and murder, he said."

In all, the government claims Kaczynski is behind 16 bombings that killed three people and injured 23 over 18 years.

Kaczynski now appears in court wearing a tweed sports jacket with his hair and beard trimmed, looking every bit the professor he once was.

That courtroom image is more in keeping with the bright young boy whose mother read him Scientific American on their porch in Evergreen Park, Ill. But his mother, Wanda, has said she believes her son's problems began shortly after his birth.

At nine months, Kaczynski was hospitalized with a drug reaction. He was forcibly pinned to a bed for a week, and lay virtually untouched by human hands. His mother said Kaczynski came home listless and believes her son was never the same.

After high school, the brilliant student left home for Harvard University. There, he acquired a reputation as a loner with poor hygiene who debated environmental issues long before the subject became fashionable.

Kaczynski went on to the University of Michigan for his postgraduate degrees, impressing his professors but making few connections with other students. It was much the same in 1967 when he took his first teaching post in the mathematics department of the University of California-Berkeley.

But by 1969, society had become too much for Kaczynski. He quit Berkeley and blamed his parents for his social ineptitude, bitterly criticizing them in letters home.

In 1978 — the year the Unabomber began his attacks — Kaczynski returned to the Chicago area.

"I came back to the Chicago area in May, mainly for one reason: So that I could more safely attempt to murder a scientist, businessman, or the like," he wrote.

He left Chicago for good after his brother was forced to fire him from the factory where they worked for harassing a woman he briefly dated.

Prosecutors would like to use evidence in the trial to show that Kaczynski treasured his Montana solitude so much that he resorted to violence, trashing a neighbors' cabin.

Woman on 'Jerry Springer Show' arrested

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GENEVA, N.Y. — A woman's tale on "The Jerry Springer Show" about a relationship with a 16-year-old boy has landed her in jail, charged with rape.

Dawn Marie Eaves, 24, admitted on the show last month having "a relationship" with the Geneva boy, who is the younger brother of a man who fathered one of Eaves' three children. She appeared on the show with the teen-ager and Michael Griffith, who was living with Eaves at the time.

On the show, Griffith confronted Eaves about her relationship with the 16-year-old. The pair had an argument, which led to a fistfight between Griffith and various guests.

The show drew the attention of police, who charged Eaves after they said she and the boy admitted having sex early last Thursday at her home and acknowledged sleeping together since July.

> "God only knows what effect her conduct has had in respect to these children when she's running around with a 16-year-old who happens to be an uncle of one of her young children," said prosecutor William Hart during Eaves' court appearance Monday.

The judge issued a protective order barring Eaves from having any contact with the victim. The county also took temporary custody of Eaves' children, who range in age from 2 to 5.

Eaves remained jailed Tuesday on charges of third-degree rape and endangering the welfare of a child. The rape charge, a felony, carries a maximum prison sentence of four years.

THE STADIUM EXPANSION REFERENDUM

GROWING PAINS

ALMOST NO ONE WILL DISAGREE THAT STADIUM EXPANSION IS NEEDED. HOWEVER, ONE QUESTION REMAINS.

Who will pay for it?

IT'S YOUR VOTE

WHEN: Monday and Tuesday

WHERE: K-State Student Union and Veterinary Medicine Complex

WHY: To voice your opinion on whether you support the creation of a fee to pay for more student seats in the stadium.

ANSWERS INSIDE

- How could the proposed stadium expansion help out with football player recruitment?
- How much does it cost to create material for a referendum vote, and will the vote pay off for the athletic department?
- How would stadium expansion affect the city services during weekend gridiron match ups?
- What do student senators have to say about the referendum?
- How does the KSU Foundation play into the stadium expansion referendum?
- What options exist for stadium expansion?
- What other athletic department expansions have students helped fund during the past decade?
- What do other students have to say about the stadium expansion referendum?
- Why does Students for First Things First draw a parallel between students and bankers?
- What does Athletic Director Max Urick have to say about the options?
- What factors weighed into the Collegian editorial board's decision on how to vote during the referendum?

For weeks, debate about whether students should support a privilege fee to help expand KSU Stadium has captivated campus.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has promoted its proposal.

Students against the expansion fee have made their voices heard.

Next week, the debate will end.

Monday and Tuesday's student body referendum vote on a stadium expansion privilege fee will determine whether students support the creation of a fee to pay for more student seats in the stadium.

Polling places in the K-State Student Union and Veterinary Medicine Complex will allow students to voice their opinion about a new expansion fee. A 60-percent affirmative vote would create a fee to pay for almost one-third of the approximate $11 million construction cost.

STORY BY TRAVIS D. LENKNER

Students who vote for the creation of a new fee will vote on an opinion question which asks whether students favor a $1- or 50-cent-per-credit-hour fee to pay for an increase in guaranteed student seating.

The athletic department has developed two designs for the expansion project, which is slated to be complete by the 1999 season. Both plans involve the creation of a new east-side upper deck, improvements to concession stands and restrooms, and expansion of the Dev Nelson Press Box.

Under the 50-cent-per-credit-hour fee plan, seating would be increased from almost 39,000 permanent seats to about 44,000. Students would be guaranteed 9,000 permanent student seats, instead of the current 7,500, and student ticket prices would be frozen for four years.

The $1-per-credit-hour fee plan increases seating to about 46,000 permanent seats, with 10,000 guaranteed for students. Ticket prices would be frozen and a new, 1,000-seat recent graduate section would also be created for football and basketball games. Graduates could purchase tickets at a 33-percent discount for two years after their graduation.

The referendum question to create a fee is binding. Student Senate would need a three-fourths vote to override the results. The second, opinion question, however, is not binding. The Privilege Fee Committee and ultimately Senate control the amount of the proposed fee.

Athletic Director Max Urick said public demand for quality seats is driving the expansion, which he said will happen with or without a student privilege fee. If students vote no on the referendum, they won't be part of the project, he said.

"A no vote would reflect that people don't want to participate," he said. "I would take their guidance and counsel that 7,500 seats is enough."

In recent seasons, the athletic department has exceeded its 7,500-seat guarantee and sold more than 9,000 student season tickets. Urick said a no vote on the referendum might force him to re-examine priorities.

"The demand for public tickets is pretty significant. I would certainly honor the 7,500-seat obligation we have to the students first. The priority would be to honor the obligations to students and then the public," he said.

Urick said public and student demand for tickets is high and the stadium is full. The need for an expansion is now, he said.

"The demand is now. The future is now on this," he said. "Is it life and death? No, it's not life and death, but the need is certainly there now."

Urick said student fees are only part of the project's funding. Other sources include revenue from new press box luxury suites and chair-back seats that would be built in the proposed upper deck, which would be dedicated to paying the stadium bond. Football parking revenue would also go toward the project.

Urick said the athletic department would not request fund-raising support from the KSU Foundation or other sources to pay for expansion. Alumni would already be supporting the stadium through press box and chair-back revenue, he said.

"Those monies are reflected in the sale of chair backs and suites. I don't think you're going to find people who will just make a flat contribution," he said.

Another reason for non-Foundation involvement is to keep the project from conflicting with other university priorities, Urick said.

"That's when you start competing with other Foundation projects that they have going on. I don't view the Foundation as being a viable source for funding on this project," he said. "I think they have other priorities such as Hale Library and scholarships."

Though Urick said using Foundation funds could take away from other university priorities, he said students who draw a connection between a fee for library periodicals and a fee for stadium expansion are getting the wrong idea.

"I think they're two separate issues and should be evaluated on separate needs and criteria. They should not be mixed. I think they're both legitimate needs, and they should be treated as such," Urick said. "I just don't see any mixing of them."

Urick said he understands concerns that privilege fee increases might make the total fee amount too high. However, he said he could see paying an increase for the library and for stadium expansion. That increase, if both organizations' wishes are granted, could be as high as $72 per year.

"If I had a son or daughter here, I'd probably be supportive of paying $72 extra in a year in the tuition and fees that's required to help the university function," he said.

A privilege fee to fund a portion of the project is necessary, Urick said, because ticket revenue cannot be used to fund a bond. The fee generates a stable source of income, while ticket sales can fluctuate from year to year.

But Engineering Sen. Jason Ross has developed a plan, which he says takes the burden of paying for the expansion away from the general student body and places it on those who purchase football tickets.

VOCABULARY

REFERENDUM n., a special election when student fees are used for construction costs. It must receive 60 percent of the affirmative vote before being considered before Student Senate.

PLEBISCITE n., a vote that is considered the official opinion of the student body.

PRIVILEGE FEE n., money paid by students at the beginning of each semester to fund campus organizations and services. Each full-time student paid $251 in privilege fees this semester.

BOND n., a contract between two parties that assures payment. Bonds are used to pay for capital improvements and construction costs that use student money. The amount of payment for bonds is not reviewed once it has been issued.

NON-BINDING OPINION VOTE n., a vote that does not hold a party to an agreement. Student Senate would have the ultimate decision on which funding option is chosen.

Additional ticket revenue would be used within athletics

STORY BY KELLY FURNAS

For the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, stadium expansion not only means more seats for fans, but also more revenue from ticket sales.

Bob Cavello, director of business service for the athletic department, said additional funds generated from the stadium expansion would be kept internal, going toward operational or property expenditures.

Until the referendum is voted upon, Cavello said he is unsure how much revenue will be generated from the seating.

"I don't know how many seats I'll be able to have," he said. "Will it increase revenue? Yes. But until the referendum, I won't be able to estimate how much."

Max Urick, athletic director, said he foresaw the revenue covering the increasing costs of maintaining current operations.

Cavello

"I anticipate the revenue covering the inflation of our current projects," he said. "It would help pay for items such as salary increases and an increase in extended travel."

Cavello said the revenue from ticket sales would help the athletic department meet the needs that it has trouble funding now.

"I've got about $20 million in needs each year and only $14 million to work with," he said. "We scratch and claw for the rest."

That is why, Cavello said, revenue from the stadium expansion would not necessarily go to academic projects of the university such as Hale Library.

"There are always going to be needs for the additional revenue that's going to be generated," he said. "Folks need to understand that we run on self-generated money. We never make a profit really. We put the money back in.

"Every dime we can make to let our athletes compete better for the university is money worth getting."

Urick said while the expansion could increase revenue for the athletic department, he said it was not likely to cost much more in maintainences.

"A lot of the expenses are related to mechanical things that are already in the stadium," he said. "I wouldn't anticipate a significant amount. It would be negligible."

Cavello said expanded labor would probably not factor into the costs.

The additional concessions would be contracted out, the Air Force ROTC would continue to help with clean-up and Bramlage would help out with extra ticket takers.

The athletic department might not foresee many additional costs for the expansion, but it has spent money to provide information to students concerning the stadium expansion.

Cavello estimated that the athletic department spent $5,000 for artists drawings and information fliers with facts of the expansion. The funds came from the administrative budget. Urick's estimate of the costs was $3,168.

"When we discussed the stadium expansion with Student Senate, they thought it was important that we get as much information as possible out to the students," Urick said.

"Those costs aren't really significant for the amount of information we're providing," he said.

In addition to advertising, the athletic department is also paying for the referendum itself.

To make the ballots, the athletic department will pay about $650, although it can send unused ballots back for a refund.

It will pay Computing and Network Services a fee to count the ballots.

That fee depends on the number of ballots counted.

THE SCENARIOS

Director of Intercollegiate Athletics Max Urick said a bond for the proposed $11 million expansion of KSU Stadium would likely total just more than $20 million after the costs of issuance and interest are added. The 15-year bond would require an approximate debt service of $1.4 million per year, Urick said.

Any excess money would be applied to the early retirement of the bond, Urick said. A proposed student privilege fee would end after the 15-year term of the bond or before that time if the debt is paid, he said.

Expansion could assist in recruitment

STORY BY SUN DEE MILLS

Timeliness and team spirit were just two reasons K-State football coach Bill Snyder gave for supporting the stadium expansion referendum.

"The main issue is really twofold," Snyder said. "We want to provide ample seating for the demand, and we need to respond to the timing."

Student seating has sold out two years in a row, and Snyder said if the expansion fee is voted down, it could take more time to enlarge the smallest stadium in the Big 12.

"If we wait much longer, the amount of time that it takes to develop plans could set us back another year," Snyder said. "Now we've got the chance to get the expansion completed in a year's time."

Although he didn't believe the football team's recent success was a factor in the push for the expansion at this time, Snyder said the success is influencing alumni donations.

"People making contributions to the university are in a various cross-section of majors," Snyder said. "The success in the athletic programs has prompted more giving. The increase is credited to the fact that we've had some success here.

"Giving people the opportunity to come and be invited into our football program creates the opportunity to give to the university as a whole," Snyder said.

Revenues from the spring football game are contributed to the library for books and other needs. Snyder said the referendum has nothing to do with library funding, but the dilemma lies in prioritizing.

"I'm not so sure that students aren't for expansion. It's a matter of priorities. The library, books, et cetera," Snyder said. "The variety of other things the money could be used for is a bigger issue than whether they are opposed to or in favor of the referendum."

As a prolific figure at the university, Snyder said his approach was that whatever needs to be done to improve the university as a whole — to provide better education or construction — should be done. He said he'd like to find solutions to all the involved issues.

"I'm not necessarily one that sees it needs to be either-or — the library versus the athletic department," Snyder said. "If that were the case, I would default to the library."

But as much as the expanded stadium and the renovated library are a credit to K-State, Snyder said the student support is equally crucial.

"The student body has been fantastic to our program," Snyder said. "The vast majority has been supportive. If we could get all the students that want to be in the stadium in the stadium, no one would be happier than me."

No one, perhaps, except the players. Wildcat linebacker Travis Ochs said the fans constantly filling the stadium have demonstrated the need for the expansion, and the crowd is critical to the team's success.

"I definitely think fans have gotten better as the seasons have gone by," Ochs said. "The fans are truly a teammate of ours. They've seen what effect they can have on the game."

Defensive end Joe Bob Clements said the more fans the better, especially from the recruiting aspect.

"Most high school students want to play for a lot of people," Clements said. "But then again, 40,000 people is a lot of people."

When a player from Oklahoma is faced with deciding on a career in front of 75,000 Sooner fans or 42,000 fans at KSU Stadium, Snyder said the decision is a tough one.

"Young people in athletics — in football or any other sport — feel better about being viewed by more people," Snyder said. "People from other universities recruiting at places we recruit use that against us.

"They'll ask, 'Do you want to go play at the school with the smallest stadium in the Big 12? There won't be that many people to see you.' The smaller crowds equal a smaller athletic budget."

A stronger non-conference schedule also could be easier to attain if the stadium and the paycheck could attract the necessary teams.

Snyder said money from a bigger game would benefit the athletic department as a whole.

"How we schedule makes a difference based on the number of people we have here, which is directly related to the amount of money made per ball game," Snyder said. "This would enhance the entire athletic program because the money is used in all K-State sports."

Snyder said he felt that even if the referendum doesn't pass, a strong attempt will be made to see that the expansion takes place depending on how the bond issue would be settled. However, don't expect Snyder to take flight if the stadium doesn't grow and prosper.

"I would not put that pressure on the student body," he said. "The referendum decision will not affect my status as coach at Kansas State University."

THE TIMELINE

OCT. 6. The plan for expanding KSU Stadium is announced in a Privilege Fee Committee meeting.

OCT. 12. Athletic Director Max Urick presents the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics plan to the Privilege Fee Committee. Committee members call for a referendum vote on Nov. 11.

OCT. 17. Urick presents the athletic department's plan to Student Senate. Senate refers the referendum resolution back to the Privilege Fee Committee before final action is taken.

OCT. 20. K-State students express concern about the stadium in the Privilege Fee Committee meeting. The committee moves back the election, but a definite date is not set.

OCT. 23. Student Senate approves a referendum vote for Nov. 17 and 18.

WEEK OF NOV. 3-7. Students for First Things First, a group that opposes the use of student money for stadium expansion, and the athletic department set up tables in the K-State Student Union to educate students.

NOV. 9. Urick presents the athletic department's proposal to Students for First Things First.

NOV. 17 AND 18. The referendum is to take place.

FALL 1999. If the referendum passes, construction would be complete by the 1999 season.

Too early to tell if city services will feel effect of stadium expansion

STORY BY ANDREA COREY

An additional 7,000 seats in KSU Stadium could be taxing on local services. While some officials are worried about how the added number of people would affect services, most are saying it's too early to tell.

Jack Messer, Man-hattan city engineer, said nothing has been analyzed yet, but he expects storm drains and streets will be able to handle the addition.

"My perception of the way the traffic flows is good," he said.

He said surrounding streets should be able to handle extra traffic because more seats doesn't necessarily mean each ticket holder will drive. He added that games are events and the traffic would be temporary. Messer said he thinks the biggest problem with a stadium expansion would be the lack of parking.

PARKING

Charlie Thomas, director of Bramlage Coliseum, said there is not a plan to add parking to Bramlage.

"All we have is the physical space, and what we have we're using," he said. "When we continue to add seats, we'll strip out the parking lots we have now."

But Parking Services staff said parking for the added game population might not be a problem.

Dave Amaro, internal operations manager for Parking Services, said he thinks university lots still have plenty of unused space.

"For us, we can absorb everyone. We've got close parking no one seems to know about," he said.

Amaro said these spots remain unused because most people look for parking while driving on Kimball Avenue, and can't see parking spaces at Jardine Terrace Apartments and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. He said there are 1,500 to 2,000 spaces open each game.

Amaro also said the university's shuttle service should be able to help people get from other areas on campus to the stadium in case there isn't enough parking.

There are also shuttles from Westloop Shopping Center and Aggieville to the stadium.

Even with the shuttle systems, many cars still park at the stadium and surrounding private lots, creating dense traffic before and after the games.

Capt. Allen Raynor, patrol commander of the Riley County Police Department, said the university helps pay for a small part of the extra staff required to get game attendees out of the stadium.

"We are responsible for the safe flow of traffic in and around the stadium. We are not responsible for the expedience and convenience," Raynor said.

This year the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics paid $2,070 for RCPD's services at home games, but Raynor said that amount will have to increase, whether the department or other groups that charge for parking near the stadium pay.

RCPD wants more money to pay for extra officers to deal with traffic.

Also, if there is an addition to the stadium, there would be more cars, making it necessary to have more officers to handle the traffic flow.

Raynor said one of the reasons the university doesn't pay more of the cost now is the lot at Bramlage isn't the only parking lot near the stadium. Lots that are not part of the stadium also charge parking fees.

Raynor said groups that handle those extra lots walk away with money and aren't required to help pay for the officers who direct traffic out of their lots after the game.

"I think they ought to share part of the cost," he said.

K-State Agronomy is one of those groups that makes money parking cars on game days.

Brad Thompson, senior in agronomy and co-chair of the parking committee, said to his knowledge the club doesn't help pay RCPD, but would if asked or required to.

"The only thing we've been asked to do is have a fence to keep people from walking across wherever they want," he said.

Thompson said the club makes about $4,000 in an average game.

HOSPITAL

While traffic and parking might change services, Mike Nunamaker, chief executive officer of Mercy Health Center, said he doesn't expect the possible expansion to affect the health center.

He said the hospital already has more staff on duty during game days and 7,000 extra people in the stadium would not make the hospital add more.

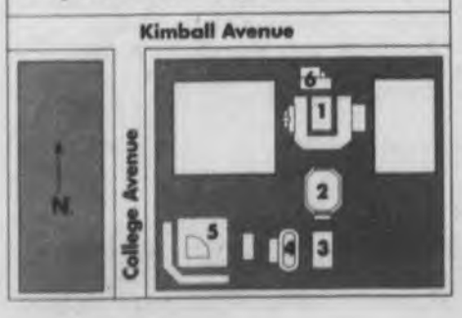
"We are pretty much set up to handle the extra people. We know that utilization of ER does go up, and we staff for that," he said.

Nunamaker said the aid station at the stadium would probably require a few more staff members.

OTHER SERVICES AND UTILITIES

Other services and utilities at the stadium might need to be increased if an addition is made.

Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and university architect, said he's not sure how the stadium will affect the sewer system until the expansion is approved and more research is done.



"The systems for the stadium are adequate for the number of people we have in the stadium during game days," he said. "Anytime you make a significant change — whether it's the football stadium or the library or the Union or any facility — that's going to have an impact on the capacity of the systems."

He said a significant expansion in seating could mean adding more restrooms, concessions, telephones, gas lines and other services and utilities.

"All of those systems will be reviewed and looked at to see what needs to be done," he said.

"We don't go into detailed design questions until we know that we are going to proceed into a real design project."

Map of K-State sports facilities

1. KSU Stadium/Wagner Field

The stadium was dedicated on Sept. 21, 1968, at a cost of $1.6 million. Nearly $600,000 of the budget was raised privately through gifts and seat option plan sales.

The remaining $1 million was financed through revenue bonds backed by the total receipts of the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics but guaranteed by student-fee contributions of $80,000 annually. There was no new fee passed by students, but the existing athletic fee was diverted to pay off the bonds.

In 1993, the Dev Nelson Press Box opened at a cost of $3.3 million. It includes more than 20 sky suites that lease for an initial fee of $50,000 plus $10,000 a year for five years.

The sky suites include luxury accommodations, like wet bars, microwaves and televisions, and are catered by Harry's Uptown Supper Club.

By April 2, 1993, all of the sky suites had sold out. Two 63-seat VIP lounges lease for a $500 initial fee plus $500 per year.

When the sky suites and lounges were announced, the athletic department predicted an annual revenue of $450,000, which would initially go toward debt retirement on the project. To qualify for a suite or lounge, one must already be a $1,000 contributor to the athletic department's Mike Ahearn scholarship program.

For the 1991 season, more than $800,000 was privately raised to install new AstroTurf.

In fall 1996, a Sony JumboTron and new scoreboards were added to the stadium at a total cost of $3.2 million. The project is being paid for by advertisers, including UMB Bank, Farm Bureau, Cellular One, Pepsi and Coors.

This fall, a $1.4 million project to upgrade restroom and merchandise facilities began. This project is funded through a user fee of $5 charged on top of each ticket price. It is slightly less for alumni and students. It was estimated the surcharge will raise $550,000 annually.

Ross, who has presented his plan to the Privilege Fee Committee, Student Senate, and other campus groups, proposes a $4.50 increase in student game tickets and a $7.25 alumni per-game increase. The surcharges would be directly applied to the expansion project and would be charged on season tickets only.

If ticket sales fall, Ross said, and don't produce enough revenue to make a bond payment, a privilege fee could be created to make up the difference. That makes ticket sales a secure revenue source, Ross said, because shortfalls can be funded through a privilege fee.

> The demand for public tickets is pretty significant. I would certainly honor the 7,500-seat obligation we have to the students first. The priority would be to honor the obligations to students and then the public.

> athletic director

"This is the best solution we can arrive at because it achieves the athletic department's goal for getting a secure source of revenue and achieves the student goal of using privilege fees as a last resort," he said.

University Controller Keith Ratzloff said Ross' plan is possible and probably wouldn't hurt the security of the expansion bond.

"That's almost as secure, but not quite as easily managed. Logistically, it's possible, but it's just not as easily manageable as a flat fee," he said.

Ross said he proposes that Student Senate approve a formula for determining the fee so that a new fee wouldn't have to be reviewed by Student Governing Association every year. The new fee amount would still have to be approved by university administration, the Kansas Board of Regents and the Kansas Legislature.

Urick said if Student Senate decides to enact Ross' proposal, he would support it.

"I worry about my credibility with that because our proposal would freeze student season ticket prices and this would change that aspect of it. If that's the decision of Student Senate, then I have to take their recommendation. It would sure be an awful large increase, though, for the ticket purchaser," he said.

Ross said he encourages students who support his plan to vote yes on the referendum question but to leave the opinion question blank in next week's vote. When Student Senate interprets the vote, Ross said the number of people who voted for a new fee but didn't vote on the opinion question could be used as the number of voters who supported his plan.

THE FOUNDATION

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, like the rest of campus, depends on the KSU Foundation for fund-raising support.

The Foundation will provide fund-raising support and collect money only on projects deemed priorities by the university administration. It also shelters more than $58 million in assets for academic scholarships.

In fiscal year 1996, the athletic department was the single largest recipient of cash contributions designated by donors from the Foundation. The athletic department received $3,943,823 in total contributions, which amounts to 18.2 percent of the total contributions for K-State.

Just behind the athletic department, the College of Engineering garnered $3,906,184, or 18 percent, of total contributions. K-State libraries received $749,734, or 3.5 percent, of total contributions. In 1996, total Foundation contributions accounted for $21,677,863 to the university.

For fiscal year 1995, the athletic department received just more than $2.5 million in contributions, of the total Foundation contributions of $20,401,161. Fiscal year 1994 contributions to the athletic department were $4.5 million.

The projections for fiscal year 1997 have not been returned from printing.

SENATE SAYS

Castelano

"I like the idea that the referendum has gone to the students instead of leaving it to Senate to decide. What the students say is how we should do it." Arts and Sciences Sen. Shayne Castelano said.

Glendening

"Unless it's really close, I don't see Senate overriding because I think Senate's a lot more conservative this year than what it has been in the past," Agriculture Sen. Bret Glendening said. "I don't see them ignoring student opinion like that."

Truax

"With rising privilege fees, we're getting to the point where we're trying to decide now whether students can go to school or whether they can go to a football game. I think students who want to go to a football game should be able to pay for it. That's the bottom line," Veterinary Medicine Sen. Aaron Truax said.

On the eve of K-State's expansion proposal for KSU Stadium, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletic's reasons for supporting a student fee include pride, visibility and prominence among universities, particularly the Big 12 Conference.

STORY BY JOHN HENDERSON

Big 12 athletic department representatives offer 12 different sets of numbers that count dollars, seats and dates in history. A few facts emerge, however.

KSU Stadium, built in 1968, is the second-newest facility in the Big 12, and the smallest in terms of seats. Only Jack Trice Stadium, built in 1975 at Iowa State, is newer, with about 1,000 more seats than KSU Stadium.

Of the schools that have seats assigned for students, K-State roughly ties with Kansas and Iowa State universities with 7,500. Texas A&M has the most with 27,000 student seats. That's more than a third of its largest-recorded crowd — 78,753 on Nov. 26, 1987, when Texas A&M won 20-17 over Texas.

Texas comes in second with 21,000 student seats. That's roughly a quarter of its largest crowd — 83,312 on Sept. 12, 1996, when Texas lost to Notre Dame.

Two schools — Oklahoma and Missouri — have no designated student seating. At OU, all seats are general or reserved, though students get cheaper tickets. The east side of Missouri Memorial Stadium seats students first, but anyone could potentially sit there.

Nebraska lost about 1,000 seats in 1994 when a deck above the south end zone collapsed. The deck, built in 1972, was replaced by wheelchair seating.

K-State is one of two schools that impose a mandatory athletic fee that doesn't pay for tickets. The other is Colorado.

Texas Tech's student body is paying $10 million for a $50 million arena to be used in part for basketball. United Spirit Arena, scheduled to be completed by fall 1999, will be used for a number of university projects, like concerts and shows, the Texas Tech athletic department office said.

Oklahoma State is the only school whose student body has paid for the expansion of a football stadium, except the only new seats will be in skyboxes.

Ron Beer, OSU vice president of student affairs, said the bulk of the $45 million project that OSU's athletic department is undertaking is going for refurbishment of Gallagher-Iba Arena. The basketball arena will go from 6,300 seats to 12,000-14,000 seats, and an auxiliary gym will be available for practice.

The wrestling team will get a new gym as well, Beer said, and a new strength-training room will be added for all athletes. An "umbrella" building, dubbed the Great Hall, will go up between the arena and the coaches' office building. Beer said the Great Hall will be used to display accomplishments in NCAA sports.

"Thing is, we're third in the NCAA in all sports, but people don't know that," Beer said. "We haven't had a place to display that stuff."

The student body will be paying for a $15 million bond through a $2 increase in fees per credit hour, which will go up to $3 by 2000, Beer said.

Private donations are expected to cover $21 million of the project, and $9 million will come from the community of Stillwater, Okla., which has enacted a tax on all goods imported from out of state that aren't to be resold, he said.

1990, more than $800,000 the university's Essential renovated and added locker d a new weight room to the ic Learning Center, which ve tutors to athletes and r missed class notes and ned in 1996 at a cost of $1 e money.

een talk on campus for at least 10 years about building a coliseum before Student Senate passed a referendum in 1979 to provide up to $2.5 million to finance 30-year construction bonds. The coliseum was estimated to cost $20.3 million at that time.

This scheme was scrapped by 1983 to provide more funding. The administration, led by President Duane Acker, recommended an $18 million coliseum financed by $6 million in student fees, $6 million in private money from the KSU Foundation fund-raising efforts and $6 million from the state.

Also in 1983, the Kansas Board of Regents decided no state money would be involved in the project. In revised plans, it was decided students would provide $7 million, the Foundation another $7 million (although it eventually became $8.5 million), and the athletic department would give $2 million for a final total project cost of about $17.5 million.

Construction bids came in over budget. In 1985, student leaders called for a referendum that would have delayed development of the coliseum until a formal market study, pro forma study and traffic study had been completed. The administration ignored the concerns so as not to increase the project cost, and the coliseum opened in 1988.

Over a 25-year period for the bonds, the total student investment in Bramlage will amount to more than $14 million.

5. FRANK MYERS FIELD

Built in the early 1960s, the 5,000-seat Frank Myers Field hasn't been substantially renovated except moderately in 1988. In early 1997, plans were announced for an $800,000 renovation of the stadium to upgrade facilities. There have also been rumors of Memorial Stadium being converted to a baseball facility, but there are no plans to do so.

Since that announcement, the total project budget has been increased to $2 million in private money. The university goes before the Kansas Board of Regents on Nov. 20 to ask for project approval.

6. R.V. CHRISTIAN TRACK

Completed in 1973, the track includes a stand of 3,000 permanent seats on the west side. It was funded through private contributions with a substantial gift from R.V. Christian, a 1911 graduate of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

7. COLBERT HILLS GOLF COURSE (NOT PICTURED)

Last spring, the administration announced plans to construct a PGA-style golf course in northwest Manhattan in honor of Jim Colbert, a KSU alumnus and PGA Senior Tour player. The privately funded course, projected to cost nearly $11 million, would feature a clubhouse, an 18-hole course and a 9-hole "teaching" course. The project ties in with a proposed private development of hotels and homes.

While a large portion of the money has been raised, the project still relies on some city and county approval before construction begins.

THE STADIUM EXPANSION REFERENDUM

VIEWPOINTS

COLLEGIAN EDITORIAL BOARD VIEWPOINT

Students should vote against fee increase

Students should vote no on next week's referendum on stadium expansion for many reasons.

Not the least of which is the untimeliness of asking students to pay more fees now. They are already faced with tuition increases, rising fees and the decimation of academic services that are central to any university — faculty hiring, the library and technology.

There's no doubt this stadium expansion project will move forward with or without students' financial support. However, the students who have chosen to attend K-State and support its teams don't deserve the kind of condescending threats Athletic Director Max Urick has used to push this deal through.

Listen, Max, we support the team, we wear purple and we love K-State. Let's not make this a pride issue. But should we dedicate millions of our dollars to the luxury of having a prettier stadium? Or one that makes the athletic department, already the largest recipient of the KSU Foundation's funds, more money? Or to heavily subsidize the alumni's season football tickets?

Where would those alumni be without the education this university provided them? Would all those alumni have been able to attend K-State had their student fees skyrocketed to pay for athletic-facility improvements? The truth is, the stadium doesn't benefit students' academic progress in the least. Attending a football game is as much a luxury as taking a spring-break trip to Cancun, Mexico.

President Jon Wefald said one reason the library doesn't get many private contributions is because "no one graduates from the library." True, but no one graduates with a degree in football. Football can raise big money because it is allowed to be a No. 1 priority by the administration, the Foundation, the KSU Alumni Association and alumni. Well, shame on you all.

One of the biggest problems with this stadium expansion proposal is the athletic department's lack of planning. Sure, there's been talk of expansion for a few years, but why weren't fundraising options established years ago? Why does it all have to be done in one year?

Because it's easy. It's less fuss to pressure students into funding the expansion with a huge fee than it would be to plan and present a reasonable approach. Students shouldn't come to K-State because of a great football team.

There are also some eerie similarities between the process leading to the construction of Bramlage Coliseum and the drive for the stadium expansion. Bramlage opened at the height of K-State's basketball success and subsequently has not proven its worth. It does, however, serve as a multipurpose facility, something the stadium can't boast. The stadium is available to the overall student body six Saturdays a year.

This expansion will go ahead with or without student support. What you're voting on next week is the amount of guaranteed student seats. On some level, this proposal is a victim of timing.

While it has been said that passing the referendum could guarantee more student seats, that's still not entirely clear. The only thing students are guaranteed is a commitment to pay a fee every year for up to 15 years. Besides, if we add these seats we'll still be near the bottom of the Big 12 in stadium size, coming in only as high as No. 10.

It's easy for Urick to ask students to pay for the stadium. He doesn't pay fees. The scholarship-laden football players don't pay out of their own pockets.

By voting yes on the referendum, students are saying they are willing to fund a stadium expansion before looking at the big picture and the pressing academic needs of campus. What other department on campus can boast of raising $11 million for a new golf course, $2 million for a new baseball stadium and now $20 million for a bigger football stadium?

After next week's vote, the campus still has to face a periodical shortage, outdated technology, a hiring freeze and offices that can't even supply themselves the most basic essentials. Throwing money at the stadium won't solve those concerns.

The athletic department is a multimillion-dollar operation that pours every cent it makes back into its own coffers. Make no mistake, the athletic administration has not promised to give any of the increased profits from stadium expansion to academics. Even the token support football coach Bill Snyder gives the library won't cover up this fact.

It's not about students supporting athletics. We already support athletics with a $17.99-per-semester student fee (full-time students) and a fee of $1.04 per semester for Bramlage maintenance.

Adding profit-making seats to the stadium is a luxury for the athletic department. It's an unnecessary tax on students who depend on a low-cost education. When you go to the polls on Monday and Tuesday, vote against threats, poor planning and exploitation of student money.

Vote no on the referendum.

STUDENTS FOR FIRST THINGS FIRST'S VIEWPOINT

Students shouldn't bankroll unclear stadium expansion plans

Banker (students): How can I help you?
Athletic Director Max Urick: I'm going to expand KSU Stadium, and I want some of your money to do it.
Banker: Good idea. What's the plan?
Urick: You give money, and I expand the stadium.
Banker: But how much do you want?
Urick: Uhh, $10 to $12 million, maybe $20 million.
Banker: OK, Urick, we'll need a firm number. Meanwhile, let's talk terms.
Urick: Teams? No problem. Nebraska, Colorado, Texas, Kansas —can't compete without a bigger stadium.
Banker: Terms, Max. Terms. You know, repayment of principal, interest, collateral, co-signers.
Urick: No, no, no. I just want your money now, and we can talk terms later.
Banker: Well, if you don't want to talk terms, Max, what does the bank get out of this deal?
Urick: OK, I know what you mean by terms. The return on this investment is increased visibility, higher self-esteem and more recognition.
Banker: No, Max. We need our cash back and a tangible return.
Urick: Well, I can get you into some good end-zone seats (winks).
Banker: But we already have 50-yard line seats.
Urick (stands up and starts to leave): Fine. If you're not going to give me your money, I'm going to expand my stadium without you and take away your 50-yard line seats.
Banker: If you can expand the stadium without our money, why did you come to us in the first place?
Urick (angrily): Where's your pride?
Banker: Max, we don't measure our pride by the size of our stadium.
Urick: Aww, c'mon. Pretty please. I'll give back your sheet tickets.

Sack the referendum. Vote no on Monday and Tuesday in the K-State Student Union and the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

URICK'S VIEWPOINT

Students should look at option available when they vote in expansion referendum

The students of K-State are considering a proposal by the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics that would assist in expanding permanent seating of KSU Stadium and improve restrooms and other fan accommodations and services.

I hope students will carefully consider the positive benefits of this proposal, both short- and long-term. I also hope the students will examine the facts and not be misled by the misrepresentation of information that was inaccurately reported in some articles or by those opposing the proposal.

It is a fact that football is the economic lifeblood of the total athletics program. Fourteen other sports depend heavily on the dollars generated by football game days. Increased revenue resulting from stadium expansion is a necessary step in ensuring that, in the future, these programs will continue to be competitive in the Big 12 Conference and at the national level.

The need for more seats is validated every week at the oversold stadium. We have outgrown the accommodations of 39,200 permanent seats, plus the temporary bleachers and chairs placed in every available spot.

I want students to be aware that Option 1 guarantees 10,000 permanent student seats (no bleachers). Option 2 guarantees 9,000 permanent student seats (no bleachers). Now, students are guaranteed only 7,500 seats. That's 2,500 seats fewer than Option 1 and 1,500 less than Option 2.

In each of the past three years, the athletic department has exceeded its guarantee of seats of the students as follows:

- 1995 guaranteed 7,500. We actually used 9,039, which exceeded the guarantee by 20 percent.
- 1996 guaranteed 7,500. We actually used 9,958, which exceeded the guarantee by 32 percent.
- 1997 guaranteed 7,500. We actually used 9,471, which exceeded the guarantee by 26 percent.

This has been at a financial cost to the athletic department as the students pay about $100 less per season ticket.

This loss of revenue cannot continue.

We would like the stadium expansion to be envisioned as a partnership between the athletic department, the students and our public patrons. As with any partnership, the participants should be fully aware of the terms and conditions of the alliance. In other words, what each co-partner is expected to contribute and conversely what benefits will be derived.

The facts of the proposal are as follows:

- Students would be responsible for less than one-third (estimated 28 percent) of total project cost. The athletic department would be responsible to generate the rest.
- 7,000 additional seats would be added (stadium permanent capacity about 46,000) and students would be guaranteed 2,500 additional permanent seats or a total of 10,000 seats. This is 35 percent of the new seats.
- Student season-ticket price would be frozen for four years (1998, 1999, 2000, 2001) at the current rate of $10 per game (five games, $50; six games, $60; seven games, $70).
- Recent graduates (two years) would receive a 33-percent discount from the public ticket price. This applies to the first 1,000 requests.

In summary, the project includes the following:

- Demolition of the upper east side and the construction of about 7,000 new seats.
- Complete renovation of existing restrooms and concessions.
- Repaving of the east side parking lot.
- Expansion of the press box for additional suites.

The cost of the above items is expected to be about $11 million. To borrow, through funds, that amount, depending on the rating of the bonds, the interest charged and other costs involved, we would have to guarantee about $12.5 to $12.8 million. The estimated debt service on that amount for a 15-year period would be about $1.4 million per year.

Based on these assumptions, the total payout of principle and interest would be about $21 million. The maximum students would pay over the 15 years is about $6 million, or about 28 percent. The athletic department, through the sale of new chair backs, new suites and football parking revenue would pay about $15 million, or 72 percent of the project.

Students have asked what will happen if the vote fails. As athletic director, it's my responsibility, while meeting the student guarantee, to actively pursue avenues for the fiscal vitality of the athletic department. We will proceed with the project. However, seats exceeding the Student Governing Association guarantee of 7,500 will become available for public purchase.

A stadium expansion, as outlined by the athletic department, would be a terrific asset to K-State. If you feel this referendum represents a partnership in which the return on your investment is both worthwhile and advantageous, I hope you will cast a yes vote on Monday and Tuesday.

The athletic department will fully accept the results of the referendum and adjust accordingly. I'm confident the student body will do likewise.

STUDENTS SPEAK

SENATORS SHOULD GIVE STUDENTS MOST FOR CASH

Editor,

In the past two months, people have been considering increasing student fees to fund various whims. These are the KSU Stadium expansion, journals for Hale Library and funding for a task force to compile teacher evaluations. I think all of these are a waste of my money.

Let's start with the task force first. I don't know about other students, but when I make up my schedule for the next semester, I don't try to find out what type of teacher the instructor is.

In most of my cases, there is only one person teaching each of my classes. Therefore I have to have them as instructors regardless of how good they are. Spending money on informing me about a teacher I have to have anyway is useless.

Next I would like to look at the journals. The only people who truly have a problem with the lack of journals are faculty and graduate students. And I think some of the faculty task force who looked into having a student fee to pay for the journals must have some nerve. Students are already paying to go to school here, and now the faculty wants us to pay for things only they are going to use. I say if people want to get an article, let them pay the money for a copy to be sent.

Finally, about the stadium expansion. I love watching K-State football games and seeing other teams get their butts kicked. Yet I don't think all of the students should have to pay for the stadium expansion. If the student seating does not increase, then when the next time the athletic fee comes up, I hope Student Senate will look at what the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has done for the students.

Also, I hope they take into account the fact of all the profit the athletic department is making by selling more tickets to non-students.

I hope Senate realizes its duty is to help students get the most for their money, not the least.

TICKET-HOLDING STUDENTS SHOULD PAY FOR STADIUM

Editor,

I noticed the advertisement in the Nov. 5 Collegian that was trying to convince students to vote yes on the KSU Stadium expansion referendum. It seemed the "facts" in it really only pertain to those who go to football games.

I came here to get a degree — I don't care about sports or sporting events. Let the people who care about sports pay for the expansion, through tickets, for example. If fans love the team so much, they should be willing to pay for the expansion, not dump the cost off on others.

I am also sick of student pride being associated with whatever is popular at the moment. My pride in K-State has nothing to do with football or any other sport. It's unfair to hint that some students don't have school pride just because they don't want to pay for the expansion.

And, although periodicals have nothing to do with the stadium expansion, I'd rather pay for those over the expansion any day.

STUDENTS NEED TO GET FACTS ON STADIUM PLANS

Editor,

As the vote for stadium expansion is approaching rapidly, I felt it was my turn to put in my two cents in the argument.

My main concern about this vote is that students are not understanding the information regarding stadium expansion. I have spent time helping Athletic Director Max Urick, along with many other members of the ICAT board, to come up with a way to present the proposal in a way that students understand the facts.

Walking through the K-State Student Union, I realized that students do not understand the facts. Many students feel as if the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is trying to take away from Hale Library.

In fact, they are not. Actually, they are for improving education. Each year, the football team takes part in the spring football game. As part of the spring game, spectators are charged a nominal price to get in. All of this money goes to the library, because Coach Bill Snyder and Urick feel as if the department should do something for the library.

Students are also confused about where they are going to sit under the new proposal. The student section will still be in the same section where it is now, and it will extend to the end zone. We will have seats in the upper level.

Those seats take the place of the temporary bleachers used in the south end zone and the grassy area in the northeast section of the stadium. These areas are overflow general admission seats that are filled every game.

Lastly, in regard to the increase in privilege-fee information put out by Students for First Things First, the group needs to focus on the facts.

Students will pay less than 33 percent of the cost, but we will get 35 percent of the seats, not 25 percent. This is true because students receive 2,500 of the about 7,000 new seats.

Secondly, the general public will only get 4,500 new seats, not 7,500 like the group wants the students to believe.

If ticket prices rise and students receive a 33-percent discount, that means we, as students, will get more money off of the total price.

I hope everyone will make an educated decision, no matter what it might be. Remember to vote on Monday and Tuesday.

STUDENTS NEED INFO ON STADIUM EXPANSION PLANS

Editor,

We have noticed in the Collegian lately many people stating the KSU Stadium expansion issue and the Hale Library periodical funding issue are not related. It seems to us that these issues are closely related because they are both big parts of the whole university.

K-State depends on a library as the core of education, and the stadium and athletic Department of Intercollegiate Athletics depend on the university for student athletics and student fans, as well as much of student funding.

We were just wondering if those who say the stadium expansion issue and the library issue are not related really believe this. Or, do they not have the guts to stand up and say they would rather support football than education? Just wondering.

STADIUM-EXPANSION ISSUE NEGLECTS SALINA CAMPUS

Editor,

In Terry Welch's column, he referred to the end zone seats as the "bastard stepchild." That made it firm how the main campus feels about the students attending the K-State-Salina campus.

This semester (being my last at K-State), I bought season football tickets. When given to me, I saw the word "STUDENT" printed on them. Well, guess what? We sit in the southwest end zone under the scoreboard on steel-frame bleacher seats. So far up that you can't hear the band playing from across the field.

Yes, now I know how a bastard stepchild feels as was pointed out, but at least I'm at all the home games cheering on the best football team in the Big 12 Conference. You get used to it. You have to. Not every seat in the house will be the best for everybody. If you are a student from the K-State-Salina campus, you don't get the best seats.

I think more seating is necessary and should be built. A new high-capacity stadium is needed. Our seating capacity at this stadium ranks at the bottom in the Big 12.

If there is a need and students are willing to come when it is built, then build it. With more room available, the K-State-Salina student can be given an equal chance when season tickets go on sale.

Maybe then we can join as one whole student body population on the east side of the stadium, not scattered willy-nilly about the place. Sure the journal-funding problem at Hale Library is an issue to be dealt with and it will be, but so is seating at a small stadium. We need more of both.

Clinton to bypass K-State

CHRIS DEAN
news editor

The rumors can stop flying. President Clinton will not be commenting on stadium expansion in the near future.

Clinton

According to press releases issued Wednesday, President Clinton will not make a stop at K-State during his visit to Kansas on Monday.

"He was invited, but his schedule did not allow for a visit," press officials for the White House said.

The president will continue, as scheduled, to Wichita on Monday for the dedication of the Cessna Aircraft plant's welfare-to-work job-training facility.

Earlier this week, White House officials indicated that Clinton would have time in his schedule between Wichita and St. Louis. Charles Reagan, executive assistant to President Jon Wefald and head of the Landon Lecture Series, had hoped Clinton would use that time to give a Landon Lecture in Bramlage Coliseum.

Early indications suggested it might be a possibility, but eventually it was ruled out, Reagan said.

"We were unable to work it out," he said. "President Clinton made a good-faith effort to squeeze a Landon Lecture into an already busy schedule, but in the end they concluded that he just couldn't do it."

This does not rule out a potential presidential Landon Lecture, however.

"They have made a firm commitment for Clinton to do it (give a Landon Lecture) at a future time," Reagan said.

The White House press office would not confirm or deny a future visit to K-State, but said no such visit is planned for the near future. They also would not comment on whether the visit will take place before or after Clinton leaves office in 1999.

Clinton is the only president since Richard Nixon in 1970 not to give a Landon Lecture.

SHAC proposals to raise fees

JACOB JANSONIUS
staff reporter

The Student Health Advisory Committee met Wednesday to prepare its proposals to the Privilege Fee Committee and Student Senate.

There are two proposals, each with four options, being brought to Student Senate's attention. Both proposals would raise student fees.

The option the committee chose for the first proposal would increase the Student Health Fee by 10 percent to keep the same personnel and services.

The proposal will result in a $7.20 increase per semester for students enrolled in 12 or more hours.

The increase would also cover the state-mandated salary increases. The difference between this proposal and the less-expensive one is that the computer network servers would be replaced. The replacement will cost $33,500.

Kristi Herrman, SHAC member, said it needs to be made clear that the servers will eventually need to be replaced anyway.

"Rather than have the Lafene reserves dip below minimum level, we can use this proposal," Herrman said. "It's critical within the next two years that we expand the memory of the computers. If the computers shut down, Lafene shuts down."

The option the committee chose from the second proposal would increase fees by 7.5 percent. It would amount to a 90 cent increase to the $6 already paid by full-time students.

The fee increase would be used to keep the same personnel and services for the University Counseling Services program.

The decision was reached after the committee considered another option — a 14-percent increase with enhancements to the University Counseling Services — and decided it would not be favorable for the student body as a whole.

Troy Brin, SHAC member, said he felt it was his responsibility to do everything he could to represent the student body.

"I feel I wouldn't be doing my job if I didn't vote for the less costly option. I am supposed to represent students and try to keep fees stagnant," Brin said.

Ryan Brummer, junior in finance, said he is tired of seeing fees increase.

"They look at it and see it as just a little money here and a little money there. Before you know it, they nickel and dime their way into a little cash," Brummer said. "I don't think they always see things from a student's economic standpoint."

The proposals will be sent to Aaron Otto, Privilege Committee Fee chair, today. The proposals will be voted on by the Student Senate on Dec. 4.

MILDRED DELLERE, whose late husband contributed greatly to the Manhattan Regional Airport, is embraced by two of her children, David and Debi Dellere, during the dedication of the Manhattan Regional Airport on Wednesday afternoon. The late Nicholas Dellere spent most of his life in the aviation field.

Former airport manager honored in formal dedication ceremony

city editor

The facility that serves as the newest gateway to Manhattan, the Manhattan Regional Airport, was formally dedicated Wednesday in honor of the late Nicholas Edward Dellere.

As part of the formal program, Manhattan Mayor Bruce Snead spoke to the crowd of more than 50 people. He stressed how important the airport is to Manhattan. He said it would provide a tradition of service characteristic of Dellere.

Grice Sexton of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce was also on hand to share personal experiences and humorous anecdotes about Dellere with the audience.

"It was great to know him. He was a good friend. He had empathy and compassion for everyone and I, like you, miss him," he said.

After the formal program, the ceremony traveled outside where Nicholas Dellere's widow, Mildred, cut the honorary red ribbon with the assistance of her children.

Ken Black, airport director, said the new facility couldn't have been built without the contributions Nicholas Dellere made to Manhattan aviation.

In the 1950s, Nicholas Dellere made the necessary improvements to the Manhattan Airport so it could get a commercial airline service, Black said. By the mid-1950s service began and in the '60s a terminal was built to house the airline personnel.

Also, while Nicholas Dellere served as airport manager and fixed base operator from 1950 to 1962, he was able to more than double the size of the existing airport.

Nicholas Dellere didn't only make strides for the airline business in Manhattan, he nurtured aviation in general, Black said.

Nicholas Dellere often gave private lessons, provided for the transportation needs of K-State and gave great support to the military and Fort Riley, he said.

Now, the new airport facility stands as a marker commemorating Nicholas Dellere and his accomplishments.

The $3.2 million facility took five years to build, from conception to completion, Black said. It houses one commercial airline, U.S. Airways Express, and three car-rental companies: Hertz, National and Avis. Construction is also beginning on a food-service section where passengers can get something to eat without leaving the terminal.

Snead said this terminal has played and will continue to play a vital role in the community.

"We look forward to what this facility will mean in economic development for Manhattan," he said.

Vasiljevic's charges dropped; Dies to be sentenced Dec. 1

JENNI EVANS
staff reporter

Manny Dies and Pero Vasiljevic, two K-State basketball players charged with misdemeanors in the alleged attack on Collegian columnist Todd Stewart, have resolved their charges. Their trials had been scheduled for Wednesday.

Dies

Vasiljevic's charges were dismissed by the prosecution in light of his promise to do community service hours, pay the costs and fines and make a contribution to the United Way.

These consequences are similar to what he would have faced had he been sentenced and completed a diversion. Assistant County Attorney Brenda Jordan said these things were taken into consideration when settling.

Vasiljevic settled informally because he was less involved in the incident than Dies and had not been in trouble before, she said. Had he been convicted and had a formal diversion, he would have been deported. Vasiljevic came to the United States from Adelaide, Australia.

Vasiljevic

Dies pleaded guilty to criminal damage to property through a plea bargain and will be sentenced at 9 a.m. Dec. 1 at the Riley County Courthouse, Jordan said.

Security council condemns Iraq; Baghdad stands firm

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — In a unanimous vote Wednesday, the U.N. Security Council condemned Iraq, imposed a travel ban and warned of "further measures" unless Iraq reverses its decision to expel American arms inspectors.

Iraq's deputy prime minister immediately rejected the U.N. demand and U.S. Ambassador Bill Richardson warned "the crisis with Iraq is not over."

"The message has been clear: Iraq must comply or face consequences," Richardson said after the vote. "We are not precluding any option, including the military option."

Appearing later on MSNBC, Richardson said the United States believes it does not need to receive council permission to launch a military strike, although a decision to attack has not yet been made.

"But I would say that Iraq would provoke an international reaction if they tampered with the next U-2 flight, which is an essential part of the U.N.'s activity, and secondly were to expel the Americans or the inspectors from the U.N.'s teams," Richardson said.

Russian Ambassador Sergey Lavrov told reporters the crisis with Iraq was "headed for deadlock."

"It's very dangerous."

The government of Saddam Hussein, meanwhile, showed no signs of backing down on its vow to kick American inspectors out of Iraq. Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz, speaking in New York, declared that his government "refuses this resolution."

"Iraq will continue to defend its legitimate rights by all means," Aziz said. In Baghdad, Iraqi Foreign Minister Mohammed Said al-Sahhaf said the Americans would definitely be expelled but gave no timetable.

Iraq had suspended the expulsion order until the 15-member council finished debate. The council refused a request by Aziz to be allowed to present Iraq's case in a special session.

The Baghdad government has turned back inspection teams nine of the past 10 days because they included Americans. With the Security Council's unanimous vote on Wednesday, U.N. officials said a significant test would come today if the inspectors try again to enter suspected Iraqi weapons sites.

In Washington, White House spokesman Mike McCurry said any move to boot out Americans "would be a very serious breach of Iraq's obligation to the international community."

The chief weapons inspector, Richard Butler, said he would send out his inspection teams today.

Freshman starts early in politics as school board member

ZACH VADER
staff reporter

The change from high school to college can be a difficult transition, but for Buck Johnson, the experience has been challenging.

Johnson, freshman in political science, has responsibilities other freshmen don't worry about. He still has a job at home.

Johnson, a native of Kansas City, Kan., is on his former high school's school board at the young age of 18.

A Piper High School graduate, Johnson has wanted to be involved in politics ever since he can remember.

"My mom and some former teachers of mine were talking one day," Johnson said. "They all knew I was interested in politics, and they thought running for the school board would be a great opportunity."

Johnson talked to some people in the Piper community and found that he would get a lot of support.

"The support from my friends and family made it a bit easier," he said.

In January, Johnson filed to run for Piper USD 203 and was elected. It was a great experience going through his first election, he said.

"The only previous experience I had in politics was being my class president and student council president in high school," Johnson said.

Now at K-State, he has a little more weight on his shoulders. He is a new member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon and is his pledge class president.

"The house has been very supportive," Johnson said. "They have really tried to get me some exposure with the campus and with the National Fraternity of Sigma Alpha Epsilon."

Bill Burns, scholarship chairman of SAE and junior in finance, said Johnson is doing a great job in the house.

"He is a natural leader," he said. "He really puts everything he has into school, the house and his responsibilities at home."

Alex Judd, president of SAE, said that having Johnson around is great for the house.

"Buck is a real asset to SAE," he said.

Johnson said that after his first semester at K-State he would like to run for Student Senate.

"I really want to be involved in campus politics," he said. "I think it would be a great way to help my future goals to have a successful political career."

After graduation, Johnson said he hopes to get into politics right away, but he is not sure on what level.

"I know I want to go home and do something in the local government," Johnson said. "Hopefully I will be successful and can move right up the ladder."

Johnson said his ultimate goal is to become president of the United States.

Alcohol linked to deaths of 4 men in southwestern Kansas town

LIBERAL, Kan. — Four men killed by carbon monoxide poisoning were legally drunk when they were overcome by exhaust fumes in a closed garage, police said Wednesday.

Police Chief Vernon Jordan said an examination of the men, three of whom remained unofficially identified Wednesday afternoon, showed that all had blood alcohol levels above the .08 percent that Kansas law considers intoxication.

Police still don't know why the men turned on a vehicle in the garage at the Liberal residence where they were found Tuesday morning by emergency workers responding to a 911 call, Jordan said. One of the men was dead at the scene, and the other three died a short time later at a Liberal hospital.

None of the men lived at the house, Jordan said, but one had a girlfriend living there.

Washington rumor mill focuses on former senator's facial features

WASHINGTON, D.C. — His friends say no. Columnists say it might be yes. As Bob Dole used to ask on the campaign trail, "Who do you trust?"

It's Washington's latest mystery: Did Dole have plastic surgery?

He isn't talking about it, but others are.

"If he had a face-lift, there's no sign of it," said Russ Townsley, a close Kansas friend since 1947 who saw Dole a few months ago. "I think I know Bob well enough."

But the speculation continues. On Wednesday, Maureen Dowd in The New York Times went so far as to say the real question wasn't whether he did it but why. Her answer: so he can help wife Elizabeth win the presidency and thus get to the White House after all.

Townsley added that he couldn't imagine Dole, 74, who had major surgeries for World War II injuries, going under the knife again.

But doctors can perform certain face-lift procedures without general anesthesia. And Stephen Grifka, a facial plastic surgeon in Los Angeles, said recovery can be quick and seamless.

"People can go back into public very quickly," he said.

Middle-aged man disappears with 13-year-old girl — again

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A 45-year-old St. Joseph man awaiting sentencing after taking off with a 15-year-old girl in May has again disappeared with the girl, the FBI said.

Ronald Paul Garber was awaiting sentencing in a Kansas City halfway house after pleading guilty in October to giving false information to obtain a passport.

On July 25, FBI agents in Florida found Garber and Sarah Jane Stallsworth near Walt Disney World. Garber was arrested, and the girl was returned to the St. Joseph area.

Garber reportedly picked the girl up at Lafayette High School, pretending to be her father, for a funeral.

Garber later pleaded guilty to two counts of making false statements on a U.S. passport application. A federal judge committed Garber to the halfway house.

Garber disappeared from the halfway house Monday evening, roughly an hour before Stallsworth excused herself from a church service to use the restroom, officials said.

Disney, former studio chief settle $250 million contract dispute

LOS ANGELES — The clash of wills between two of Hollywood's biggest entertainment executives has come to a quiet end with both agreeing to settle a $250 million breach-of-contract lawsuit.

The Walt Disney Co. and former studio chief Jeffrey Katzenberg reached a settlement Monday, nine days before the case was to go to trial.

Katzenberg, who left Disney in 1994, sued Disney claiming the company owed him an incentive bonus worth 2 percent of the studio's profits from movies or TV shows produced or acquired for distribution during his tenure.

Katzenberg, who co-founded the fledgling DreamWorks studios with Steven Spielberg and David Geffen, sued Disney in 1996.

Profits that Katzenberg claims to be owed conceivably included everything from a slice of the estimated $1 billion in earnings generated by "The Lion King" to merchandise sold by Disney's Mighty Ducks hockey team.

The case could have opened Disney's internal accounting and personnel practices to public display.

Corrections CLARIFICATIONS

In the Stadium Expansion section of Wednesday's Collegian, there was an error in the list of K-State sports facilities on pages S2 and S3. The $5 per-ticket per-game increase used to pay for restroom/concession improvements on KSU Stadium was charged to alumni and friends of K-State. The fee was reduced for faculty, not alumni, and was not imposed on the student tickets.

RCPD waits for results of investigation before taking action after DUI arrest

MATT KREPS
staff writer

The Riley County Police Department is awaiting the outcome of the investigation of its assistant director's arrest before taking action, according to a press release issued Wednesday.

Larry Woodyard, who has served more than 25 years in law enforcement, was arrested after a two-car collision Sunday night. He was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol.

The press release, issued by RCPD Director Alvan Johnson, said Woodyard had talked with him and agreed to take full responsibility for his actions. Woodyard has entered an evaluation program and will seek counseling if instructed to do so.

Johnson said in the release he would investigate the matter internally when he receives copies of the reports regarding the arrest.

The RCPD has refused to comment on Woodyard's job status or how this affects its organization, saying all inquiries must go through the director's office. Johnson has been unavailable to comment due to the Veterans Day holiday and vacation. He did not return phone messages left at RCPD.

Greeks come home with national awards

ASHLEY YOULE
staff reporter

The K-State greek system has received national recognition. Fifteen fraternities and sororities came home with many awards from national conferences that took place during summer 1997.

Each chapter has specific ways of applying for prestigious chapter awards.

ΑΓΜ ΩΘΨ Γρεεκ Λιφε
GREEK LIFE

For the Pi Beta Phi sorority, receiving the Jo Ann Minor Roderick Chapter of Excellence award was an honor.

"Every spring we fill out the award sheet for the summer conference," said Heather Wagner, president of Pi Beta Phi and senior in elementary education. "We write on topics such as our chapter's participation on campus, leadership involvement and scholarship. Basically, everything our house is involved with is included."

The 131 national chapters are split up into 30 provinces, and each individual province has a president who sorts through the applications and picks one or two of the best, she said.

"After the province presidents choose the top applicants, they are sent to our national council who then pick the top 10. It is a huge honor to be recognized as one of the top-10 chapters of this national fraternity," Wagner said. "The entire house needs to be recognized because every member contributed to winning this award."

For the fifth year in a row, the Sigma Chi fraternity received the Peterson Significant Chapter Award.

"This is the highest honor a chapter can receive," said Chris Cole, president of Sigma Chi and senior in construction science and management. "Out of 220 chapters, 56 are awarded it, and we've been honored to have received it 17 times," he said.

The Sigma Chis have a Peterson chairman who is in charge of the award, which is based on chapter attendance, grades, campus leadership and other fraternity areas.

"We pick up the next year's requirements at our national convention and start working on it then," Cole said.

The Alpha Xi Delta sorority received many awards at its national convention, one being the Order of the Quill Award, an award received the past four years.

"This award is an award for efficiency," said Caitlin Bridgham, president of Alpha Xi Delta and senior in early childhood education. "It's based on areas such as chapter management, membership reports, social reports and philanthropies," she said.

Keeping in contact with the financial adviser and staying in good standing with the chapter was a requirement of the Financial Efficiency Award, another one they received.

"It was exciting to win the other awards, but I was on the edge of my seat for the Order of the Quill Award," she said. "It's pretty hard to get it, considering only 5 to 10 percent of the chapters receive it."

For the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity, receiving the highest award, the Grand High Alpha, hasn't been a problem for 21 years.

This award is given every three years to chapters that have excelled in all areas of the fraternity for six consecutive semesters.

"Each semester a national consultant visits our fraternity, and after meeting with our officers and evaluating our chapter, he gives us a rating," said Ryan Laudermilk, member of Lambda Chi and senior in pre-optometry and Spanish. "At the end of the three-year period, the scores are combined and if we have excelled each semester, we can receive the award."

Among the top-five chapters in the nation, the local Lambda Chi chapter has received the Grand High Alpha Award seven consecutive times.

"It's a big source of pride for us. Receiving the award seven times shows that we have continued to excel for 21 years in a row," Laudermilk said. "It doesn't get much better than that."

In addition to the chapters winning awards, several students, two graduate students and one adviser received awards.

Tim Lindemuth, director of Alumni Publications and editor of the K-Stater magazine, received the Pi Kappa Phi chapter adviser of the year award.

"It blew me over," Lindemuth said. "I do what I can to help the guys because I want to give something back to them."

Initiated into the fraternity in 1992, Lindemuth attends weekly officers' meetings, social functions, intramurals and other chapter events.

K-State greek houses win awards

Fifteen K-State fraternity and sorority houses received recognition at their national conferences during the summer.

Police officials should uphold laws they're sworn to enforce

While no person is perfect, it goes without saying that police are expected to follow the law that they have been sworn to enforce.

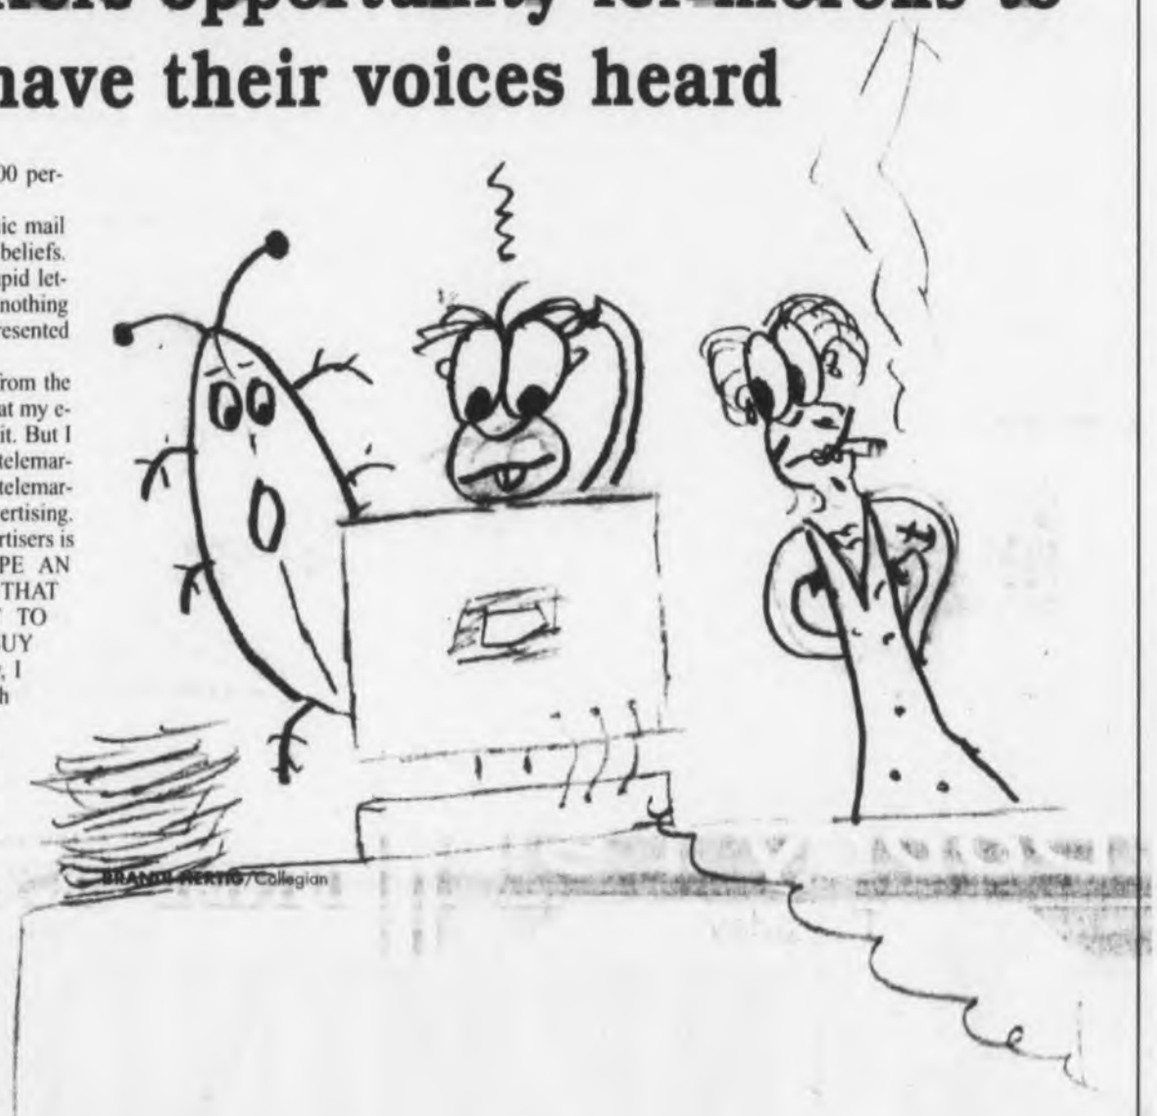
But Larry Woodyard, assistant director of Riley County Police Department, was arrested Sunday for driving under the influence of alcohol. If convicted, it will send a message to the community that police are not practicing the very laws they are arresting people for breaking.

Many officers are trying to set an example for the community to live up to. It's unfortunate that such a serious crime might be nullifying the message other police officers have worked so hard to send.

But what is ultimately hypocritical about the situation is law enforcement officials should know the consequences of drinking and driving better than the rest of the community. They've seen the wrecks. They've seen the deaths. It could be said that Woodyard was fortunate to have only caused a two-car collision, when the results of DUIs can be so much more costly.

Equally, officers should have better knowledge of the alternatives to driving while under the influence of alcohol. Situations like these can be easily avoided if drivers follow the example of college students and call a taxi or have a designated driver.

It is to be commended, however, that Woodyard has been held to the standards of the rest of the community. It appears that he was given no special treatment just because he was in a position of power. After all, the only thing worse than seeing a police officer commit a crime is to see a police officer get away with a crime. Citizens will be watching to make sure that, if convicted, Woodyard is given just penalty for his actions.



Otherwise, a cynical community might stop listening to all of the good advice police are trying to give.

CYBERSTUPIDITY

E-mail offers opportunity for morons to have their voices heard

BRANDI HERTIG/Collegian

I support freedom of speech 100 percent.

But the advent of electronic mail has thrown a comic twist into my beliefs. While I have received incredibly stupid letters and moronic prank phone calls, nothing can compare to the idiocy that has presented itself in my e-mail account.

A lot of the e-mail I get comes from the advertising industry, which thinks that my e-mail account is a bulletin board for it. But I have the same complaints about telemarketers. Whereas I will hang up on telemarketers, I will also delete e-mail advertising. The worst part about electronic advertisers is that THEY THINK IF YOU TYPE AN ENTIRE E-MAIL IN ALL CAPS THAT YOU WILL SOMEHOW WANT TO READ ON AND THEN GO BUY THEIR PRODUCT. Needless to say, I have little patience for e-mails, which give me headaches.

The worst e-mails I receive are forwards. Aside from the fact that they are usually not funny, I also tend to have all of my friends send me copies of the same stupid forward. I usually end up e-mailing the forward back to the sender 50 times, with the attached message, "I hate forwards." Chain letters, an even less useful type of forwarded message, usually warrant about 100 replies.

What really strikes me is how random some of the e-mails are. I understand that my e-mail address is posted on various places on the World Wide Web. A lot of people read my column on the Electronic Collegian. But I think too many people mistake an e-mail address for a sign of authority.

Those of us in cyberspace, believe it or not, do not know everything about everything. I appreciate e-mails from people who went to my high school or relatives I've never met. I really enjoy both the positive and negative feedback I receive about my columns. But some of the e-mails I receive just don't make sense.

KELLY FURNAS is a sophomore in print journalism. You can send e-mail to Kelly at krf5663@ksu.edu.

With that in mind, here are some samples of e-mails I have received:

"I own about 80-90 Madagascar Hissing Cockroaches and sell them for $3 apiece, so if you want any let me know. Also I was wondering if the cockroaches give birth to live cockroaches or eggs. I can't figure it out, I've seen them giving birth many times but I can't figure out whether or not it is live or egg birth."

Actually, I was looking for some good cockroaches. But $3 each? How do you sleep at night?

"I'm coming from Brussels (Belgium, Europe) and I'm surprised to learn that it exist other Gudenkauf in the world."

Not as surprised as I am!

"We have a rock we got from the landscape place, and we would like to know how to clean and treat it. We stuck it in our tank once and white fungus started growing on it. We would greatly appreciate it if you could help us."

Ah, public education. My tax dollars at work.

"We have a project in our school and I'm searching for answers. Can you please help me? Thank you very much, <:"

I would be more than willing to help since I am an expert in the field of, uh, answers.

"I am looking for information in relation to where you can go in Missouri to become a horticulture therapist. Thanks for your time."

Go to Missouri — tell them Kelly sent you.

"I think a man in a dress is a babe! I'm single. Hear me roar. I'm looking."

And please continue to look — elsewhere. I gave up that habit a long time ago.

"Why is it that Northern California (Bay Area) is paying on an average 19 cents per gallon more on gas than Southern California (L.A.)? This IS NOT FAIR!!!!! Is there a place on the Web that I can send a bulletin?"

I completely agree, comrade! Submit your bulletin at www.microsoft.com. They'll take care of those capitalist scum bags.

It goes without saying that I didn't actually reply to any of these e-mails. Having been flamed many times myself, I know it's not pleasant to have someone yell at me when I thought I was doing something completely harmless.

So I will continue to cheerfully download e-mail that has no relevance to my life. I will be more than happy to read it, and respond if necessary. Until people completely understand what it is they are trying to do on the Internet, I feel responsible to try to get them to the information they are looking for.

Then again, maybe if I respond in all caps they'll leave me alone.

Military

Service members, veterans only human, not always heroes

Veterans Day has just passed, and as always, it has been either overlooked or over-sentimentalized. As a veteran of the U.S. Navy myself, I would like to tell you about some things that I was thinking about on Veterans Day, and maybe they could help you put this memorial in perspective.

I should warn you that I will probably be using what is euphemistically known as "adult language" — after all, we will be talking about sailors — so if that sort of thing offends you, please read no further.

One of the things that always strikes me as odd about the holiday is its insincere tone. The vast majority of soldiers who have died in battle in this century were draftees who had no choice as to whether they should fight. They might have been patriots, brimming with enthusiasm about fighting for God and country, but they were more likely to have been scared children. So what is our country saying by having this holiday? We sure are sorry we had to send you or your relatives overseas to kill or be killed? I might buy that if a friend of mine hadn't recently enrolled with the selective service.

VIEWPOINT
TERRY WELCH
TERRY WELCH is a junior in radio/TV. You can send your e-mail to Terry at tw1915@ksu.edu.

But really, the issue of how our country fights and justifies its wars is a debate for another column. I want to tell you about the soldiers, sailors, Marines and pilots themselves.

During his failed run at the presidency, Bob Dole was speaking to a veterans' group when he claimed veterans were just a little bit better than other Americans. I was still on board my ship, the USS Abraham Lincoln, at the time and had to laugh, because two days before this statement, our showers had once again been attacked by the "Phantom Shitter."

The P.S. was a guy (as far as we know it was one person) who for some reason found it funny to defecate in our shower stalls. He probably found it a lot funnier because we only had four shower stalls to be shared by 80 people. He would attack maybe once a month, giving almost everyone a chance to witness the spectacle at least once. I swear by all that is holy that I am not making this up.

On the scale of gross stories I could tell you about my time in the military (including my time at a joint-service school, so I could relate some good ones about grunts, too), I consider this one a "medium." It's about the worst one I could imagine writing down and sharing with the campus, however. Don't you feel lucky?

This one man's actions are not representative of the military as a whole, but the picture of military people as valiant patriots is flawed just as far in the other direction.

My job title in the Navy was journalist, and in every single interview I did during my tenure as a military propagandist, I would ask the subjects why they had joined the service. Sometimes these anecdotes were priceless and were integrated into features about these people, but the one thing I never heard was "to defend my country."

It is my experience that most enlisted people join the military because they either don't know what they want to be when they grow up, or they've already screwed up so much as civilians they need a fresh start. I fit into the former category.

If we are to use my story as a case study, I've got to give you a little background. My father was in the Navy during the Vietnam War, a crew member on P-3 Orion airplanes. Even from the tiny windows of the "Sky Pig," the war was horrible enough that my father won't talk about it today. I know better than to ask, too.

One day when I was about 12, I had made some remark about the military when my father looked at me gravely and said, "If the Navy ever came to get you, I would dig a hole, put you in it and cover you up until they were gone."

Jump cut to a day nine years later. I drank my way out of college and worked for dad back home in St. John, Kan., when I decided to enlist in the Navy. Over a beer in our wood shop one night, I told my father and expected an argument. He looked at me and said, "Maybe that's a good idea." Suddenly, I knew how far I had fallen.

So that's my story. Many others are very similar.

I would like to close by saying that I have the utmost respect for people who stick it out in the military, and I don't really have a huge problem with the concept of Veterans Day in general.

But I do have a problem with the concept of service members and veterans as inherently heroic. They are a cross section of our society. They're only human. To make them seem more or less than that would be missing the true tragedy of the sacrifice some have made.

Editorial board misleads readers in expansion issue

Editor,

We feel the Collegian editorial board has missed the boat on stadium expansion and been duplicitous in informing students.

In your Oct. 22 editorial "Stadium expansion vote should represent opinion of all students," you state that our fees pay for services such as Lafene Health Center, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and the K-State Student Union.

However, you fail to mention that Student Publications Inc. also benefits from these fees. Could it be that you purposely left out Student Publications to protect yourselves from the same arguments you use against stadium expansion?

You accuse the athletic department of "condescending threats ... to push this deal through." Similar tactics were used by Collegian staff when their fees were in question two years ago. We vividly remember Collegian representatives speaking at our living organization requesting support of the fees or else "we can't supply the student body with the Collegian." These same living organizations have been used by the athletic department, yet in this issue the tactic is chastised by the editorial board.

As for Students for First Things First, its opinion is as shallow as the Collegian's coverage. The organization's argument that stadium expansion should come at the expense of those who attend games is asinine. By that logic, only those people using services such as Lafene, the Rec Complex, Hale Library and Student Publications should be charged. How stellar would these services be with per-use funding?

Another argument made by this group is that its members derive no benefit from stadium expansion. This, too, is false. It has been chronicled in several publications that enrollment has increased with the rise of our football program.

Even President Jon Wefald credits a successful football program with the perception of a successful university. With higher enrollment figures comes greater revenue, diversity and scholastic aptitude.

A successful athletics program also adds name recognition to our university. In several job interviews we've experienced, comments on our football program's success have been made. Whether it should be this way, a successful athletic program adds clout to our academic reputation.

We feel that the money we are spending today on our education is an investment in our future. This issue and others should not be debated on cost alone, but on the future rate of return generated by said issues.

Guest column disrespectul to print on Veterans Day

Editor,

I am writing in response to two articles the Collegian published Tuesday. The first was an article on the front page about the ROTC cadets and officers placing a wreath at the Vietnam Memorial on campus honoring those students who had died.

Then, on the Diversions page, there was a column by Kevyn Jacobs blasting the United States' involvement in Vietnam.

I realize that you have freedom of the press and can print Jacobs' article whenever you want, but I found it hypocritical and disrespectful to the veterans by printing it on Veterans Day, especially after printing the other article on the first page.

Candidate left off list of Marshall, Rhodes scholars

Editor,

I would like to applaud the Collegian for writing about the K-State Rhodes and Marshall scholarship candidates. As one of their advisers, I have come to know these students well and am pleased to see that they are getting recognition for their hard work.

However, I would like to add that one candidate was omitted. Nusheen Ameenuddin, a 1997 graduate in biology and pre-medicine with a minor in Spanish, is also a candidate. I'm certain everyone joins me in wishing them the best as they proceed through the application process.

Students should demand open halls for Thanksgiving

Editor,

Thanksgiving break is coming up. Do you know what you are going to do? Many people will go home for the holidays, and others will travel to some family get-togethers. Many of us will stay here in Manhattan, not because we want to, but because we have other commitments.

For many people, it will be a job, and for others it could be college-related. The question that comes from all of this is, where are you going to stay? If you live in a house or an apartment, you have nothing to worry about. If you are a residence hall student, you had better get on the ball because, more than likely, your hall will close.

If you live in the residence halls, which about 3,300 K-State students do, you will be forced out of your room and put into guest housing if you want to stay at K-State during holiday breaks.

If you live in a private room or a suite, you will lose that privilege and be forced to live in a double-occupancy room. These rooms are also limited.

You will be forced to move all your belongings that you need to your temporary room. If you forget anything, you will not be able to retrieve it because the halls are locked during breaks. All of this will be at your expense, not the university's.

There is no simple answer to this problem. One thing that is inhibiting the solution is that residence hall students do not voice their opinions. I am sure that most of you would like to stay in your room that you spend hard-earned money on. It might cost the university more money, but if students demand the service, concessions will be made. The issue will be addressed and solutions to the problem will arise.

Students must get involved. Only then can we go to the Department of Housing and Dining Services and demand action. Nothing will get done if we don't pull together. Like many of us, I would like to have peace of mind knowing that I will not need to worry about where I am going to live during holiday breaks.

TOASTMASTERS INTERNATIONAL

K-State chapter provides interactive meetings to develop communication skills

LORI GUILFOYLE
staff reporter

The College of Business Administration is following the lead of the city of Manhattan, Kansas Farm Bureau and the College of Engineering with the organization of a new chapter of Toastmasters International.

In spring 1997, Toastmasters started in the College of Business Administration. Through fliers in Calvin Hall and announcements in the Collegian, Toastmasters attracted members for a local group, which already has 180,000 members in 54 countries in the world.

According to the Toastmasters International Constitution, its mission is to "provide a mutually supportive learning environment in which every individual member has the opportunity to develop oral communication and leadership skills, which in turn foster self-confidence and personal growth."

"Toastmasters provides the opportunity to enhance and improve communication in a nonthreatening environment," Yar Ebadi, dean of business administration, said. "It inspires members to reach a higher level of communicating."

Brian Galyon, senior in marketing and international business and president of Toastmasters, said it is a great way to overcome the fear of public speaking.

"I hated getting up in front of people to give presentations, but now it is no big deal. Now that I'm not nervous, I can organize my thoughts and really focus on the presentation," Galyon said.

Lisa Grossenbacher, senior in finance, said students who want to improve their presentation skills should consider attending the meetings and joining the club. It is a laid-back atmosphere that will help you speak in front of others, she said.

"It is an interactive group. You get something out of every meeting," she said. "You don't just sit back and listen to a speaker."

Galyon said professional speakers very rarely attend the meetings. The purpose of the group is to build each individual member's public-speaking skills. Therefore everyone has the opportunity to present speeches and evaluate one another.

Ebadi said it is important that the students control the meetings by taking on significant roles.

Each new member is given a manual that teaches the basics of public speaking. It includes forms that identify the talks in the order they will be given and provides tips, objectives and a set time limit for each talk. Evaluation forms are included for every scheduled talk. These sheets provide feedback from peers that the speakers can use to improve their skills.

The manual provides instructions for 10 speeches to be followed chronologically. With three scheduled speakers a meeting, each member may present a couple of speeches during a semester. Because all members present in front of their peers, it doesn't seem to involve as much pressure, Galyon said.

> "You get something out of every meeting. You don't just sit back and listen to a speaker."
> • Lisa Grossenbacher, senior in finance

Each meeting has a set agenda, made in advance so members are prepared for their turn to present the various speeches of the evening. The toastmaster brings the meeting to order, introduces roles for the meeting and closes the meeting. Meetings begin with one or two jokes told by the assigned jokemaster for the evening.

The ice breaker follows the jokes and is the first speech any member will present in front of the group. It has a set time limit of four to six minutes. It is first because it eases members in by allowing them to talk about themselves.

Two other members follow with speeches. The next speech in the sequence is a five- to seven-minute "speak with sincerity" speech, which allows members to discuss subjects in which they strongly believe. Examples of sincerity speeches include fraternities on campus going dry, and drinking and driving.

After the speakers have finished, a designated member begins table topics by asking members who didn't speak at the meeting for their opinion on current events or campus issues. For example, some discussions have included Microsoft's anti-trust laws or the stadium expansion. These spot interviews help everyone practice impromptu speaking.

One of the benefits of Toastmasters International is the option to continue to be a member after graduation, Grossenbacher said. Many corporations, including Boeing, AT&T, Sprint International and Arthur Andersen & Co., have Toastmasters International clubs within their organizations.

Toastmasters is not limited to business majors. It is for people who want to brush up on their presentation skills, Galyon said.

"In the business world, communication is the key to success," Ebadi said. "Anything that enhances a student's communication skills will add to his or her education and make them more successful."

Revised Megan's Law allows gay men to remove names from sex offender list

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Men branded as sex offenders decades ago for consensual homosexual acts with other adults can now remove their names from a list used to compile a public registry of rapists and molesters.

The revised version of Megan's Law went into effect over the weekend.

"Gay men no longer must face the indignity of having to undergo the annual registration as sex offenders," said Elizabeth Schroeder, associate director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California. "This law is long overdue."

California's Megan's Law, originally passed in 1995, requires that dangerous sex criminals register, and allows the public to see their names and whereabouts. The law was named for a New Jersey girl killed by a paroled molester in her neighborhood.

But when the state Department of Justice compiled a list of 64,000 criminals covered by the law, it included people convicted as far back as 1944 — a time when gays were prosecuted for consensual acts between adults.

Some elderly gay men were brought to police stations and warned that failing to register was a felony.

State officials said the men's names would not have not shown up on the publicly accessible registry because their crimes were not severe enough.

But ACLU officials said a study due out in July 1998 should reveal how many gay men's names made it to the public registry.

The amended law allows sex offenders to appeal to the Department of Justice and in court, if necessary.

Sports plays secret role in songwriting

Throughout the semester, I have prided myself on focusing on the different ways in which sports influence our society and our everyday lives. This week is no different.

The past few days I researched modern music and found many instances in which sports play a key role. In fact, many of the most popular songs in the past couple of years have been secretly based on events and personalities in sports. Many of the lyrics and titles were later changed to appeal to a wider audience, while other songs are in the process of being rewritten.

I've compiled a list of many of the songs that have been affected by sports. I'll bet you've never heard any of these on a Jock Jams compact disc.

"Don't Cry For Me, Argentina" — Andrew Lloyd Webber.

This song from "Evita" was in the process of being revamped this past weekend in Lincoln, Neb. Before the Huskers pulled off a miraculous win in overtime, a diehard fan decided to dedicate a new version of the song to the eminent climb in the suicide rate in Nebraska had the Huskers actually lost to Missouri. The new title was going to be "Don't Cry For Me, Makovicka."

"Don't Speak" — No Doubt.

Lead singer Gwen Stefani wrote this catchy tune after watching a college basketball game on ESPN. She said the idea just popped into her head after having to listen to commentator Dick Vitale for an entire game. The original title of the song was "(For the Love of God) Don't Speak."

CRESTON KUENZI

CRESTON KUENZI is a junior in computer engineering. You can send your e-mail to Creston at creston@ksu.edu.

"Dude (Looks Like a Lady)" — Aerosmith.

Lead singer Steven Tyler lamented a short time ago that this concept sprang to mind after Dennis Rodman showed up at one of Aerosmith's concerts in drag. The song has since been modified from the original "Dude (Looks Like an Extremely Repulsive Lady)."

"Insensitive" — Jann Arden.

Sources tell me Arden wrote this song about the Houston Rockets' Charles Barkley. The story goes that Arden was one of the women who was with Barkley when he tossed a bar patron through a window after the man threw a glass of ice on Barkley and some female companions. Arden thought the whole thing was pretty cool so perhaps she asked, "You might have some advice to give on how to be insensitive."

"Smells Like Teen Spirit" — Nirvana.

This legendary Seattle-based band first made waves with this song in the early '90s. The story goes that the band visited the Mariners' locker room after a game and just a week later cut an early form of the song, "Smells Like Ken Griffey Jr."

"I Don't Want To Wait" — Paula Cole.

Cole's publicist won't admit it, but the lyrics of this popular song sound like it was written from the perspective of a K-State fan anxiously waiting to see whether the Cats get an Alliance Bowl bid. Just look at the words from the chorus.

"I don't want to wait for our lives to be over,
I want to know right now what will it be,
I don't want to wait for our lives to be over,
Will it be yes or will it be sorry."

Even though she's originally from Massachusetts, it's obvious from these lyrics that she's been converted to Wildcat loyalty.

"Tubthumping" — Chumbawumba.

I think a slight alteration to this song's lyrics would fit nicely if the Cats are finally able to beat Colorado this weekend. It could go something like:

"We'll be singing,
When we're winning,
We'll be singing,
Cats get knocked down,
but they get up again
You're never going to keep them down."

It's got a pretty nice ring to it, don't you think? Maybe I could title it "Buffthumping."

Buffs not bluffing

Unranked Colorado will try for bowl-qualifying win No.6 at KSU Stadium

SAM FELSENFELD
staff writer

When the college football season started, Colorado was ranked No. 1 in the nation by the Sporting News and looking forward to a Nov. 29 meeting with Nebraska.

The match with the Cornhuskers, a home game for Colorado, figured to determine the Big 12 Championship. The winner was going to play for the national title in the Orange Bowl.

But the Buffaloes' season hasn't been too glamorous so far. The team that was slated to fight for the national championship is instead fighting to get into a second-rate bowl.

"We've been nowhere close to our expectation level. There's too many reasons to point out. We'll have all off-season to try and figure out why," Colorado coach Rick Neuheisel said.

The Buffs enter Saturday's game with a 5-4 record, one win shy of the six required for a bowl invitation. However, to get that sixth win, Colorado will have to beat K-State or Nebraska. The Cats and Huskers are a combined 16-0 when they don't play each other.

Still, Colorado will have history on its side when it takes the field Saturday. The Buffs haven't lost to the Cats since 1984, allowing only a 16-16 tie in 1993.

Colorado will also have the arm of John Hessler on its side. Hessler leads the Buffs' passing attack, which averages 220.7 yards a game — the toughest aerial attack the Cats have faced this season.

"I'm not sure they've been tested in the passing department, so hopefully we can go in there and throw the ball," Neuheisel said.

But the Cats have other ideas.

"I believe in myself. I believe in my team," said senior cornerback Demetric Denmark, who will face the task of shutting down Colorado's passing game. "I think we have a great opportunity. I'll put it that way. I think we have an excellent opportunity to come in and do something special."

If the Buffs can't establish a passing attack, they'll have to try their running game. However, they're only rushing for 133.3 yards a game and they only have one 300-pounder on their offensive line, right guard Melvin Thomas.

Defensively, Colorado will run a 4-3 to try to stop K-State's balanced offense. The Buffs know that to find success, they'll have to stop Cat quarterback Michael Bishop. Only Nebraska has succeeded so far, but Bishop still led the Cats to 26 points during that game.

Neuheisel knows this, and he's concerned. He knows what a quarterback who can run can do to opposing defenses after watching Kordell Stewart, who now starts for the Pittsburgh Steelers, play for the Buffs.

"Michael Bishop is an exceptional athlete. There's no question he has the skills and abilities that make him a great quarterback. I don't know at this point in time if he's as polished a passer as Kordell Stewart was in his senior year, but he's still got another year," Neuheisel said.

Entering the game against K-State, the Buffs are coming off a 43-38 win at Iowa State last weekend. Although they were expected to win by more than three touchdowns, they trailed by 18 at halftime and needed a touchdown in the last minute of the game to pull out the victory.

"We have the ability to fight when we need to, but we need to be able to fight from the outset," Neuheisel said. "It seems like we have to get knocked in the teeth to react."

Colorado will try to avoid coming out slowly against the Cats. At 8-1, K-State has displayed the ability to put teams away, unlike 1-8 Iowa State.

And the Buffs probably won't catch the Cats taking their disappointing record lightly.

"We're in a position now to do things we've never done before," senior tight end Jarrett Grosdidier said. "I really think this team is not overlooking any games left and taking one game at a time. We can't overlook Colorado, a team we've never beat before."

K-STATE ADDS ASSISTANT ATHLETICS TRAINER

Mary Meaux joined the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics staff as assistant athletics trainer. Meaux, 28, comes to Manhattan after working 2 1/2 years at the Lafayette General Medical Center Sports Medicine Clinic in Lafayette, La. A native of Abbeville, La., Meaux will work with women's basketball while also overseeing baseball.

As an athletics trainer at the Lafayette clinic, Meaux worked one year with an ice hockey team in the East Coast Hockey League and one year with a soccer team in the Eastern Indoor Soccer League. Meaux also assisted with outreach programs to local high schools.

She received a bachelor's degree in health and physical education with an emphasis in sports medicine in 1993 from the University of Southwestern Louisiana. Meaux earned a master's degree in student affairs from Clemson in 1995. She worked as a student trainer as an undergraduate and then a graduate assistant athletics trainer at Clemson during her postgraduate studies.

Basketball team prepares for different season

Wildcat women open season tonight against Victoria All-Stars

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

When K-State's women's basketball team takes the court at 7 p.m. tonight in Bramlage Coliseum in its first exhibition game against the Victoria All-Stars, it will look very different than the squad that ended the 1996-97 season at the NCAA Tournament.

Gone is leading scorer from a year ago and first-team All-Big 12 forward Andria Jones, along with Missy Decker, Kayla Hester, Kjersten Larson, Sara Munson, and Amy Short.

Only four players are returning from last year's squad: guard Brit Jacobson, guard/forward Jenny Coalson, center Angie Finkes and forward Nicky Ramage. Sunny Jacobson is sitting out this season with a medical redshirt. Ramage and Jacobson will not play tonight. Ramage is out with a sprained ankle, and Jacobson has a stress precursor, which could lead to a stress fracture. Both players are on a week-to-week playing status.

Newcomers to the K-State lineup include freshman guards Dee DeShay, Morgen Finneran and Kim Woodlee; and forwards Brandy Harris and Marshela Webb. Also coming in are two community college transfers, forwards Ewa Laskowska and Heather Smith.

Ramage said all the new players are doing well in practice.

"I think they're doing awesome," Ramage said. "I look back to when I was a freshman and I compare myself to them, and they're just outstanding."

Laskowska comes to K-State after a successful community college career. She went to Independence Community College, where she was a 1996-97 second-team NJCAA All-American. She led her team with 19.5 points per game a year ago, and shot 47.5 percent from the field and 83.5 percent from the free-throw line.

Laskowska says there is a difference between community college and NCAA Division I basketball.

"I'm working harder than I ever have been," Laskowska said. "We're all working really hard."

Head coach Deb Patterson said she was hoping Jacobson, a natural shooting guard, could play the point to take some pressure off of the newcomers, but now that can't happen. She said Woodlee and DeShay will share time at point guard.

"They had a really good week (of practice), and that was really encouraging," Patterson said. "They're getting experience they wouldn't have otherwise gotten."

Patterson said the only starters she's sure about are Coalson and Laskowska. Finkes started nine games a year ago, all in conference, and might also start. Patterson said that she wants to get all her players significant minutes and experience in the preseason games.

With the lack of experienced players, Patterson said the team will keep the game plan simple.

"Right now, we're just keeping it very elementary," she said. "I'm looking for execution and I'm looking to test our rebounding ability."

The game will be broadcast on KSDB-FM 91.9, and admission to the game is free with a student ID.

Volleyball team facing tough stretch ahead in race for 2nd place

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

In the Big 12 volleyball race, it looks like Texas will be No. 1, and there will be a tough battle for No. 2. What K-State does this weekend will help to determine if the Wildcats will be in that battle.

Texas leads the conference with a 14-0 Big 12 record. Colorado is in second place with a 10-3 conference mark, and five teams are within three games of the Buffaloes.

K-State is one of those teams. The Cats, after splitting a pair of five-game matches against Kansas and Oklahoma, are 9-5 in conference play. K-State is 9-2 in its past 11 matches, but now has to play the four nationally ranked teams in the Big 12 in its next four matches, all on the road.

"We have a tough road trip, and we have to get a couple," Coach Jim McLaughlin said.

The Cats could make up some ground this weekend. They play at No. 11 Nebraska, which is 9-4 in Big 12 play, Friday and at No. 22 Colorado on Saturday. When the Cornhuskers and Buffaloes traveled to Manhattan earlier this season to kick off K-State's Big 12 schedule, each team took a 3-1 decision over the Cats.

"The two teams are right there with us," middle blocker Val Wieck said. "If we beat either team, it would give us a significant win, which would help us even more."

K-State will be helped by the return of Wieck. She has been away from the team for two weeks, but will play this weekend. The Cats went 2-1 in her absence.

K-State has never beaten Nebraska, with an 0-56 lifetime record vs. the Cornhuskers, but the 1995 national champions are down a bit this year. The Huskers have lost six matches, as many as the past three years combined. Could this be the time for the Cats to beat Nebraska?

"I think that they're struggling a little bit, but they're still Nebraska," Wieck said. "You never know what they can come up with."

Saturday night, the Cats play the Buffaloes in Boulder. K-State split the 1996 series with Colorado, and the Buffs disposed of the Cats earlier this season. However, the players are confident they can avenge the earlier loss.

"The last time we played Colorado, it was really early in the Big 12 season," Wieck said. "We hadn't made the improvements we needed to have made when we played them last, and I think we have made those.

"Colorado is very scrappy. We're going to have to block well, and we're going to have to play good defense against them," she said.

After that, they go to No. 8 Texas and No. 18 Texas A&M. K-State beat Texas A&M 3-0 at Ahearn Field House, but lost 3-0 to Texas the next night.

"These next two weekends are going to be big," Wieck said.

Campus art galleries showcase student talent

Willard Hall Gallery

"Uncommon Views on Common Ground," a show of work by the graduate students of the Visual Arts Association of K-State, is in the Willard Hall Gallery until Friday.

Once again, the mantle of providing the campus with excellent student art rests upon the shoulders of K-State's talented graduate students. These artists, some of whom are proven gallery regulars, deserve a look by even the most unenthused student.

Rich Bergen's continuing fascination with jacks alone makes this show a worthy diversion. Bergen, whose landmark "Lumberjack" sculpture graces the West Stadium lawn, has pushed into digital media with his latest jack work.

Bergen's "Skyjack Series: Floaters" depicts silver jacks floating high above the landscape amid cloud banks, each reflecting the other and the environment with particular detail. The series continues with two other works, "Crashed" and "Sinkers," which speak for themselves.

Two nightmarish drawings of women meshed into a mania of organic forms by Barbara Waterman-Peters are nicely offset by Suzanne Hale's cool abstractions in her "New Ruins" painting series that plays with colorful shapes.

Among the sculpture, there is interesting contrast between Marko Fields' witty "Smartass Teapot Thinks It's Alive: Oughta Join the Carnival," porcelain, sterling and carnelian, and Pat Taddy's "D1R," stoneware. The former speaks for itself with its pulsing colors and dancing amoebic forms, while the latter is a teapot in a sly evocation of mechanistic steel.

Nicolette Mitchell continues her exploration of landscape in ceramics with two pieces inspired by the Flint Hills, with "After Dark" being a coarsely textured departure from her usual ultra-smooth pieces she's exhibited in town the past two years.

It's a pleasant show, though it seems every politically correct contemporary art show this decade has chosen to find "common ground" among just about anything. Is it possible someone will ever find uncommon ground anytime soon?

Union Art Gallery

The Union Program Council's annual student art show is always to be approached with trepidation. The chosen pieces are a mixed bag of work in various media produced by students, not necessarily by artists.

The 1997 version, on the walls until Friday, is perhaps one of the more successful shows of the past four years. Representational painting, both schlocky and schlockier, is in abundance, but so is digital media, innovative photography and sculpture.

Jeff Cooper's two untitled black and white photos are pleasant surprises. In one, a desert mountainscape is closely framed by two abstract palm tree trunks creating a compelling negative space. In his other entry, the horizontal wooden slats of a brown shack impressively echo against a black-and-white image of the layers of a desert cliff. Such sensitivity to detail is unexpected.

Another surprise is the shock of looking closely at Jerod Morris' witty "Creamer with Stand," a small teapot-like sculpture that upon inspection reveals itself to be a green tank upheld by yellow, aged toy army men. Truly for the adventurous tea and coffee drinker.

The schlock of the show is best represented by DeRay Gamble's colorful painting "Winning Streak," a homage to Charles Barkley and a few other NBA stars. The large painting would almost strike you as Warholian kitsch if it weren't for the deadly serious, poster-like composition that is all about celebration rather than irony.

Union Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Admission is free.

Chang Gallery

The summer internship work of fourth-year interior architecture students is on display in Seaton Hall's Chang Gallery until Friday.

The program places students in a 30-week internship during a semester where they get professional experience for credit working with firms in interior architecture, product design, furniture design or other similar projects.

It's a smallish, tacked-up show, but occasionally interesting if you like to peek into the world of architectural internships.

Among the displays, Greg Nelson's spiel on Gould Evans Goodman shows the venerable Kansas City, Mo., firm's publicity literature and some furniture design specifications.

The high-end retail market of Overland Park, Kan., is illustrated in a large layout of drawings from Darin Hendrixson's internship with R.S. Bickford and Co. On view is a home so dizzyingly plush such luxuries as wine cellars, theaters and a planned room for a pingpong table seem almost practical.

Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Admission is free.

Strecker Gallery

Overland Park, Kan., art star Dean Mitchell opens a show of work on Friday with paintings from his European travels. The show will open with a reception from 5 to 7 p.m. Friday. Mitchell will be on hand at what will surely be a well-attended, highly anticipated opening.

The show will continue through Dec. 24. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday. Admission is free. Call 537-2099 for more information.

Students' talents to be spotlighted in upcoming play

Theater Review

While many K-State students enjoy attending theatrical events for entertainment, Dan Peterson is taking his love of theater one step further.

Peterson, graduate student in speech, is the author of the play "Lake Shore Drive," or "LSD." The play chronicles the life of two brothers who are debt collectors. One of the brothers, Calvin, begins to kill the people from whom he collects the debts, and in turn his brother abandons him. Calvin soon has delusions of grandeur and considers himself to be God, thanks to his ability to take lives.

Calvin falls in love with a heroin addict, who eventually dies. He is angered by this turn of events and questions his supposed omnipotence. He has the power to take lives but cannot restore life to his deceased girlfriend.

The story takes a turn for the better when his brother returns to him at Calvin's low.

"Calvin is more emotional, whereas his brother is more logical," Peterson said. "And this is what happens when a guy thinks he's God and then sees that people have abandoned him."

Peterson, in his second year of graduate school, has enjoyed writing plays for four years in addition to his other theater duties. "I'm a stage manager and a technician, but writing is what I love to do," Peterson said.

Even though he has sold a play to the University of Wisconsin, Peterson still doesn't consider himself a full-fledged playwright.

"I'll be a playwright when I can write plays that people can buy," Peterson said. "Your work must be sellable, and there must be people willing to buy it."

The writing of "Lake Shore Drive" took 10 months, with Peterson beginning in December 1996. Throughout those 10 months, he worked on the play an average of two hours every day, putting an emphasis on making the play easy for audiences to relate to and understand.

"I try to write abstractly, using metaphor upon metaphor, until I come up with something tangible for the audience," Peterson said. "I can bring the emotion I feel for these characters through metaphors."

While the basis of the play is Peterson's writings, Karl Rutherford is the director of "Lake Shore Drive" and puts life into the characters on stage.

Rutherford, graduate student in speech, has two years of directing experience under his belt and now devotes much of his time to the play. When rehearsals began, Rutherford was in charge of the cast five nights a week. Now Rutherford manages nightly rehearsals.

He said the plot of "Lake Shore Drive" deals with controversial topics, but he said many people can relate to the messages the play strives to get across.

"Most of the time you can take your basic experiences and apply them to real-life situations," Rutherford said.

Both writer and director said they are proud that the only involvement the Department of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance has in the production is its payments for the props, set designs and costumes. Aside from the department's financial support, the play is all in the hands of Peterson and Rutherford. And they said they believe seeing "Lake Shore Drive" is an experience that few will forget.

"It's like looking at incidences through a different set of glasses," Peterson said.

Mehndi is trendy: Hollywood celebrities make Indian body art hip

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Call it the tattoo that tickles.

Hollywood hipsters are embracing mehndi, an ancient Indian art of body painting using henna.

For thousands of years, brides in India have sat painstakingly still as artisans applied henna to their hands and feet. The elaborate designs take hours to create, and the reddish color takes even longer to set in.

Now celebrities, including actresses Mira Sorvino and Demi Moore and No Doubt lead singer Gwen Stefani, have made mehndi trendy on a continent thousands of miles away.

Designs have been simplified. Henna is packaged in ready-made mixes. Americans have even dubbed it the temporary tattoo because the color fades after a few weeks.

Sorvino dons mehndi in her upcoming film, "Replacement Killers." She also flaunted hand designs at an American Film Institute gala in Hollywood.

Other famous fans include the artist formerly known as Prince and actress Liv Tyler, who was featured with traditional bridal designs in an issue of Vanity Fair earlier this year. Tyler's hands and feet were the work of Sumita Batra, co-owner of the ZIBA Beauty Center in Artesia, Calif. Batra started offering mehndi in 1987, mainly to Indian women like herself.

"It's basically being transformed into an international trend," said Batra, who has received requests from people as far away as Ireland.

She lists three reasons: It's temporary, painless and all-natural. And its popularity has spread beyond predictable spots like New York's East Village or California's Venice boardwalk. In Stamford, Conn., for instance, Suzanne Doran and Karena Piedmont have a business called Studio Sundar, named after the Hindi word for beauty. And their clientele has surprised them, they say.

"These are not hippie people," Piedmont said. "These are women who are country club set and men who work at IBM."

Studio Sundar makes its henna paste from scratch, combining henna powder from India with botanical oils. The paste is then transferred into small plastic cones with tiny openings at the tips. After it is applied, the henna dries in a few hours and is easily scraped off. A dabbing of a lemon juice and sugar mixture helps draw out a deeper color that lasts from one to six weeks.

Prices range from $7 for a mehndi ring to more than $100 for a traditional feet set.

2 men found guilty in terrorist bombing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Two men were convicted Wednesday of conspiracy in the World Trade Center bombing, including one portrayed by prosecutors as one of history's most sinister terrorists and the architect of the 1993 attack.

The federal court jury answered a prosecutor's plea to make Ramzi Yousef and an accomplice, Eyad Ismoil, pay for plotting to kill a quarter of a million people by toppling two 110-story towers like dominoes across lower Manhattan.

The conspiracy charge carries a maximum sentence of life in prison.

The bombing killed six people, injured more than 1,000 and did considerable damage to the World Trade Center buildings, but they withstood the explosion.

The attack also stole from many Americans a sense of safety from the kind of Middle East terrorism they had only read about before.

Yousef and Ismoil both fled on commercial flights the night of the bombing. A $2 million reward for Yousef helped lead to his capture in Pakistan in 1995, the same year Ismoil was picked up in Jordan.

By then, four Islamic extremists had already been convicted of conspiracy in the case and each sentenced to 240 years in prison by U.S. District Judge Kevin Duffy, who presided over the current trial as well.

Yousef last year represented himself when he was convicted of conspiracy for killing a Japanese man with a bomb he put on a plane in December 1994, and for plotting to kill 4,000 Americans in two days by bombing a dozen airliners over the Far East. He has not yet been sentenced.

The latest trial is the fourth prominent terrorism trial in Manhattan in as many years. In 1995, Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman and nine followers of his fiery brand of Islam were convicted of conspiring to bomb New York landmarks including the United Nations, FBI headquarters, and two tunnels and a bridge linking Manhattan to New Jersey.

In the current case, prosecutors called more than 100 witnesses and introduced hundreds of exhibits to prove Yousef came to the United States in 1992 solely to bomb a landmark and scare Americans into shunning Israel.

"These defendants bombed the World Trade Center because of their own prejudice and their own hatred for Israel, for the United States and for the people of the United States," Assistant U.S. Attorney Lev Dassin said.

"Yousef was a terrorist. He came here to kill and to spread fear among the people of the United States," he said.

Dassin said Yousef quickly joined his co-conspirators in Jersey City, N.J., where they ordered chemicals and rented a storage shed to accept deliveries and an apartment to serve as a bomb factory.

Yousef's fingerprints were all over bombing manuals explaining how to construct an explosive from urea-nitrate, the key ingredient authorities said was used to make the 1,200-pound bomb used in the attack.

Fingerprints, telephone records, eyewitnesses and even a photograph from an automatic teller machine placed him at the storage shed and the bomb factory.

Ismoil was accused of driving the bomb-laden truck into the Trade Center's garage.

Afterward, Yousef bragged about the attack even as federal agents returned him in handcuffs and leg irons to the United States, prosecutors said.

His oral confession was described to the jury by Secret Service Agent Brian Parr, who said Yousef insisted no notes be taken and even ate a diagram he had drawn of the Trade Center when he feared agents would take it.

Parr said Yousef told him he would have made the bomb bigger if he had more money and might have picked a different day for the attack if he had money for the next month's rent.

Yousef's lawyer, Roy Kulcsar, accused Parr of lying, saying he and other agents would do whatever they could to avenge one of the worst terrorist attacks in the nation's history.

Ismoil, who cried uncontrollably when he was first brought to court in 1995, claimed in statements that he did not know a bomb was in the van. He said he was told it was a shipment of cleaning products.

Dassin told jurors the claim was "equivalent to the dog ate my homework."

"It's a pathetic lie," he said.

Ismoil told a friend before he left his Dallas home days before the bombing that she should deny knowing him if anyone asked about him, the prosecutor said.

"The defendants felt they were above the law," Dassin said. "These cowards didn't want to be held accountable for their actions."

Jury selection begins in Unabomber trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Theodore Kaczynski watched attentively Wednesday as some of his prospective jurors confided their anguish about imposing the death penalty — even in a case as notorious as the deadly Unabomber killings.

"It is my conclusion that the death penalty does not serve a useful purpose," one man said. But when pressed, the man said he could impose death, because "it is the law of the land and has to be applied."

The man was one of three prospects to pass muster in the first round of meticulous jury questioning. Prosecutors and the defense will seat a panel of 12 jurors and six alternates to judge the Montana hermit on charges that could send him to his death.

Kaczynski's much-awaited trial began with 600 prospective jurors waiting to be questioned in a jury selection process which could stretch to more than a month.

U.S. District Judge Garland Burrell Jr. allowed lawyers for both prosecution and defense to supplement his own inquiry with their questions. Their questions were clearly focused on two areas: the ability to impose the death penalty and a willingness to put aside what they've heard about the case.

In the first round of questioning, three of six prospects were immediately dismissed. One woman said she could not impose the death penalty and live with herself afterward. Another said he was a proponent of the death penalty and had witnessed the commotion surrounding the last Unabomber death. A third man was eliminated because service on the jury would pose a personal hardship.

Burrell has ruled that jurors will serve anonymously, and the media has been barred from identifying or photographing them.

Prospective jurors were referred to by numbers rather than names. They were assured this was not because of any danger to them but to protect their privacy.

There were murmurs in the spectator section as Kaczynski entered the courtroom.

He appeared cheerful and animated as he conferred with his attorneys. Throughout the questioning, he appeared to be offering comments to his lawyers, although he never spoke aloud.

Kaczynski, 55, faces a 10-count federal indictment in four of the Unabomber's 16 bomb attacks. Besides the deaths of the Sacramento men, he is accused in the mail bombings that crippled Yale University computer scientist David Gelernter and University of California-San Francisco geneticist Charles Epstein in June 1993. He also faces a later trial in a New Jersey bomb killing.

CLASSIFIED AD WRITING TIPS
- List items or services first. Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
- Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
- Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

"We will send out our teams in the normal way tomorrow," Butler said. "The teams will include American inspectors. We absolutely reject this discriminatory suggestion that some nationalities are objectionable."

Butler also said American U-2 surveillance flights will go ahead as scheduled.

In Baghdad, 4,000 people marched through the streets of the Iraqi capital Wednesday, chanting anti-American slogans and praising Hussein in the latest in a series of government-orchestrated protests.

"Saddam is our hero, and we will never abandon him," said Ali Mahmoud, a 15-year-old protester.

McCurry, the White House spokesman, said the unanimous vote Wednesday reflected determination to get Iraq to comply with the United Nations. "Any sign that they are not ready to comply will be read for what it is ... an act of defiance and an act that requires further measures," he said.

The vote followed two weeks of intensive negotiations after Hussein's government announced Oct. 29 it was kicking out all Americans working for the U.N. Special Commission, which performs weapons inspections and surveillance of Iraq's disarmament efforts.

Those inspectors are trying to verify whether Iraq has complied with orders issued in 1991 at the end of the Persian Gulf War to destroy all long-range missiles and weapons of mass destruction.

Only then will the council lift crippling economic sanctions imposed in August 1990 when Saddam sent his forces into Kuwait, touching off the Gulf War.

Baghdad claims the Americans on the team are spies holding up the required certification so sanctions stay in place — a position that Aziz, Iraq's deputy prime minister, reiterated Wednesday in an interview with Fox News.

"We cannot allow American officers to spy on our national security under the hat of the United Nations. If they were legitimate inspectors ... we would not have to worry," Aziz said.

Aziz was scheduled to meet this morning with U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan, a U.N. spokesman said.

Whatever support Iraq had in the council dissolved Wednesday under pressure from the United States and its allies. Personal intervention by Secretary of State Madeleine Albright persuaded its sympathizers — Russia, France, Egypt and China — to support the resolution.

Those nations and Kenya agreed to support the latest resolution only after the United States and Britain deleted strong language that hinted at military force.

"We are convinced that any complication with Iraq should be resolved exclusively by political means," Russia's Lavrov told the council.

French Ambassador Alain Dejammet warned against actions that might prompt Iraq to shut down the entire U.N. inspection operation.

"Nothing would be worse than to call into question ... the relations between the United Nations and Iraq," Dejammet said. "The security of the region is at stake here."

In the end, the resolution expressed the council's intention to take further unspecified measures if Iraq did not comply. The United States dropped its earlier plan to threaten Iraq with "serious consequences."

The measure also suspended regular reviews of the economic sanctions — a measure that keeps the sanctions in place indefinitely — and condemned Iraq's threats to shoot down the American U-2 planes flying surveillance missions for the United Nations.

Man suspected in slaying after leaving trail of evidence

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARASOTA, Fla. — A drifter who authorities said left a trail of evidence from Florida to Texas was being sought Wednesday in the shooting death of a woman whose 23-month-old quadruplets were found crawling in her blood.

Jose Luis Del Toro Jr., 21, was named in a first-degree murder warrant obtained by Sarasota County sheriff's officers in the death of Sheila Bellush.

Sheriff's investigators believe Del Toro is in the Austin, Texas, area. They asked police there and the Texas Rangers to help catch him.

Investigators said they found Del Toro's fingerprints on a clothes dryer in the victim's home after the killing Friday. The alleged murder weapon — a .45-caliber gun — was found in Del Toro's car, which was discovered in Texas.

"There's loads of physical evidence. We know he did it. We have to get him to get the why," said Sarasota County sheriff's Sgt. Tim Carney. "We want to catch this guy. It's heart wrenching when you think about the children."

The body of the 35-year-old mother of six was discovered by Stevie, her 13-year-old daughter. The four toddlers were nearby, unharmed but covered in blood. They wore life jackets, which their mother frequently put on them when they were going outside where the family had a swimming pool.

Officials said she apparently confronted the suspect as he came into the laundry room from the garage.

Detectives have not interviewed Bellush's ex-husband, Allen Blackthorne, a San Antonio medical equipment manager, said his lawyer, Roy Barrera Jr. Asked if his client knows Del Toro, Barrera said he didn't know.

Barrera said Florida police told him his client was not a suspect.

Cabinet members might join Clinton

Clinton

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Three Cabinet members are likely to attend the dedication of a Wichita welfare-to-work facility that President Clinton also is scheduled to visit, the White House said.

Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Andrew Cuomo, Secretary of Labor Alexis Herman and Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman, a former Kansas Congress representative, are likely to come to Wichita on Monday with the president, the White House said Thursday.

Cessna Aircraft Co.'s 21st Street job training center has already won national recognition for helping to move welfare recipients into the workplace and is to be dedicated Monday.

The offices of Glickman and Herman confirmed they are scheduled to attend, but Cuomo's office referred all questions about the event to the White House.

U.S. Sens. Pat Roberts and Sam Brownback, U.S. Rep. Todd Tiahrt and Gov. Bill Graves — all Republicans from Kansas — also are expected to attend Monday's event.

Clinton is scheduled on Monday to fly into McConnell Air Force base outside Wichita after spending three days in Los Angeles, Sacramento and Las Vegas. Details of his visit had not been released Thursday.

A White House advance team has been meeting with Cessna officials to plan Clinton's visit.

On Tuesday, a Secret Service contingent toured Wesley Medical Center, the designated trauma center during the president's visit.

After the dedication ceremony, Clinton is scheduled to fly to St. Louis for a fund-raiser for Missouri Attorney General Jay Nixon, who is running for the Democratic nomination for U.S. Senate.

Step show to stomp into McCain

AMY BICKEL
staff reporter

After a couple months and many hours of preparation for competition, eight K-State and Midwestern historically black fraternities and sororities will stomp across the McCain Auditorium stage in syncopation.

The seventh annual Neak Frasty Step Show, which is at 7 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium, is composed of stomping, clapping and chanting. K-State's Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity is sponsoring the event.

The fraternity's seven members are responsible for putting on a show with an average attendance of 1,500 people.

"It's a lot of work when you plan an event this big," said Nate Scott, senior in advertising and a member of the fraternity.

Fraternity members came up with the step show idea seven years ago as a philanthropy to raise money for scholarships, Reggie McGowen, the fraternity's adviser, said.

"This is probably one of the largest social events for students of color on campus," McGowen said.

Proceeds go to the Thurgood Marshall Scholarship Fund, which helps incoming freshmen and undergraduate students with tuition.

"Education is one of the cornerstones our fraternity was founded on," Scott said. "It's fulfilling to me when we make enough for tuition scholarships. That is something I didn't get, and I like knowing I was able to help them with that."

To give the show an added twist from other step shows in the nation, the fraternity contracted a musical group for the third year in a row to perform after the show.

This year's event features R&B singer Ginuwine, said Brandon Hobbs, junior in industrial engineering and president of PROPONENTS and opponents of the Anderson Avenue project listen as plans are explained at Thursday night's meeting.

Residents oppose Anderson expansion

STORY BY SANDY DAVIS

More than 100 Manhattan residents and members of the city's design consulting teams met Thursday for the fourth time to discuss the Anderson Avenue project and possible alternatives.

The purpose of the meeting was to provide residents with a project update and show them more detailed designs.

The city is proposing to expand Anderson Avenue to six lanes, including a center left-turn lane, from Sunset Avenue to 14th Street in an effort to improve safety for vehicular and pedestrian traffic along Anderson and intersecting streets. The proposal is also intended to reduce congestion and minimize delays caused by uncoordinated traffic lights.

Other items in the project include improvements to the city's storm sewers and increasing street and sidewalk lighting.

Consulting team members said the city was making Anderson safer for pedestrians by widening sidewalks and coordinating pedestrian crosswalk lights with traffic signals to help traffic flow more smoothly and give pedestrians more time to cross the street. The lights will be programmed by time of day to give pedestrians more time to cross the street during high traffic.

Sidewalks will also be added from 14th Street to Mid Campus Drive so there will be a continuous sidewalk on the north side of the street.

"One of the questions we looked at was, could we do this without widening," said Kent Moorman, a consultant on the project. "The answer was no."

Gary Conrad, professor of biology, has lived in Manhattan for more than 25 years. He said he is strongly opposed to the Anderson widening project.

"I see no increase in pedestrian safety," Conrad said. "What they are proposing is making a cosmetic gloss over pedestrian safety. It's a sham."

Conrad said adding more lanes will make the street more difficult to cross. He is also opposed to the city's need to cut down 180 trees to widen the street.

"This is not the way you deal with natural resources," he said. "It's offensive."

Conrad is also concerned with the poor lighting of crosswalks and the aggressive nature of some drivers.

"Pedestrians are being pushed aside," Conrad said. "It's purely to benefit the drivers."

Residents also raised concerns about the storm sewer improvements.

The areas along Anderson Avenue and Memorial Stadium are to be enlarged, but areas downstream will not be improved. As the water flows downhill, the drains could become congested at the point where the wider drains meet the unimproved, narrow drains. Residents fear possible flooding if the water pipes are overwhelmed during a heavy storm.

Residents offered several alternatives to widening Anderson Avenue, including building an overpass for pedestrian traffic, installing left-turn signals without widening, timing existing traffic signals to coordinate with crosswalk lights, prohibiting left turns on Anderson Avenue, incorporating a mass transit system and creating bicycle lanes.

If the project continues on schedule, future steps in the process include refining the design and completing environmental reviews, right-of-way acquisitions and utility relocations.

The construction of the project is set to begin in spring 1999.

CHRIS FAULK of CM Engineering Inc. shows assistant city manager Ron Fehr how traffic would flow through stoplights on Anderson Avenue if it is widened. The meeting about the widening of the street was Thursday night in the K-State Student Union.

"I SEE NO INCREASE IN PEDESTRIAN SAFETY. WHAT THEY ARE PROPOSING IS MAKING A COSMETIC GLOSS OVER PEDESTRIAN SAFETY. IT'S A SHAM."

University helps United Way raise funds for county

DAVID FAIRBANKS
city editor

The United Way of Riley County's 1997 fund-raising campaign is coming to a close this week, and to celebrate, it's having a luncheon to recognize those who made it a success.

The luncheon is today at noon. After recognizing United Way volunteers and supporters, the grand total of the fund-raising campaign will be announced.

"It looks a lot better than last year," said Ailleen M. Cray, executive director of United Way of Riley County. "Last year we raised $409,000, and this year we're shooting for $430,000."

As the fund-raising campaign comes to a close, the United Way is getting ready to distribute the money to the 13 local agencies it supports. Its contributions are often a large portion of the agencies' budgets, Cray said.

After distribution, it will move into a review process where every organization is checked on to see how the money is used. In the spring, the United Way begins planning for the next fund-raising campaign in the fall.

The fund-raising effort isn't just for the 13 local agencies, Cray said. The United Way also raises money for two special programs in Riley County.

One of them is the Milk Program. The Milk Program helps provide fresh milk for families who use local food pantries, she said. It also gives money to the Flexible Funding Program. This program provides mini grants to nonprofit organizations in Riley County.

The United Way would not be able to raise enough money for programs such as these without the contributions of K-State, Cray said.

"The staff and employees of K-State are responsible for around 20 percent of the funds raised this year," she said.

Kathleen Copple, graduate assistant for the Office of Student Activites and Services at K-State, is a part of the United Way committee on campus.

She said all K-State employees are provided with a packet that explains how they can donate to the United Way.

"Most of the donations are done through payroll deductions," she said.

Employees can choose how much they want taken out of each of their paychecks or they can do a one time donation, she said.

Copple said the campus committee was formed because of low participation at K-State. Last year only 10 to 13 percent of K-State employees contributed, she said.

Although participation historically has been low, Copple said she has high hopes for next year. The campus committee is already making plans to start an annual fund-raising event this spring.

U.N. condemns Iraq for expelling inspectors

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — Refusing to let Iraq dictate who can inspect its weapons, the United Nations decided Thursday to withdraw all arms inspectors from Iraq after Saddam Hussein ordered Americans on the U.N. team out immediately.

But U.S. efforts to have the Security Council condemn the expulsion got bogged down for nearly eight hours over differences about the wisdom of withdrawing all the inspectors and a sudden, unrelated squabble between the United States and China about Tibet.

Shortly before midnight, the 15 council members finally issued a statement that condemned Iraq "in the strongest terms" for its "unacceptable decision" in expelling the Americans.

But instead of warning Iraq anew of "serious consequences" unless it cooperates with U.N. inspections, the final version simply recalled a statement last month that used the same phrase.

The decision to leave only a skeletal crew in Baghdad came after Iraq would not even let the six American inspectors stay until today, when they would have flown out with about 70 other weapons monitors.

Instead, the Americans, plus an unspecified number of other team members, left Baghdad about 11 p.m. for a grueling overnight drive through the desert to Jordan. The Americans reached the border before daybreak today, and went on to Amman, the Jordanian capital.

The chief U.N. weapons inspector, Richard Butler, also said U.S.-staffed U-2 spy planes would keep flying over Iraq despite Baghdad's threats to shoot them down.

U.S. Ambassador Bill Richardson declared that Iraq was in open defiance of the United Nations. "I think there are going to be some serious consequences," he said, without elaborating.

In Washington, President Clinton pledged to deal "in a very

2 accidents involving school buses result in multiple injuries, fatality

DETROIT — A speeding car ran through a stop sign and overturned a school bus crammed with 57 elementary school pupils Thursday, killing the car's driver and injuring more than 50 people.

Also Thursday morning, a school bus holding at least 25 high school students overturned on a Louisiana expressway, sending around 12 to hospitals.

The Detroit collision happened about 8:50 a.m. as the bus was on its way to nearby Hutchinson Elementary School, police Chief Isaiah McKinnon said. The car was speeding, and the driver ignored a stop sign, striking the side of the bus, he said.

Rescuers had to use Jaws of Life to extricate the driver from the burning car. He was dead at the scene.

In all, 55 people were reported taken to St. John's, Saratoga and Children's hospitals. The injuries were not life-threatening, McKinnon said.

In Louisiana, a bus carrying Byrd High School students on a field trip overturned on an expressway in Shreveport, sending at least a dozen to the hospital. Nobody was critically injured, but two of the injuries were believed serious, police said.

The cause of the 9:30 a.m. accident was not immediately known. Rain and fog were present at the time.

Demand for buffalo meat rises

CANTON, Kan. — Herds of buffalo are roaming the Plains again, partly because of a growing demand for their low-fat meat.

More people are raising buffalo to breed and butcher because the meat, with less saturated fat, is considered healthier than beef.

This week, the Kansas Buffalo Association sold 426 bison at its auction in Salina. And on Wednesday, 36 people bid on 95 buffalo at the annual buffalo auction at Maxwell Wildlife Refuge north of Canton.

The Maxwell Wildlife Refuge auction has taken place for the past 20 years. The wildlife refuge, owned by Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks, sells surplus buffalo from state-owned herds in Garden City, Kingman and at the wildlife refuge.

Last year, the 88 bison sold earned an average of $1,363 each — a record for the wildlife refuge's auction. The money is either put back into the state general fund or used to maintain the wildlife refuge.

Strike blamed for $10 million loss

ATLANTA — United Parcel Service blames the crippling Teamsters strike for a $10 million net loss in the third quarter.

The quarterly loss, reported Thursday, was the first for the privately held package delivery company since 1992. It compared with a $340 million net profit for the July-September quarter last year.

UPS officials said the company continues to feel the effects of the 15-day strike in August, but expressed optimism based on recent operating results and cost-containment measures.

The strike, which ended with a new five-year contract for the company's 185,000 Teamsters, was the first nationwide work stoppage in the company's 90-year history. It dropped UPS' daily volume to less than 10 percent of normal volume.

The strike also was blamed in part for a $775 million decrease in third-quarter revenues — from $5.59 billion in the 1996 quarter to $4.81 billion this year.

Novelist's claims of theft create controversy for DreamWorks film

LOS ANGELES — The author of a historical novel about a slave ship rebellion is suing the makers of the movie "Amistad," claiming Steven Spielberg's DreamWorks studio used the book without permission.

An attorney for the studio says novelist Barbara Chase-Riboud is trying to claim a copyright on history, and that her lawsuit is without merit.

John Shaeffer, attorney for Chase-Riboud, said earlier drafts of the screenplay showed entire characters and scenes were lifted from Chase-Riboud's 1989 book "Echo of Lions."

Among the similarities between the novel and the movie, Shaeffer said Wednesday, is the character Theodore Joadson, an abolitionist. Shaeffer said the character appears in the novel, but not in the historical record, thereby suggesting DreamWorks and Spielberg stole it.

"Big deal," said Bert Fields, an attorney for DreamWorks. "The world was filled with abolitionists. A lot of them were black. The characters are totally different."

The movie is scheduled to open Dec. 25. It is the second film released by the new DreamWorks studio,

SGA funds groups for speakers, projects

BEN YODER
campus government editor

Student senators expressed concern that two student groups, the Indian Student Association and the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society, did not have speakers named for spring projects in Student Senate Thursday.

Sarah Morris, engineering senator and Allocations Committee vice chair, said groups are required to have a topic, but not a speaker. Money allocated would pay for speakers, advertisements, and space and equipment rental.

A motion was made to send the bills funding the groups back to the Allocations Committee until speakers were named, but it failed.

Mandy Reese, arts and sciences senator, said it wasn't Student Senate's job to choose what speakers groups brought in.

"When did we become a body that could judge who they bring in for a speaker?" Reese said.

Reese said Senate should fund the groups so further arrangements could be made. Greg Cleaver, arts and sciences senator, agreed that Senate should fund the groups.

"Let's go ahead and give them their money," Cleaver said. "We know they can do it."

The bills were approved. However, six senators voted against funding the Indian Student Association, and five senators abstained. Seven senators voted against funding the BGLS request, and four abstained.

IN OTHER BUSINESS:

Bill 97/98/60 was approved unanimously. This bill requires the Joint Committee on Officers' Compensation to make its annual report by Oct. 1. This committee recommends to Senate the amount Student Governing Association officers should be compensated.

Bills 97/98/53 and 97/98/61-67 were approved by Senate. These bills funded special projects for the African Student Association, Asian American Student Union, Thai Student Association, Apostolic Campus Ministry, Young Democrats, Alpha Phi Omega and K-State Aikido Club.

Scholarship allows 2 K-State students chance to travel world

LORI GUILFOYLE
staff reporter

A chance to see the world motivated two K-State students to apply for Rotary Ambassadorial Scholarships offered through Rotary International.

Scholarships providing up to $22,500 for study abroad were awarded to Chris Hansen, senior in nuclear engineering, and Ara Schlaman, senior in biology.

"It is an intense competition. Only good students apply, which makes it a competitive process," said Jerry Weis, associate professor of biology and chairman of the district scholarship committee for Rotary International.

Between 15 and 25 students apply for Rotary Ambassadorial scholarships each year, Weis said. The process involves a written component, followed by a series of interviews. If the local club chooses to endorse a student, the student is sent to the district level, where students are subjected to an all-day extensive interview process.

Students from all over the country apply, Weis said. The scholarship includes all expenses for the study of any curriculum in any of the 65 countries where Rotary International is located.

"I've overseen the program for years," Weis said. "Hansen and Schlaman are important pieces of the puzzle. They are excellent students."

Hansen said he decided to apply for the scholarship after much encouragement. He said studying abroad would give him a better sense of the world and a better sense of himself. It is something he has been planning to do since his senior year in high school, he said.

Hansen, who plans to graduate in May, has decided to study economics, his minor course of study, in the master's program at the University of the Witwatersrand in Johannesberg, South Africa.

"I feel it would better serve my education to go to a country struggling with the issues I want to explore and spend my career working on," Hansen said.

The interest in energy issues, particularly how the energy supply affects poverty levels, was one of the reasons behind choosing to major in nuclear engineering, he said.

Schlaman, who also plans to graduate in May, said she never thought she would get the opportunity to study abroad.

"I had no expectations. I got lucky," she said.

Schlaman plans to go into genetic counseling and has decided to study psychology at the University of Kent in Canterbury, England, to expand her background in counseling.

"Genetic counseling requires both a background in science and counseling," she said. "People generally come to a genetic counselor trying to assess their risk for genetic disease or for transmitting such a disease to their children. I have to be able to understand the science behind the risk assessment, be able to explain it and help people deal with the impact of my explanation."

Schlaman said she wants to study abroad to see if she can do it on her own.

"I've done it this far, but it wasn't a big challenge. I haven't had to go beyond myself a bit," she said.

Schlaman also expects the experience to broaden her horizons.

"I like to learn about people," she said. "I want to be in cultures rather than reading or watching television."

She attributes this honor to the support of her professors and counselors at K-State.

"They've been awesome, I couldn't have had a better experience at an undergraduate school," Schlaman said.

Take advantage of Neak Frasty step show opportunity Saturday

Don't give up hope yet. There might just be a way to celebrate after the game without shelling out the bucks to pay Aggieville's game-day prices.

Starting at 7 Saturday night, Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity will present the seventh-annual Neak Frasty Step Show, which combines fraternities and sororities from K-State and other parts of the Midwest for a stomping, clapping, chanting, once-a-year event that should not be missed.

For the cost of two or three drinks at your favorite bar, you can see eight groups compete for $1,000 and get a sneak peak at a style of dancing that has taken Broadway by storm in the hit show "Stomp," soon to be shown on HBO and in Forum Hall.

As a bonus, Alpha Phi Alpha has brought in R&B artist Ginuwine to perform during the show, and a disc jockey from KPRS-FM 103.3 out of Kansas City, Mo. will be the disc jocky at an after party in Ahearn Field House. The cost for the after hours party is only $5, or just one more bourbon and coke.

And, so you know not all your money is going into a bar owner's pocket, all profits will be put into a scholarship fund for incoming freshmen and undergraduate students. This means you can have a full night of entertainment and still be doing a good deed for K-State and your fellow Wildcats.

The show is scheduled to take place in McCain Auditorium, so seats are limited. Here in Manhattan, tickets can be purchased at Turning Head's Beauty Salon, Supreme Elegance Hair Salon and Streetside Records. Fort Riley residents can get their tickets at the ITR office, and Jamo's Uni Sex Hair Studio in Junction City also has tickets. Any remaining tickets will be sold at the door, but don't wait too long.

With some groups traveling as far as 300 miles to participate and K-State groups practicing for the past three months, the audience is guaranteed a good show. So after the Cats are done herding the Buffaloes out of KSU Stadium, come see another K-State tradition and give a little of that beer money to a good cause.

Crimes against humanity all over K-State

VIEWPOINT

BRANDI HERTIG

BRANDI HERTIG is a sophomore in print journalism and English/creative writing. You can send your e-mail comments to Brandi at blh0377@ksu.edu.

People are rude. Keep this in mind for the duration of this column. Also, please keep your hands and feet inside the ride at all times. Thank you.

As an employee of Dillons, as a K-State student and just as a person with a lot of pent-up anger, I am keenly aware of the injustices people present to one another on a daily basis. From tossing money at the cashier instead of choosing from one of the two open hands they present to the customer, to walking three-abreast very slowly down a congested sidewalk, the crimes are heinous and should be punishable by bloodletting.

But who am I to dictate judiciary fun? I'm just a good-natured columnist.

People piss me off by their mere existence, so I do realize I have but two options for survival:

1. Move to a desolate area, such as Siberia or western Kansas or
2. Remove the object from my bottom.

Option three, which I took to our very own House of Representatives over there in Topeka, was shot down. It involved means of mass destruction.

Sometimes I am astounded by the self-centered nature of others. I'm not talking about picking through all the Starbursts, leaving only the orange and yellow ones for your roommate. I mean people just being completely oblivious to the fact that others are in existence.

For the sole purpose of being able to lump every single human being into some category by 2002, I have created categories for different types of crimes against humanity.

● The "Hey-there's-someone-I-know-I-think-I'll-stop-right-here-in-the-middle-of-this-sidewalk-and-recap-the-past-10-years-with-them" crime against humanity.

I'm willing to bet my Dillons smock that this crime never occurs when there aren't other people trying to actually use the sidewalk. No, no. That would be far too simple and bothersome to no one. These chance reunions must happen on the narrowest of congested walkways, at around 11:22 a.m. The perpetrators of this crime usually either act like they don't realize the cholesterol-like blockage they have created, or they flash snotty looks to the poor students who are inadvertently acting as an angioplasty.

SHANE FOSBURG/Collegian

KSU'S MOST WANTED

● The "I'm-going-to-stumble-home-from-Aggieville-at-2 a.m.-screaming-at-the-top-of-my-Purple-Passion-soaked-lungs" crime against humanity.

There are actually people who, when they drink, believe the whole world drinks with them. And they let everyone know. It's really unfortunate that I don't have some job that requires me to rise at the pre-crack of dawn. If that were the case, I could sleep inside my closet under a pile of laundry, pillows and Styrofoam and still be able to get up on time, sans alarm clock.

● The "I'm-going-to-make-obscene-grunting-noises-while-I-lift-weights-so-girls-will-think-I'm-totally-ripped" crime against humanity.

Not that I'm such a beefcake that I have to grunt when I lift weights, but from my experience, I don't think such guttural noises need to reverberate throughout the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. What is the parallel female response to this clearly primitive male mating howl? Are we supposed to be in awe of Big Man Who Grunts Loud? Do we squeal in response or something?

● The "I-think-I'll-park-in-this-apartment-building's-parking-lot-while-I-go-hang-out-at-the-Delta-Chis'-building-or-go-party-in-Aggieville" crime against humanity.

Every Friday night without fail, I have to fight with some member of the greek system for a spot in my own parking lot. Let's just ignore those signs that threaten nonresident cars will be towed. Just remember — one of these days I'm going to come park my little independent car on the front porch of your house.

● The "Let's-talk-about-the-drunken-debauchery-that-ensued-over-the-weekend-while-the-kid-in-front-of-us-is-trying-to-learn" crime against humanity.

"Oh, Gawd! I was so drunk, when I woke up in that puddle of my own vomit, I totally barfed some more." I have never figured out why these folks think that such discussion is much more important than any information other students are trying to learn. Sure, it's biology with a little sociology thrown in, but no one else really cares to hear about how "And then we drove over to Dave's house, and I totally chunked all over the steering wheel."

Please. Send it to Reader's Digest for its "Campus Comedy" section.

● The "Oh-I'm-so-much-smarter-than-all-of-you-so-I'll-just-answer-every-single-question-the-teacher-asks-so-you-all-look-like-a-bunch-of-crack-monkeys" crime against humanity.

Guess what, Einstein. Just because you were No. 1 in your class of 13 doesn't make you smarter than your classmates. That thing about K-State being the Harvard of the Midwest — what makes you think that specifically applies to you? Just because your parents relived their teen years through you and made you memorize the quadratic formula, it doesn't skyrocket you to the top of that College Algebra class.

● The "I-use-my-column-at-the-Collegian-as-a-way-to-vent-my-anger-and-frustration-onto-the-huddled-masses" crime against humanity.

"Oh, I hate people. Oh, I hate the Bible. Oh, I hate Halloween."

Geeze. You got a problem, start writing novels for angst-ridden prepubescent girls, a la Judy Blume.

Stadium expansion should not be paid for with fee

Editor,

I totally agree with the idea that the stadium needs to be expanded. I buy football tickets and support the team. I think it's great when they come out and win.

But what is the value of expanding a stadium to 46,000 (or 44,000) seats when it will need to be re-expanded in a few years anyway? With the success the team is having, the team will continue to just get better and better, thus increasing crowd size.

Besides, there are better ways to finance the expansion than through student fees. Increase ticket prices, put away money from bowl games — something, anything but another privilege fee. We pay too many of them as is, plus all the increases, without adding one more.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics should have had two or three alternatives to fund the expansion than just adding a student fee.

Sorry, but I will vote no on Monday or Tuesday, and so should you.

Also, about selling the tickets to students at a loss to the department. We are the students of this university, and we should be the athletic department's first priority when it comes to any kind of tickets to games. After all, the students are the ones who keep the university in business to even have a football team.

Sock speaks out about pain of losing mate

VIEWPOINT

SOCK WHITE

SOCK WHITE is a sophomore in apparel design. You can send e-mail to Sock at istink@ksu.edu.

I am here on the behalf of socks everywhere.

Luckily, the Collegian editors felt this a worthy enough cause to address in their paper. Let me start by saying I'm not a usual Collegian writer, but instead they had some space to fill and I happened to be available. This was fortunate, because I can see that my advice has been needed.

I have seen the socks you people wear. I see them because I am a sock, and because we can communicate with one another. I have seen how your socks don't match exactly. I have seen how you pretend to match one pair with another, but they're pairs that were never really meant to be.

We can't allow this to happen any longer!

This is a travesty. There's only one good excuse for mismatching socks, and that is the tragedy of Mysterious Sock Abduction Syndrome, which I will discuss later. What I want to address now is that too many people, as I have realized only lately, simply randomly put socks together just because they look somewhat alike.

Random!

This is unacceptable. Don't you people realize that socks come from the plant packaged together? Don't you realize that some socks are just meant to be together? Putting one sock from a pair with another sock from another pair is adultery to us, and it is completely involuntary. We have no control over who we're paired with, so it is your responsibility to make certain that we can remain together accurately matched. Have you no humanity, people? C'mon!

Now I know that some people believe that all socks look alike, but this is blatant sock discrimination. Take the time to get to know your socks. I have seen plenty of single socks lying all alone, underneath beds, chairs, trash cans, unused long before their time is actually up. If all people took just half an hour out of their day to get to know their socks better, we could avoid plenty of mismatched pairs, and we could avoid having to go out and buy new socks so frequently, which I know appeals to all you money-grubbing college kids.

KRIS EMMONS/Collegian

A recent scientific study done at the prestigious Kansas University College of Paranormal Activity revealed that the No. 1 cause of Mysterious Sock Abduction Syndrome was not primarily alien/visitor-related, as previously thought, but instead was due to socks running away.

It seems that more than 70 percent of socks observed were prone to running away when placed in situations where they felt neglected or abused, whereas only 20 percent of socks were actually abducted by aliens — we presume the socks were needed to replenish lost genetic material for the aliens. What monsters!

As for running away, I say damn straight!

Know your socks. You can take your socks to movies, on tours, to the museum – socks like culture, too. They will respect you for your attention to them, and they will be less likely to run away. My long-lost mate is a runaway, and I have been looking for it for a long time. It just couldn't handle the pressure of being constantly stepped on. It couldn't handle being stuffed inside a shoe all day. It wasn't ready to be used, and then just thrown in the laundry all lost and alone, like some piece of garbage.

Now I am alone, and it is the fault of all those idiots who thought that socks were just inanimate, unfeeling objects. We have been treated like possessions. We have been treated like rubbish. Well, we're not gonna take it anymore.

We no longer seek to conceal our views and aims. We openly declare that unless people start treating their socks with more respect, we will have no choice but to achieve our aims through the forcible overthrow of all existing social conditions. Let the ruling classes tremble at a sock revolution.

The socks have nothing to lose but the chains that bind us to people's feet. We have a world to win and lost pairs to recover. The people have no choice but to treat us with respect. We outnumber them, and they could never know when we will achieve our aims until it's too late.

Socks of all countries, unite!
Before it's too late!
Socks of all countries, unite!

Wishes come true at mall

LAURA POPE
staff reporter

Manhattan Town Center and the Make-A-Wish Foundation will see that this Christmas is special by making wishes come true with a new holiday film, "Annabelle's Wish."

The mall was chosen as one of two malls in Kansas to promote the film.

"From all indications, it's destined to be a holiday classic," Monnie Applegate, marketing director for the mall, said. "It's fun to be able to introduce it in Manhattan."

Applegate said the mall submitted forms last spring in order to be chosen. Along with introducing and selling the movie, the mall has several special events planned to raise money for the Make-A-Wish Foundation.

"Our goal is to raise 1 million pennies through a special wishing well to be placed at the Santa house," Applegate said.

Other fund-raising activities will include various purchase-with-purchase and gift-with-purchase offers. All the money raised will be presented to the foundation at 10 a.m. Dec. 23 in the mall.

Throughout the month of October, school children in the area participated in an activity in the classrooms for the promotion. The children were asked to do a good deed for a friend and then make a poster to illustrate it.

"The children are invited to come this Sunday and get a certificate for their deed signed by Annabelle," Applegate said. "They were asked to learn the words to the theme song from the movie, 'Friends Like Us,' and we will sing it at the finale."

The Good Friends Finale event will be at 2 p.m. Sunday in the center court of the mall. A children's holiday fashion show and performance by the Children's Bell Choir will follow the finale.

"Annabelle's Wish," the movie, will air on KTMJ-TV at 6 p.m. Nov. 30. It is also available for purchase from the mall for $19.95, which includes a plush Annabelle toy and at Musicland for $17.95.

As a retail tie-in to the promotion, the weekend after Thanksgiving, the Town Center will invite shoppers to fill out a Christmas wish list.

"Shopper's will be asked to scout out what items they wish to receive valued up to $1,000," Applegate said. "We will then pick one winner to receive their wish list."

The winner will be announced during the showing of the movie on Nov. 30.

Shoppers will also be able to register to win a giant plush Annabelle beginning Nov. 22, with the winner being announced on Dec. 23. The plush Annabelle will be displayed in rotation at Waldenbooks and Musicland.

"We're making wishes come true this holiday season," Applegate said.

Some bars increase prices on game days

AMY BICKEL
staff reporter

As one of the oldest drinking establishments in Aggieville, Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon is a K-State tradition, but game-day weekends provide an ideal chance for Chance to bring in the bucks.

Rusty Wilson, owner of Chance, said that on game days, prices are rounded up to the nearest dollar to make the waitresses' job easier on six of the biggest nights the bar has during the year.

"It's much easier to give up a dollar than pennies, nickels and dimes," Wilson said.

On game days, Chance rounds $2.75 big beers to $3. Mixed drinks that are usually $2.50 are doubled and increased to $5 so they will last longer and customers will not have to go to the bar as much, Wilson said. Also, bottled beers increase from $2 to $2.50.

Wilson said he increased prices of bottles to benefit his waitresses.

"When people buy bottle beer there is 50 cents left. Customers are more likely to tip 50 cents than a whole dollar," Wilson said.

Also, to make it easier on employees with the larger crowds, Wilson said he only offers Coors Light on tap out of a possible selection of 13.

"One brand is more efficient on the bartenders," he said. "People want to get in and get out. They get it and get served as quickly and efficiently as possible."

Mike Robinson, owner of 12th Street Pub, said he raises the price of draft beer from $2.25 to $2.50 on game days and has done so since he opened in 1995.

"I think they notice, but I haven't heard any complaints," Robinson said.

Rhett Butler, head cook of Scoreboard, said alcohol prices haven't increased yet, but this option might be looked into later on.

Butler said one reason prices haven't increased is because of the business' regulars, but he didn't think increased prices affected the Aggieville game-day crowds.

"I think everybody is busy on game days regardless of what they charge," Butler said.

Lucky BrewGrille doesn't increase prices on game days, but Bob Leetch, owner, said he didn't think customers who came to Lucky's cared about prices.

"We get more people, but they aren't looking for the cheapest deal. Customers come for the atmosphere and fun in a clean environment."

Message to NCAA: Please do not ruin college basketball

Wednesday night, I was just getting home, and I did what I usually do when I get home.

I dropped my stuff off in my room, took my place in front of the television and turned on ESPN.

My favorite network didn't let me down, either. A college basketball game was on, and it was finally one that counted. North Carolina State was playing Princeton in the finals of the Coaches vs. Cancer Classic.

Well, it was crunch time, even though it wasn't evident by the 33-33 score. It just doesn't get much better than crunch time of a college hoops game, especially if it's March. When I looked at the clock in the lower right-hand corner of the screen, I was shocked. There was just a little more than a minute left — in the FOURTH QUARTER!

I looked again to make sure I hadn't accidentally gotten the Knicks-Raptors game and the score wasn't 133-133.

VIEWPOINT

DAN MERKER

DAN MERKER is a senior in computer science. You can send your e-mail comments to Dan at dmerker@ksu.edu.

I think I can honestly say that was the first time I ever got angry when looking at the game clock. Why was this game divided into quarters? Nobody checked with me. What in the name of Adolf Rupp is happening?

I don't see why somebody always has to screw with the game, no matter what it is. The only thing worse than the quarters experiment in college basketball was the same experiment in hockey.

Nothing is wrong with college basketball. When the shot clock was changed from 45 to 35 seconds, I could live with that. A 45-second shot clock was basically like not having one at all, and 35 was a good place to go. Now they're messing with that, trying a 40-second variety.

I was even fine when they decided 20-second time outs were a good idea. Those have only been in college a few years, and during a time out, I saw that each team had plenty of 30-second time outs left. Lots of them.

Quit experimenting.

The game is fine. It's prospering, despite all its players either turning pro too early or skipping it so they can turn down $100 million-plus offers. The time to change all the rules is when it's late March and people are talking about the NBA, not when the college game is arguably more popular than the pro version.

I hate the NBA. I find it terribly boring, and even the last two minutes are hardly bearable. I think I've watched about 10 games in the past five years, and all of them were in the playoffs. And that was because nothing else was on.

But there's something different about the college game. I don't know if it's the atmosphere, or that they play defense in college, or the rules differences or what. But college is simply much more enjoyable to watch than pro ball.

Maybe it's the saying I've heard, "In college, they play for the name on the front of the jersey, and in the NBA, they play for the name on the back."

Anyway, I can't like any sport where music is played when the game is actually going on.

Regardless of what it is, that intangible quality of college basketball is going to go away if they keep messing with the college game to make it like the pros. What's next, best-of-seven series instead of the 64-team tournament?

While I'm at it, there is one rule I would like to see changed. The double-bonus after 10 fouls must go. If players can't make free throws, their team doesn't deserve to win the game. It would make for more exciting finishes, and free-throw shooting percentages would probably climb. I just hate to see someone go up and throw bricks from the line.

The women's game doesn't have the double-bonus, and I think it's much better for it. Of course, they're experimenting with that rule this year so they can start to ruin their game, too. I refuse to go to the games if they use a Harlem Globetrotters-lookin' ball like the WNBA. If the players like it, maybe it will inspire them to work harder to be able to play with that God-awful ball someday.

College basketball is a special and unusual game, and the more it differs from the NBA, the more special it will be.

The only quarters in college should be bounced into shot glasses.

Cats look for breakthrough against Buffs

SUN DEE MILLS
sports editor

In 1995, a Colorado team with an 8-2 record came into Manhattan to face then-No. 7 K-State, holding a 9-1 record. Both teams wanted the big bowl game; only one could win. And until the third quarter, that team was K-State.

"This is one of the games I want more than any of the others, for some reason," junior linebacker Travis Ochs said. "In the past, they've always been really close, too."

Especially in '95. Going into the fourth, the score was knotted at 10 apiece. The Buffaloes took their first lead of the game off Buffs kicker Peter Voskeritichian in the fourth. But Cat quarterback Matt Miller drove the Cats 72 yards on 10 plays and running back Eric Hickson put the ball into the end zone to get the lead back.

Colorado retaliated in 1:20 with a drive that led to a passing touchdown by current Buffs quarterback John Hessler.

"We've talked about what Hessler did here two years ago, and they understand that," Coach Bill Snyder said.

"He took six plays and in 80 yards went the distance. Obviously, two years later he is a more polished quarterback."

Hessler is second in the league and 29th in the nation in total offense, averaging 228.3 yards a game. He sits at seventh in passing efficiency, having completed 145-of-265 passes for 1,908 yards, the most in the Big 12.

However, Hessler is alone in double-digit interception numbers with 13 for the season to date.

Hessler has three favorite receivers — Phil Savoy, Darrin Chiaverini and Marcus Stiggers — that have caught 80 balls for 1,109 yards and six touchdowns between them.

Snyder said Hessler presents more problems than other quarterbacks the Cats have faced because of his touch passing.

"We definitely have more concerns about him," Snyder said. "Play-action passes, bootleg passes — he loves to throw those. But he's a good scrambler as well."

This Buffs receiving corps will challenge the Cats' passing defense, Snyder said.

"This will be the best receiving crew that we'll play against," he said. "They've got range. (Receiver Chris) Anderson's a tall guy they can throw it up to."

The Cats' secondary had some serious exposure to defending the pass at Texas Tech and against Kansas. Senior cornerback Demetric Denmark said the team won't be intimidated.

"It doesn't worry me," Denmark said. "We've just got to go out there and play to the best of our abilities."

The best of intentions can have disastrous results.

The Cats, in Colorado last season, had a legitimate chance to win the game, Snyder said.

"Last year was a 12-0 ball game," Snyder said. "Three plays, an interception, a busted assignment and a dropped pass, and we're in the ball game."

Senior tight end Jarrett Grosdidier said the mistakes from the past have accounted for the close games.

"Last year and the year before, the games were close," Grosdidier said. "Whoever makes the least mistakes will win. Hopefully, the mistakes will fall in our favor."

The Buffs only lost four key lettermen to graduation, something else that worries the Cats.

"They're very aggressive, and they're basically the same team," Grosdidier said.

"Especially on defense. There's only one or two different players, I think."

The Buffs' record at this point in time is definitely different this year, as they come into the game at 5-4. Still, Ochs said the team is piecing things together and is not much different than Colorado teams of the past.

"People are saying they're not as good as the past teams," Ochs said. "But they're improving week to week."

Snyder affirmed that.

"Colorado is a team that has kind of found itself the last three weeks," Snyder said.

"The last four of five years have been closer than the score might have indicated. The bottom line is that we still haven't beaten them."

And if that were to happen this year, no one would be more pleased than senior players like Grosdidier, playing their last home game before a record-setting number of fans.

"In my career here, I've beaten every team except Nebraska and Colorado," Grosdidier said. "It would be really special. It's real important to me."

K-STATE FORWARD NICKY RAMAGE gets past a Victoria All-Star defender Thursday evening in Bramlage Coliseum. The Cats fell to the All-Stars 60-48 in their first exhibition game.

▸ K-STATE LATEST VICTIM OF Australian exhibition team in 60-48 loss.

SUN DEE MILLS
sports editor

The Victoria All-Stars from Victoria, Australia, have beaten every Big 12 team they've met in the past four days — Nebraska, Kansas and Oklahoma State. K-State was no exception to the rule, as the Wildcats fell to the All-Stars 60-48 on Thursday.

"Overall, my feeling is that we did what we projected to do," Coach Deb Patterson said. "We played a lot of people with a lot of different people and tried to get our newcomers good minutes."

Two newcomers — community college transfer forward Ewa Laskowska and freshman point guard Kim Woodlee got 29 and 32 minutes, respectively, and Patterson said she was fairly pleased with what she was seeing.

"We played like we've been practicing," Patterson said. "We started the game with good intensity, but we got tentative and stopped executing. This is a pattern we've seen in the gym."

The Cats jumped out to an 8-2 lead early in the game, but All-Star outside shooting by Jessica Bibby and Kristia Harrower cut the lead to two.

At the 12-minute mark, the score froze at Cats 15, All-Stars 17 for four straight minutes. The Cats were forced to the last second on most possessions as the All-Stars worked the Cats' offense.

"I would prefer to get a good look early," Patterson said. "I'd like to get a shot off with 10, 12, 15 seconds left on the shot clock."

However, that wasn't the pattern for the Cats in this game.

Harrower broke the scoring drought at 8:41 with an arcing three from beyond the top of the key as the shot-clock buzzer sounded.

But the Cats' scoring drought lasted three more minutes. Junior guard Jenny Coalson grabbed her own missed shot and put it up, to put the Cats within three. Cat fouls put the All-Stars at the charity stripe and gave them a wider lead.

"The 6 1/2 minutes without a shot seemed like a day and a half," Patterson said.

Forced yet again to shoot under time pressure, Laskowska fired a shot but was fouled as it hit the basket. She hit the first of her two free throws, and that was the last Cat score until Ramage scored with 22 seconds left in the half. Laskowska's three points at this point were her only points of the game.

"The All-Stars defense was preoccupied with Ewa," Patterson said. "They were running switches on her. I think their scouting report said, 'Do not let her get a shot off.'"

During that time, more three-pointers rained down from the All-Stars, and they led by 10 at the half. Patterson said the halftime discussion pertained to defending the All-Stars' potent baseline three.

"We didn't scout this team extensively," Patterson said. "We discussed it at halftime, but it's one thing to talk about it and another thing to practice it."

For the rest of the game, the Cats would chip away at the lead, only to have the All-Stars nail threes to widen it. Bibby and Harrower went 10 of 26 from behind the three-point line for 30 points. Bibby was the All-Stars' lead scorer with 23 points.

Substitutions prevailed throughout the game. Sophomore forward Nicky Ramage and senior guard Brit Jacobson, injured in practice and questionable for the game, appeared within a minute of each other with six minutes left in the half.

"We didn't expect them to progress medically the way they did," Patterson said. "Nicky played 10 minutes, and we'd like to have played her 30. It's the same with Brit. Yesterday and today she felt pain-free."

Still, freshman forward Brandy Harris was the only Cat lighting up the scoreboard, five-of-five with one three-pointer and a free throw at the half. Harris didn't miss her first shot until four minutes into the second half. However, Harris shot just those 11 points and pulled down four boards in her first college game.

"When I first came out, I was really nervous," Harris said. "I had a lot of intensity at first, but I surprised myself about how hard I played. It was exciting."

Defensively, Cat guard Coalson and sophomore center Angie Finkes each pulled down a team-high six boards. Coalson also had seven assists on the other side of the ball. The Cats, while forcing the All-Stars to take some last-minute shots, kept the team to its lowest winning score of the season.

"Defense was the bright spot for us," Patterson said. "Overall, I felt we dictated the tempo, and we like to do that on defense."

Woodlee, who was one-of-four in field goals and zero-of-three from the three line, turned it up in the second half to tie Harris with a team-high 11 points.

Finishing the game were five new Cats: Woodlee, who hit a Hail Mary three-pointer at the buzzer; Laskowska, community college transfer; junior forward Heather Smith; freshman forward Marshela Webb; and freshman guard Morgen Finneran.

Woodlee, who played the off-guard position in high school, said she is still adjusting to handling the ball.

"Tonight was about fixable errors," Woodlee said. "The stuff we did tonight will be shown to us on film, and then we can fix it."

Season opener leaves Asbury with uneasy feeling about team's readiness

JOEL WHITE
staff writer

As head men's basketball coach Tom Asbury sees it, his team is not ready to play a game.

Nonetheless, the Wildcats open the regular season tonight against the Western Carolina Catamounts.

"I feel about as ready as anybody to play a game this early, and that's not very ready," Asbury said. "But I don't imagine they're any more ready than we are. I don't think anybody would feel ready this early unless they've got four starters back on a really solid, experienced team."

Tonight's game is also the season opener for Western Carolina. The Catamounts return three starters from last year's 14-13 team.

Senior forward Bobby Phillips is their highest-scoring scorer at 14.1 points-per-game.

One of the primary reasons for Asbury's anxiety is that the Cats' starting point guard position is still wide open.

"I'm not ecstatic about the point right now, but I think it's getting better," Asbury said.

"Duane (Davis) is still playing a little bit nervous for some reason," he said. "He is doing a nice job defensively and bringing it up the floor pretty well against pressure. But he is not doing the same things in the games as he is during practice, but he will."

Davis had a total of six assists and four turnovers in the two exhibition games. He is also zero-for-seven behind the three-point arch.

Asbury said freshman point guard Adam Lopez's performance in exhibition has earned him playing time. He shot four-of-six from three-point range against the California All-Stars.

"I think Adam Lopez is playing as well as anyone there. I'm not wild about turning the team over to a freshman at point guard, but he has definitely earned himself some minutes," Asbury said.

Cat guard Chris Griffin will use a different style in contributing at point guard.

"Chris has really got to defend," Asbury said. "He is not a guy who can consistently shoot threes and light it up from the outside."

Griffin scored a total of two points in the two exhibition games, but he led the team in assists in both games with five and seven, respectively.

As of Monday, the starting point guard job had not been earned, and Lopez said he thinks it is still up for grabs.

"I think it really depends on who's playing good in practice that week or the first couple of days before the next game," Lopez said. "All three of us are capable of doing some damage out there running the team."

While the Cats lack experience at point guard, the Catamounts are overflowing with point guard experience.

The combined total of games played at K-State by Davis, Lopez and Griffin is 27. All 27 of those games were played by Griffin, who started 10 times last year.

Catamount senior point guard Joel Fleming has started 43 of the team's last 44 games. He averaged 10 points-per-game and 4.7 assists-per-game last year.

The Cats have experience at the off-guard position in junior Ayome May and senior Aaron Swartzendruber.

May started 21 games last year with an average of 10.9 points per game and 4.2 assists per game.

Swartzendruber started 22 games last year, averaging 9.6 points per game and 3.8 assists per game.

May and Swartzendruber both stood out in the two exhibition games. May had a double-double against the California All-Stars with 23 points and 10 rebounds. Swartzendruber scored 19 points in both exhibition games.

Asbury said community college transfer Ty Sims will contribute at the forward position. The physical 6-foot-5 junior scored 14 points and had three offensive rebounds against the California All-Stars.

"He's undersized but he's a lot like guys who have had success in our conference," Asbury said.

Dusty Bookshelf

Bookstore reflects owner's laid-back personality

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian
DIANNE MEREDITH is the owner and operator of The Dusty Bookshelf located in Aggieville on Manhattan Avenue.

SCOTT ALDIS
staff writer

Soft jazz fills the air from a couple of wall-mounted speakers. Visitors can feel the wood tiles below their feet as they navigate the stacks, all surrounded by piles of books, homeless until more space opens up on the shelves.

Volumes of everything from "Men are from Mars, Women are from Venus" to a Webster's Crossword Puzzle Dictionary lie stacked on a thick wooden table, the floor and anywhere else a neat pile can be made.

Despite the mountainous landscape, there is still a sense of openness in the Dusty Bookshelf. None of the customers have to squeeze between shelves or tiptoe around stacks, and people don't seem upset if they need to sift through a stack on the floor instead of the shelves for what they want. They walk freely, and if they take a nearby chair to leaf through something of interest, no one will shoo them along for not buying anything.

If she weren't standing behind the counter, she might be mistaken for a customer. Clad in jeans, a T-shirt and canvas sneakers, Dianne Meredith looks like a student who has just strolled in for a minute and forgot to bring her backpack.

However, watching her in action proves that in the Dusty Bookshelf, Meredith is not only the owner and operator but also a bit of a librarian, bargainer, detective and listener.

Meredith, Dianne to anyone who comes in, serves a line at the register. Person number three seems to be glancing around at every stack in sight until the woman in front nudges her.

"What're you looking for? She can tell you where it is," she says with a gesture toward Meredith. Meredith does, with no more than the author's first name, a guess at the last name and the genre they wrote.

Finally, with a pause in the tide of customers, Meredith begins to talk about herself. She's unaccustomed to being the storyteller but begins in a soft, measured voice while she dusts a small pile of romance novels.

Growing up on a family dairy farm in Mead, Kan., Meredith moved to Manhattan in 1982 to attend K-State as an interior decorating major. In need of a job, Meredith's first involvement with the Dusty Bookshelf was sheer chance.

Seeing an advertisement in the college paper, she applied at the little store on 612 N. 12th St., that bought, sold and traded used books. The owners, a couple working on their doctoral degrees, chose Meredith out of roughly 50 applicants.

But 18 months later, the owners, now finished with their doctorates, wanted to sell the store and leave. So, with a little financial help from her family, Meredith became the new owner of the store she had fallen in love with.

With no experience running a store, Meredith said, business started slowly.

"We had days of $11 gross sales," she said, adding that she had to have friends occasionally watch the desk while she went to classes.

But 1989 brought its share of turning points. As paperbacks jumped in price and customers considered used items less taboo, Meredith said her customer base began to grow fast. Moving the store to a larger location and hiring an assistant had helped, but school was starting to slip away.

Meredith said she isn't regretful.

"At that point, the only reason to get a degree was to please my parents, and that was sort of a moot point," Meredith said, because her parents were already proud of her efforts in the store.

The Dusty Bookshelf's final move to its present home at 700 N. Manhattan Ave., was more by fluke than anything else, Meredith said. The upstairs neighbor proved to be the final straw. After the second flood from this neighbor's sink caused roof damage downstairs, Meredith said she decided to look around for new locations.

Enter Woody's, a clothing store about two blocks away with double the floor space and a closing sign in the window. "I went in pretending to look for clothes, but I didn't really want clothes," Meredith said, "I was really casing the place and going crazy thinking 'Look at this place! Imagine how it would look with books.'"

The deal was eventually closed and about 50,000 relocated books later, the Dusty Bookshelf found its home.

In the six years since, Meredith has gotten married, opened a sister store in Lawrence and more or less filled this location to the brim, from the ground floor to the upstairs workroom.

Mary Alice Hodgson was a friend and customer of Meredith's for seven years before she got a job at the store.

"She treats you like a friend," Hodgson said. "It's not just 'How much can I get out of this person?'"

Hodgson admires her boss, whom she calls "a dollface," as one of the few owners in Manhattan who still works the cash register personally. More than 40 hours week, in fact.

"With a lot of owners, clerking is beneath them. It's not beneath her," Hodgson said.

Hodgson's only complaint is she thinks the customers don't see Meredith's complexity.

"People say she's nice and sweet, and she is. She's all that, but there's a lot more to her than nice and sweet. She's terribly, terribly intelligent and has a wicked sense of humor. She's terribly witty."

What would Meredith change, if she could start over?

"Get a much bigger place," a customer jokes as he looks through a stack of paperbacks.

Meredith laughs and replies, "I really wouldn't change anything. I've been very lucky. I think the most important thing is that it's still a small, friendly place."

Musicians collaborate to express culture, purpose

Flutist R. Carlos Nakai and pianist Peter Kater find more in music than just a melody. For them, it is an expression of heritage and purpose.

Nakai and Kater will perform at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium. The two men collaborate to create a sound with a blended background.

Nakai first became interested in music as a way to explore his Navajo-Ute heritage. In the late 1960s, Nakai researched American Indian music and found an interest in the wooden flute. In 1972, he took a more serious approach to his flute-playing after studying the cornet and trumpet. He researched the wooden flute and then crafted his own.

Nakai said he sees the flute more as a sound sculpture, a sound-making piece of art. He strives to show the wooden flute's versatility and capabilities. Doing so, he uses electronic technology such as synthesizers to create modern sounds.

Nakai's music is not only well-researched but also is reflective of his southwestern culture.

He incorporates personal tribal stories and historical figures into the influence that emerges in his first book "The Art of the American Flute," which gives flutists advice regarding tunings, style, performance technique and maintenance of the flute.

In addition to his research and published book, Nakai has also released several albums including "Inside Canyon de Chelly," which explores nature and the outdoors. He created scores for television and film with such groups as Fox Television, the Discovery Channel, the National Park Service, IMAX, the motion picture "Geronimo" and commercial productions.

Since 1990, Nakai has collaborated with Kater to explore beyond musical and cultural boundaries. Nakai and Kater have recorded six albums together.

Kater brings a distinct background to the duo. Born in Germany, he moved to the United States when he was 4 years old and began studying the piano at age 7. After seven years of classical training, he played rock 'n' roll and top-40 tunes while studying contemporary improvisation on the East Coast.

His accomplishments include six NAIRD Indie Award nominations for Best New Age Album between 1989 and 1996. He won the 1992 award for a collaboration with Nakai titled "Migration."

Like Nakai, Kater is no stranger to scoring large-scale productions. He scored "How the West Was Lost," an award-winning, 13-part series on the destruction of American Indian heritage. Showing his love for theater, he also wrote music for four Broadway and six off-Broadway plays, all of which won awards.

In addition to his music, Kater also strives to improve the environment. In 1997, he established his own EarthSea Records, which gives a portion of its proceeds to environmental and humanitarian organizations such as Greenpeace, the National Wildlife Federation and People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.

The two artists merge their backgrounds and music styles to create what critics have called "a unique and mystical sound."

"It's relaxing and kind of soothing," Kristen Latto, McCain advertising manager and senior in mass communications, said. "Their music is unique in that it doesn't all sound the same."

Chiefs look for revenge against Broncos

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Before Pittsburgh disabled its quarterback and Jacksonville bloodied its nose, the Kansas City Chiefs were pointing toward this as a get-even game in the AFC West.

Now, trailing Denver by two full strides, the Chiefs must beat the Broncos on Sunday just to stay within hailing distance.

A victory for the offensively explosive Broncos (9-1) means they're three up with five to go and almost certain to repeat as champions of the AFC West.

A loss for the Chiefs (7-3) means they have no realistic hope for anything but wild-card status in the playoffs, assuming they even get there.

"Every game is important, but there is no denying this is more important than most. This is a big game," said Chiefs guard Dave Szott. "If we don't win this week, it's going to be awfully tough."

With quarterback Elvis Grbac out at least three more weeks with a broken collarbone, the pressure mounts on Rich Gannon who, along with most of the rest of his team, had a horrid outing last week in a 24-10 loss at Jacksonville.

Starting because Grbac got hurt on Nov. 3, Gannon did pass for more than 300 yards. But most of that came in the second half after the Jaguars seized a 24-3 lead. He also lost three fumbles and two interceptions and got sacked six times.

While the Chiefs are coming off their worst game of the year, the Broncos are riding the crest of a 34-0 rout of Carolina. With Darrien Gordon becoming the ninth man in NFL history to return two punts for touchdowns in one game, the Denver defense and special teams actually outscored the John Elway-led offense.

And that's quite a feat, because the Broncos are leading the league in total offense (372.7 yards per game), rushing (162) and scoring (30.2).

While the stats seem to favor the Broncos, history gives the nod to Kansas City. Since 1990, Marty Schottenheimer's second year as head coach, the Chiefs are 14-2 immediately after a loss of 14 points or more.

"They know that to have an opportunity to win the AFC, they have to beat us in Kansas City," Denver coach Mike Shanahan said. "It will be an emotional game for them. But at the same time, we know what kind of opportunity we have as well."

Clinton pledged to deal "in a very determined way" with the expulsion of the arms inspectors.

White House spokesman Mike McCurry implied that while the U.S. government would try to end the crisis through diplomacy, Clinton would not hesitate to pursue other means if necessary.

"Even as George Bush said (in the Persian Gulf War), if it was necessary to go alone, he would have gone alone," McCurry said. "And that's true of the United States when it defends its interests and true of this commander in chief."

The U.N. Security Council met Thursday to discuss the expulsion of the Americans but initially failed to agree on a response to Iraq's defiance, even though the 15 members Wednesday had condemned the decision to throw out the Americans.

After three hours of deliberations, the council suspended the meeting and agreed to return at 10 p.m. EST. But the meeting was delayed for more than 90 minutes before the statement was approved.

"The Security Council demands the immediate and unequivocal revocation of this action, which has prevented the Special Commission (inspectors) from discharging its responsibilities," the statement said.

Diplomatic sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, also said several members of the Security Council were angered by the decision to reduce the U.N. inspection team in Baghdad to a skeletal crew, instead of simply withdrawing the American members.

The inspectors were charged with making sure Iraq eliminates its long-range missiles and other weapons of mass destruction, as the Security Council ordered it to do at the end of the 1991 Gulf War. The council will not lift trade sanctions against Iraq — imposed after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait — until those terms are met.

Iraq implemented the expulsion order one day after the council voted unanimously to condemn Iraq for its Oct. 29 decision to kick out the American inspectors.

The council on Wednesday slapped a travel ban on Iraqis who interfere with the inspections but avoided any explicit threat of military force.

Butler, the head of the U.N. team, admitted Thursday that pulling all inspectors out would severely hamper the United Nations' ability to ensure that Iraq is not building weapons of mass destruction.

But Butler, an Australian, said the United Nations could not tolerate this illegal separation of nationalities.

"Therefore, I will withdraw all (inspection) staff tomorrow and leave a skeleton staff at the Baghdad center to sustain our facility pending resolution of the present crisis," Butler said.

the fraternity.

Hobbs said the first place winner receives $1,000 and second place gets $250. Some competitors travel more than 300 miles to step in the event.

He said putting on a show with so many people demonstrates what his fraternity can do with limited help.

"My chapter only has seven people and for us to be able to put on an evening that lasts more than seven hours is good. It keeps everything alive," Hobbs said.

Ki Ki Lovelace, graduate student in early childhood education and a member of Delta Sigma Theta, said this was her second year to step in the event.

Lovelace said her group of six has been practicing for the past two months. In the past couple of weeks, they practiced two to three hours daily to get ready for the competition.

"You have to get up there and have a good time," Lovelace said. "You have to think you're the best and get up on stage and be the best. I believe we can do it."

Tickets are available at Turning Heads Hair Salon, Supreme Elegance Hair Salon and Streetside Records in Manhattan; Jamos Hair Studio in Junction City; and the ITR office at Fort Riley at $15 for reserved seats and $12 for general admission. Tickets are also available at the door or from any fraternity member.

"Everyone is welcome to come and support the event," Scott said. "Each year we are getting a better group and growing, also."

Leetch said.

Leetch said he makes just as much profit from food as he does with alcohol. Lucky's offers 15 beers on tap every day of the week.

He said with regulars coming into the establishment daily, he never considered increasing prices on game days.

"They (bars that raise prices) don't have their priorities straight. It's up to them how they want to do it," Leetch said.

Jennifer Krusemark, senior in horticulture and agribusiness, said she goes to Chance after the games for the atmosphere.

"It's a K-State tradition. It's been here for a long time," she said.

She said she didn't understand why some establishments increased prices on game days and wished businesses would see it from the college student's perspective.

She said increasing prices wasn't necessary because many establishments are making more of a profit on game days through tips.

"Without a cover charge, they are trying to make up for it by raising prices," Krusemark said. "By the time I have eight beers, they will be making four bucks off of me and then some."

One aspect she didn't understand was why Chance limits its selection of beers on tap.

"People already know what they want by the time they get up to the bar, so having more of a selection shouldn't take any longer than normal," she said.

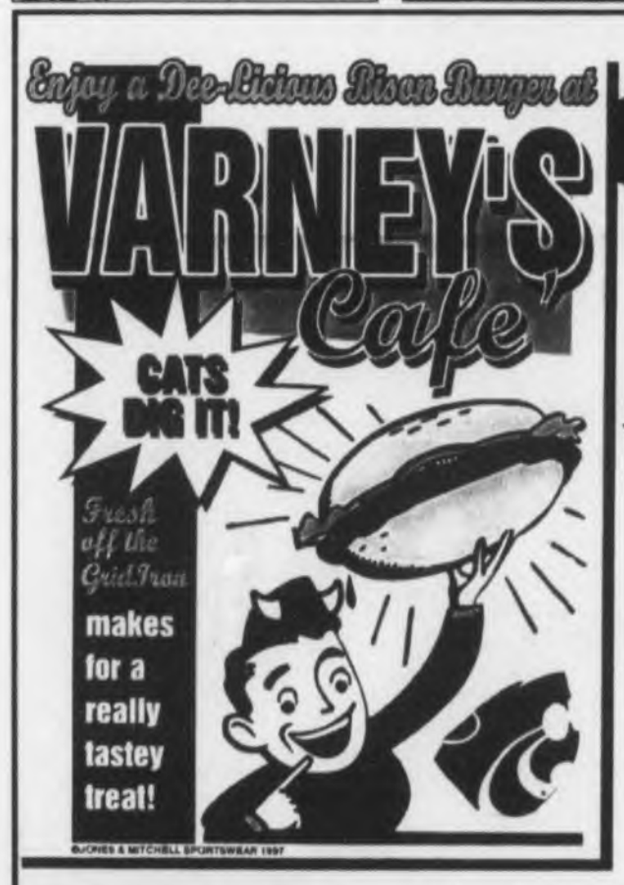
Scott Yungeberg, senior in geography, said Chance was one of the busiest bars in Aggieville, but thought establishments like that are just trying to gain more profit during a profitable day.

"I understand why they limit the selection on tap because they are busy, but they probably aren't raising prices because it's easier, most people raise prices to make money," Yungeberg said.

Wilson said many people don't understand this type of business.

He said he didn't think his establishment was making any more money with the increase of customers and prices.

"It takes twice as many people to run this place on game days with breakage and vandalism from the increased crowds," Wilson said. "It's just like offering the regular prices and charging a cover charge."



Wilson said Chance was an exception to many of the other establishments on game days because of the alumni.

"Alumni remember this place from when they where in school," Wilson said. "They don't even know some of these other places exist. Last Chance has been here a long time, and that's what they remember and that's what they come to."

Clinton seeks allies' support

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Seeking a diplomatic solution to the Iraq crisis, President Clinton spoke to counterparts in Russia, France and Britain about returning arms inspectors from the United Nations to their job and eliminating the threat from Saddam Hussein's weapons of mass destruction.

Clinton

"I think the chances are quite good that we can organize ourselves for this challenge and deal with it very effectively," Clinton told Democratic donors at a Sacramento, Calif., luncheon Saturday.

Clinton consulted with Russian President Boris Yeltsin in a late-night phone call after a private dinner here. Earlier, Clinton had discussed the developments in Iraq with British Prime Minister Tony Blair and French President Jacques Chirac.

Yeltsin told Clinton during their 20-minute conversation that Russia wants a peaceful settlement to the crisis, the Kremlin's press service reported Sunday.

Along with France, Russia has been the U.N. Security Council member most reluctant to take an aggressive line against Iraq in the confrontation over military inspections.

Yeltsin told the president that "Russia firmly intends to take the most active steps in the pursuit of a peaceful way out of the crisis surrounding Iraq," the Kremlin statement said.

Amid rising tensions with Iraq, Clinton on Friday ordered the aircraft carrier USS George Washington to the Persian Gulf. It was expected to join the carrier USS Nimitz within a week.

The buildup of military force in the region was in response to Iraq's expulsion of U.S. arms inspectors who had been in the country as part of a U.N. inspection team.

An American pilot and his U-2 spy plane were set to fly more U.N. reconnaissance missions to check on Hussein's arsenal — beginning as early as Sunday. Iraq has threatened to shoot down planes flying over its territory.

At the Saturday lunch, Clinton said that at stake with Iraq is the battle against organized forces of destruction. He asked Americans not to think of the current situation as a replay of the 1991 Persian Gulf War, where U.S. troops led a multinational coalition to expel Iraqi troops from Kuwait.

"I want you to look at it forward, and think of it in terms of the innocent Japanese people who died in the subway when the Sarin gas was released," Clinton said.

"How important it is for every

USDA grant helps begin agribusiness master's program

LANDON TRAWNY
staff reporter

The College of Agriculture received a $104,851 agricultural telecommunications grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture for the development of its new master's degree in agribusiness distance learning program.

Sandy Chapman, coordinator for the master's in agribusiness program, said other universities received similar grants, but K-State's program is different.

"There is no other place in the country that people can go to earn a master's degree in agribusiness," Chapman said.

Daniel Bernardo, head of the Department of Agricultural Economics, said the new agribusiness program is also convenient for its students.

"It's a way to get a master's degree in agribusiness, while maintaining their current jobs," Bernardo said.

Allen Featherstone, professor and director of graduate studies in the agricultural economics department, said the new agribusiness program will begin this spring.

The program will consist of four one-week courses offered at different intervals at K-State throughout the semester, he said.

The 12 weeks that students will not be attending K-State, classes will be taught through Internet courses.

The program will deal with economic theory and business concepts important to agribusiness, Chapman said.

Featherstone said the agribusiness program was expected to bring 10 to 12 students for the first semester, but there are 15 to 20 students enrolled. The uniqueness of the program has caused a lot of interest around the country, he said.

"We are bringing in people from across the state and one from Colorado, but we've had inquiries from Minnesota, Maryland and Arkansas," Featherstone said. "Hopefully it will be a national audience and perhaps international in the future."

Bernardo said he was pleased to get the grant, because the agribusiness program is important to the college, and because the department put so much effort into putting the grant proposal together.

"It speeds up the program's development," Bernardo said. "A lot of the credit needs to go to Michael Boland, assistant professor in agricultural economics, and Sandy Chapman. They were very instrumental in developing the grant proposal."

Chapman said she agreed such a large grant was important to the program's development.

"This allows us to do some things that wouldn't otherwise be possible without the money," she said.

The money will be used for the salaries of Chapman and student World Wide Web programmers, new sound cards in the Waters 336 computer lab and other technology, Featherstone said. Because this is a one-time grant, Featherstone said, the department will look for other funding opportunities in the future.

Featherstone said the new master's in agribusiness program will be taught with existing faculty, but if it is successful, additional faculty will be needed in the future.

Groups get down to raise money

Long hours of practice for rhythmic perfection paid off for eight historically black fraternities and sororities demonstrating a rare talent and energy in the seventh annual Neak Frasty Step Show.

The step show, which involves choreographed stomping, clapping and chanting, was Saturday night in a sold-out McCain Auditorium. K-State's Alpha Phi Alpha sponsored the event.

"We had to turn down about a 1,000 people at the door," Nate Scott, senior in advertising, said.

Preparing for a step show takes a lot of hard work, said Brandon Hobbs, junior in engineering and Alpha Phi Alpha president.

"You have to work six to seven weeks to step in the show eight minutes," Hobbs said. "You have to work with everyone's personalities and time restraints."

There are different ideas about where step began. Scott said he believed step evolved from military life.

"It's kind of like a drill team but a lot harder," Scott said.

Not only are step routines choreographed, they often use acting mixed in with the rhythm.

Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority demonstrated this. Its members used acting as an introduction, followed by many movements of syncopated rhythm with clapping, chanting and stomping. In one movement, the group divided into three lines, each stepping a different beat.

At the beginning of all the routines, groups introduced themselves through chanting while stepping.

Originality was the key aspect in all routines. Music was used in transitions and to enter and exit.

"Stepping consists of multiple rhythms in a cohesive movement," Verneta White, senior in life science and a member of Delta Sigma Theta sorority, said.

White said her sorority practiced daily for a month and a half to prepare for the show.

She said judges look for creativity, originality, difficulty of the performance and the crowd response.

The audience participated with each group's routine, cheering on the groups and sometimes singing along with a song or chant.

Traditions are also a part of each group's routine. Some fraternities always have a train in their routine or use canes. White said, like other sororities and fraternities, the group reflected its sorority colors, crimson and cream, in costumes and sets.

To give the step show a separateness from other step shows, Alpha Phi Alpha contracted a musical group for the third time. This year they chose the R&B artist Ginuwine.

"Ginuwine wasn't the main event," White said. "He only gives a little performance."

Participants step primarily because they want to, but the first-place prize of $1,000 is an added incentive, Scott said.

"Groups want to win the money so they can do their own philanthropies," Scott said.

RCPD receives funding for sobriety checkpoints

JULIE LINDAMOOD
staff reporter

Drinking, driving and Riley County residents don't mix.

This is the point that the Riley County Police Department wants to make, Lt. Rodney Jager, RCPD, said. The RC PD is one of the eight law enforcement agencies to be awarded funding by the Kansas Department of Transportation in the 1998 Kansas Sobriety Checkpoint Program.

"Different programs the state and local governments have initiated have definitely had an impact on the number of people who are aware of the penalties and end result of driving and consuming alcohol," Jager said.

The sobriety checkpoint program, which began in 1991, gives participants money to conduct at least six sobriety checkpoints in their community for one year, said Debbie Sinclair, program consultant with KDOT's Bureau of Traffic Safety.

> "If they know sobriety checkpoints are out there, they realize that eventually it will catch up with them."
> • Debbie Sinclair
> KDOT program consultant

Besides the RCPD, police departments in the cities of Shawnee, Leavenworth, Coffeyville and Iola and sheriff's departments in Reno, Leavenworth and Brown counties will be participating in the 1998 program. Many other law enforcement agencies conduct checkpoints without KDOT's financial assistance, she said.

"People who drink and drive don't think there's a chance they're going to get caught. If they know sobriety checkpoints are out there, they realize that eventually it will catch up with them," Sinclair said.

KDOT uses many prevention programs such as traffic safety programs, Kansas drunk driving prevention contracts and sobriety checkpoints to keep people from drinking and driving, she said.

"It's so unnecessary that people have to be injured or killed on a highway when this can be prevented," Sinclair said.

In 1996, one person every three days died in an alcohol-related accident in Kansas, said Jim Schaller, research analyst with KDOT's Bureau of Traffic Safety.

Last year, the RCPD stopped more than 1,000 vehicles during the six sobriety checkpoints they conducted, which resulted in 14 DUI arrests, Jager said. However during these checkpoints they noticed an increase in the use of designated drivers.

"Having designated drivers is the responsible thing to do, but the main reason we have them is to ensure the safety of our friends," Panhellenic Council president Jennifer Gorman said.

Many greek houses at K-State have implemented designated-driver programs to give members a safer ride home, Gorman said.

"The Kansas State University students and the military have really been utilizing the designated-driver program," Jager said.

1996 KANSAS DRIVING FATALITIES
Total fatalities: 491
Alcohol related: 201
Percentage related: 40.9

FACTS

- Arrests for DUI/DWI accounted for one of the highest (1.4million) arrest counts among the specific categories in 1994.
- More than 40 percent of all the 16 to 20 year olds who died in 1994 were killed in car crashes. About half of those were alcohol-related.
- The number of intoxicated youth drivers in fatal crashes dropped 14.3% from 1983 to 1994.

Report: Families may challenge dropped benefits for children

NEW YORK — Social Security officials said they will likely notify thousands of low-income families with disabled children that they can appeal benefits that were improperly terminated, the New York Times reported in Sunday's edition.

Officials apparently discovered that the government improperly terminated benefits and then misinformed parents of their rights to challenge the cuts, the Times said.

Some of the children affected are mentally disabled, have diabetes, cerebral palsy or AIDS.

Benefits paid through the Supplemental Security Income program average $436 per month, or $5,232 a year. They help families pay for food, clothing, shelter and costs needed to care for disabled children.

Congress, alarmed at the rapid growth of the SSI program, tightened eligibility criteria when it passed the 1996 welfare law.

Social Security officials re-examined almost a quarter-of-a-million cases and stopped benefits for 60 percent of them, the Times said. They also denied 68 percent of new claims filed.

Officials said they are trying to remedy the wrongful benefits cuts by sending notices and helping parents find lawyers to appeal termination of benefits, the Times said.

Police kill man who stabbed self

LOS ANGELES — A man who stabbed himself with two large knives and then charged police officers was fatally shot Saturday in front of children playing near a housing project, authorities said.

The shooting drew a crowd of about 300 who angrily jeered police until 100 officers arrived and dispersed the crowd.

Officers responded to a report of a man attempting to commit suicide around noon and found the bloodied man stabbing himself in the neck and head with two large butcher knives.

Officers, who said they believed the man was high on drugs, said they unsuccessfully tried to stun the man with an electrical device.

The man charged the officers and was shot, said Lt. Anthony Alba, a police spokesman. He got up and was shot again, then fled to a nearby athletic field where children were playing football. He approached the officers and was shot again.

The man, whose name was not released, died later at a hospital.

California ski area shaken up after having 1 quake per minute

LOS ANGELES — An swarm of earthquake that has rattled the Mammoth Lakes area for five months escalated to nearly one small quake every minute before dying back down Friday, scientists reported.

The swarm of about 500 quakes began at 4:35 a.m. Thursday and included seven shakers of magnitude 3 to 3.1. It was concentrated about four miles east of the ski resort town of Mammoth Lakes.

Thursday's largest shaker, originally reported as a magnitude 4.1, was downgraded to a magnitude 3.9.

Mammoth Lakes, about 215 miles northeast of Los Angeles, sits on the edge of the Long Valley caldera, a 20-mile by 10-mile crater created by a volcanic eruption 760,000 years ago.

'Jailhouse Houdini' recaptured

DECATUR, Texas — A convict known as a "jailhouse Houdini" for repeated escapes that included crawling through sewer lines and blending into a court house crowd during a recess in a trial is behind bars.

This time, Kenneth Paul Putnam was captured in Decatur, Texas, in a motel room with his girlfriend early Thursday after someone recognized him on television's "America's Most Wanted." He had been on the run 18 months, ever since he conned Georgia authorities into transferring him from a maximum-security prison to a county jail, where he went over the fence.

Putnam, 39, has escaped at least five times in the past 18 years.

He had been back in custody barely two months when he escaped the last time, hiding out in the yard after all the inmates were called back in. Dogs tracked him in the mountains for three days, then lost the scent. Putnam persuaded prosecutors to move him from a state prison to a jail by claiming to have valuable information on some bank robberies.

As officers drove Putnam back to jail, he said, "These handcuffs are kind of tight. Can you loosen them up?"

"Nice try," the detective said.

Wefald enters 2nd decade of his presidency

MATT KREPS
staff writer

In 1986, K-State's enrollment was faltering, athletic successes were few and far between and the future was looking grim.

Then Jon Wefald came to K-State. He took over a system that was looking for guidance and gave it direction.

As Wefald enters his second decade at K-State, he stopped to reflect on where K-State has been and where it is going.

The president said numbers were his top priority when he came to K-State in 1986.

"We actually had fewer students than Wichita State back in 1986," he said. "So people were worried about the future of Kansas State. Could it attract not only the critical mass of students, but also the best students?"

It took three years to push numbers to 20,000, but, Wefald said, K-State came back with a roar.

"What we started to do better than ever before in the history of Kansas State was to attract the best and brightest," he said.

Since then K-State has become what Wefald describes as the scholar capital of America. K-State produces more Goldwater, Marshall, Rhodes and Truman scholars than any other public university in the nation. It also attracts a large share of valedictorians, salutatorians, national merit scholars and student leaders.

"I mean, to say that that is a major accomplishment is an understatement," the president said.

"This is something we're getting credit for all across the country today — is what in the wide, wide world of sports is going on at that Kansas State, which emphasizes mainly in-state students, has become an intellectual powerhouse for developing these top student scholars?"

Wefald also said getting funding for buildings was an important part of his tenure as president. He listed the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, Bob Dole Hall, Throckmorton Hall and the Chemistry/Biochemistry Building as important steps forward in improving the campus.

Wefald also spoke of the library's importance.

"Never has the library been front and center of the university like it is today, and I would dare say that you could go all the way back to World War II," the president said.

K-State has reallocated $2 million to the library's budget to keep it running in the past 10 years. Wefald said the cuts in periodicals and problems financing the library were predicted 10 years ago, but few people believed them until the notices went out to cancel subscriptions.

Wefald said library problems are spread throughout the universities across America and, eventually, more libraries would be seeking alternatives to reduce costs.

"We're maybe one of the first universities to hit the wall on this, but hey, Berkeley is going to hit the wall on this," he said.

However, he said he believed the library issues are a positive experience for the university's academic community.

"So the good thing about this finally becoming, shall we say, a significant topic of conversation, is that it has electrified faculty, staff and, hopefully, students to say if we all work together we can improve the library situation to a great extent," Wefald said.

The president also said he was not worried about raising donations for the library.

"What we have to do is convince people that it is so important that they'll want to contribute to it, and we're willing to take that on," he said.

K-State's growth is indicative of the importance it places on academics, the president said. Eighty-five percent of all funds raised go into academic funds and buildings, he estimated.

Wefald said K-State's academic agenda has been overshadowed by the popularity of athletics, but that has not hurt the university's ability to raise funds for its top projects.

Wefald cited the planned biotechnology building as one example of this.

"It's not if or maybe — there will be a new biological addition," he said.

Wefald said the stadium is an important project but not at the top on his list of priorities for K-State.

"There will be more seats added to the stadium whether the students pass this referendum or not," he said. "If I were a student, I'd be more concerned about the future of the library than I would seating in the stadium."

JON WEFALD, president of K-State, watches the K-State men's basketball team take on Western Carolina at Bramlage Coliseum on Friday night. Wefald has been president of K-State since 1986.

HALO newsletter to benefit organizations throughout state

LANDON TRAWNY
staff reporter

The Hispanic American Leadership Organization will benefit from a statewide newsletter from Wichita State University.

The newsletter will be sent to HALO chapters throughout the state.

Alberto Fregeso, junior in psychology, minority studies and Spanish at Wichita State, said he came up with the idea about a month ago.

"There wasn't that much unity among HALOs," Fregeso said. "It will help unify us and expand our knowledge of ourselves and our history."

Fregeso said the newsletter will contain information about Hispanic history, art, politics, literature, information on upcoming events at other HALOs and features about where past members of HALO are and what they are doing.

Fregeso also said he is looking on the World Wide Web for material related to the newsletter. He plans on making a list of Web sites on the newsletters so HALO members can expand their knowledge on issues and events affecting them.

Carlos Contreras, sophomore in business and art, said another goal of the newsletter is to raise money and support for a senior citizens center in Wichita. The center, which is in the heart of the Hispanic community, provides meals and tax help, he said. It also has a recreation center for children.

However, Contreras said, the senior citizens center owes back taxes. The newsletter can inform other HALOs how they can help financially, he said.

The first issue of the newsletter will be mailed in December to HALOs at Wichita State, K-State, Garden City and Hays. Fregeso is trying to get the HALO chapter from the University of Kansas involved as well.

Leo Prieto, junior in pre-medicine and president of the K-State chapter of HALO, said he is excited about the newsletter.

"It will be great for support," Prieto said. "We want it to grow bigger and branch off to include other HALOs in the state."

Prieto said members of HALO from across the state can write articles or send information to Fregeso to include in the newsletter.

Contreras said he went to Wichita on Sunday and delivered information to Fregeso about the K-State chapter of HALO.

Fregeso said he will not do much of the writing. His main job will be to put the newsletter together from the information he receives. Contreras said the newsletter will be sent out through e-mail and be printed at each individual HALO chapter. It will save Fregeso money for printing and postage, he said.

Students should vote regardless of opinion on stadium expansion

During any election people always say those who don't vote have no right to complain.

That might be a difficult pill to swallow, but it's true.

Students have been given the right to express their opinions today and Tuesday about the creation of a privilege fee to fund the expansion of student seating in KSU Stadium.

If the referendum gets 60 percent of the vote, a new fee for all K-State students will be created.

Whether or not students agree with the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics' proposal, they should vote.

Students can vote from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. outside Union Station on the lower floor of the K-State Student Union.

Veterinary medicine students can vote from noon to 2 p.m. today in the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

Unlike previous elections, students will have their IDs scanned instead of just signing in. If students don't have an ID yet, one can be obtained on the first floor of the Union at the ID counter. There is still time.

Even if students have their IDs and are ready to vote, it might be a good idea to review the facts of the expansion and the possible creation of an expansion fee.

There's been a lot of information presented from both the athletic department and Students for First Things First, a group opposed to the use of student fees to expand the stadium.

All the articles that have been published in the Collegian about the expansion and referendum have been archived on the Electronic Collegian. Just type in collegian.ksu.edu/links/stadium.html.

Simple as that.

Voting should be the most difficult part of the entire process. Students should weigh both sides of the issue and vote the way their hearts tell them to.

Be careful what you ask for Equal might not be better in women's sports

SHANE FOSBURG/Collegian

I must admit, I have an aversion to getting beat up.

I have a weak right hook, I don't know how to jab, and I have favored my right leg ever since my trick knee started in 1983. It's true. I would make a terrible sparring partner, even for Muhammad Ali.

However, it is time that I digress.

Ever since the arrival of Title IX, a federal law prohibiting sex discrimination in federally funded education including athletics, more than two decades ago, women have gained greater accessibility to sports. Of course, the balance has not been fully reached and men still have more mobility in various aspects of the sporting community.

The Feminist Majority Foundation, at www.feminist.org (one of my many bookmarks for feminist Internet pages), reports that women make up only one-third of interscholastic and intercollegiate athletes. It also states that women college athletes receive less than 24 percent of college sports' operating budgets.

Outside of college there are barriers, as well. The foundation claims women also have a hard time attaining acceptance in sports-related jobs such as sportscasters. Oddly, Marv Albert wore women's clothing and still made it big, but I think that was helped by the toupee.

Obviously, women will continue to seek to be on the same level as men when it comes to sports, but perhaps this struggle needs to be re-evaluated.

Women in sports want all the recognition, all the fame and all the minutes of highlight film that are given to men. However, maybe these perceptual gains are actually hindrances.

CHRISTOPHER McLEMORE

CHRIS McLEMORE is a sophomore in political science and speech. You can send e-mail to Chris at clm1182@ksu.edu.

One woman in a chat room on the Just for Women Sports World Wide Web page (I think I broke some kind of rule by accessing it) expressed a desire to be as recognized as men. This might be fun for a while, but this strive for fame (I want to live forever, I want to learn how to fly high) might bring with it some negative consequences.

By pursuing only public recognition, we take away from the original intent of the game. Laboring for excellence is a far more admirable goal. Just look at the famous figures who dominate the public eye in sports.

Dennis Rodman arguably does not care about the game or his personal achievements. In between negligees and kicks to the groins of photographers, Rodman places the whole of his existence on public attention. Is this what is so desired by athletes?

Rodman is obviously an extreme case, and I can't imagine K-State basketball player Nicky Ramage dying her hair 13 different shades of pink and kicking people on the sidelines.

However, this example does illustrate what heightened fame can do. Rodman would not be such an odd character if the media spotlight didn't shine so brightly. This focus draws away from personal excellence and creates green-haired freaks, a trade-off that is not worth taking.

Further, the elevation of sports to a higher status shifts the activity from a game to a business. Athletes lobby for large scholarships and develop even larger egos. I imagine we've all seen an athlete or two (usually male) strutting across campus acting as if one, you should know him, and two, you owe him some great debt for playing in, and losing, the basketball game the night before.

Sorry guy, but while I do like sports, I probably don't know who the heck you are, and I really don't care.

The creation of sports as a business can only have adverse effects. If our athletes become business executives, who then will be our athletes? Making athletes realize regal yearnings mitigates equality. The development of ego and a you-owe-me mentality arrives hand in hand with the large salary and large benefit package.

It seems that equality just for the sake of equality is not necessarily a good thing. Sure, we all want to be held in the same reverence as our peers, but when this reverence is detrimental to our sport and our attitudes we need to question this idea.

Don't get me wrong. Women in sports should not face any barriers that are unique to their gender. Men and women should be given equal opportunities and certainly more equal funding. This does not mean I feel women should clamor for the media spotlight in the name of equality. While it might be their right, the outcome is wrong.

Just because the male players have the spotlight does not mean the spotlight is a good thing. My dad always used to ask me; "If everyone else jumped off a cliff would you jump, too?"

I usually responded with "Shut up, Dad," but perhaps he and thousands of other nagging parents are right for once. As men jump off the cliff of fame and notoriety, would women be better off to resist following? Perhaps this is a question worth asking.

Jealousy makes the heart turn green

So, we're walking down the sidewalk having a conversation, and I look over at my fiance only to see he is gawking at some blonde smuggling melons under her shirt.

MARY RENEE SMITH

Maybe it wouldn't have bothered me so much if I hadn't been dressed up for a presentation, and we hadn't been having a deep intellectual discussion. But I was and we were, so it did.

He says now he was just noticing she was wearing a brightly colored, thin shirt, and that she must be cold because he was cold and he had his coat zipped up. I love him, so I believed him (famous last words). Besides, blondes have never been his type.

What bothers me about all this is how much it bothers me. I was and still am really jealous. Everybody experiences jealousy. It's a natural human emotion. One of the more uncomfortable ones I could personally do without. Jealousy is green. Baby poop green that makes you queasy just thinking about it.

Yep, that pretty much describes jealousy — smells bad, makes you nauseous and sticks to stuff like glue. I don't believe those who say there is no jealousy in a good relationship.

Jealousy isn't about love — it's about fear. People feel jealous because they are afraid of losing someone. If they aren't afraid of losing them, then they either don't care about them or they've become too comfortable in the relationship. There are many other kinds of jealousy that fuel us in our daily lives.

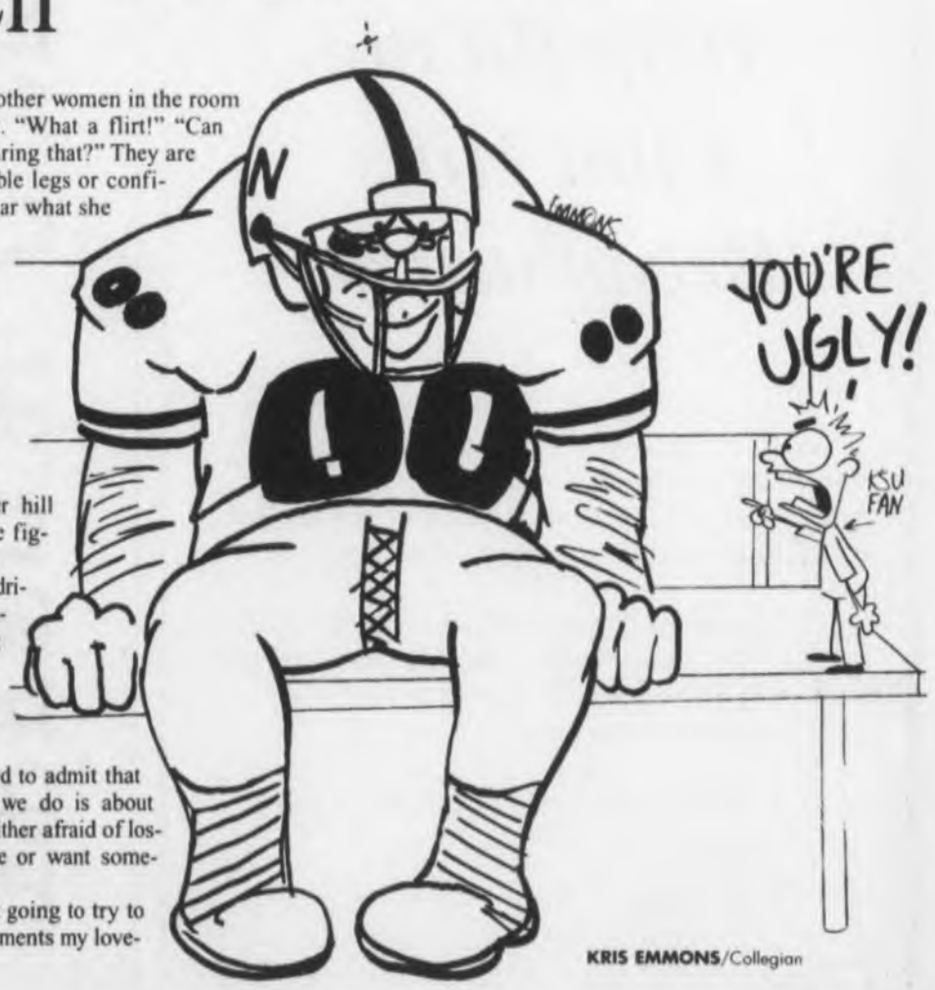
We all hate Nebraska because of jealousy, even though we would never admit it. It has the best football team in the country, and we don't. We hate the University of Kansas because it has a basketball team that is, well, good, and we don't. It's all about jealousy.

What is strange is I don't hear anyone on campus talking trash about Harvard because it has a better English program, or the Massachusetts Institute of Technology because it has a better physics department.

We are debating the stadium expansion because people without seats are jealous of those who have seats at football games. On the other side of the coin, people who don't have enough money to by a used couch are jealous of people who can spend $20 million for more seats in a football stadium.

My Dad lives in Florida. I'm jealous of him because the temperature has been in the 70s all week there while I freeze to death in the pit of Kansas.

We experience jealousy every day. It is an integral part of our lives. It's unfortunate, but I don't think there is much we can do about it.



Capitalism is driven by jealousy and greed. Greed is the power to make someone else jealous. You see someone driving a fantastic car. You want that car. You feel jealous. You buy the car. You win the lottery. You get greedy. You buy two cars. Other people see you in one of your cars. They feel jealous. They buy a car. Their neighbor sees the new car. They get jealous. Ah, isn't capitalism great?

Insults are all based in jealousy, especially among women. A woman walks in the room wearing a short skirt. When she leaves, the other women in the room comment on the skirt. "What a flirt!" "Can you believe she is wearing that?" They are jealous of her incredible legs or confidence in herself to wear what she pleases.

Wars are all about jealousy. Someone has more power. Someone has more land. Someone has more oil. The next thing you know there are thousands of soldiers in camouflage and tanks rolling over hill and dale. (I never have figured out who Dale is.)

The human race is driven by a fear that someone else has something we don't. It can be property, love or physical characteristics. There is no use denying it. We just need to admit that just about everything we do is about being jealous. We are either afraid of losing something we have or want something we don't have.

Personally I am just going to try to find a shirt that complements my lovely shade of green.

Lecturer who helped defeat KKK member to speak

Editor,

I am writing to encourage students to attend tonight's presentation by Tim Wise. The lecturer is best known for helping to defeat the former grand knight of the Ku Klux Klan, David Duke, in his run for a Senate seat. Wise now conducts seminars aimed at confronting racial prejudice and the growing conservative backlash against progressive social policy.

The topic of tonight's presentation is "The Politics of Prejudice: Racial Scapegoating in the 1990s." This is an excellent opportunity for students to hear a reasoned point of view that answers the ridiculous arguments of backwards conservative commentators like Rush Limbaugh.

The lecture will be at 7:30 tonight in the Union Little Theatre. Do not miss this opportunity to see one of the top lecturers in the nation.

Students need to know what they are voting for

Editor,

First off, we must clear up a few things about the stadium expansion vote. This is not a vote to expand the stadium or not to expand. The vote is simply how much, if any, the students should pay.

Make no mistake — the stadium will expand regardless of how the students vote. Therefore, arguments pertaining to the fact that the expansion will help the public perception of the school, so vote yes, are completely missing the point.

If it is true that the expansion will help the school's image, the image will be improved regardless of the student vote.

Also, this vote in no way, shape or form has anything to do with the library. Any discussion in regard to the library is irrelevant to the expansion.

Lastly, the vote has nothing to do with school pride despite what the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is trying to convince us.

If we vote yes for the smaller plan, students will be asked to pay $12 per year. In return, the students will be guaranteed 9,000 seats.

We now have about 9,500 seats. All that we are being guaranteed is that we will lose no more than 500 of our seats.

If we vote yes for the larger plan, students will be asked to pay for one-third of the total expansion cost. In return, the students will be guaranteed 10,000 seats. The students will be guaranteed a net gain of 500 seats. That is about 7 percent of the seats being added, yet we will pay 33 percent of the cost.

In both cases, we will be guaranteed not to be punished for a no vote by having ticket prices frozen for the next four years and not losing 2,000 of the seats we already have.

If we vote no, we must fear retaliation by the athletic department for not giving it the money it demanded. This is exactly in the same manner that businesses feared retaliation from mobsters if they did not give the money the mobsters demanded.

For a yes vote, we pay for part of the expansion and gain virtually nothing.

For a no vote, we must fear the mob.

I will not fear the mob. I will take my chances. I will stand and fight. Vote no today and Tuesday.

Clinton's name appears on outstanding loan list

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — A former loan officer who worked at James McDougal's Savings and Loan for two weeks said Saturday he saw President Clinton's name on a computer-generated list of outstanding loans.

"I just noticed it," said Howard Taylor, who worked at the savings and loan in August 1983. "I don't know whether Clinton was governor at the time. I recognized the name."

Clinton testified in McDougal's bank fraud trial last year that he never borrowed money from his former Whitewater business partner.

Taylor said he saw Clinton's name as the S&L computerized its loan records, recalling the loan was in the $20,000 to $30,000 range. He never saw a loan folder with details of the transaction.

McDougal is quoted in Saturday editions of the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette as saying Clinton not only received a loan from his S&L in 1982 but also signed one of the loan documents inside the governor's office.

Taylor says he notified the FBI shortly after Kenneth Starr took over the Whitewater investigation in August 1994, and FBI agents interviewed him six months ago. Taylor said he has not been subpoenaed to testify before the grand jury probing Clinton and his wife's business dealings.

Taylor's revelation followed the recent discovery of a 1982 $27,600 cashier's check payable to Clinton among thousands of pages of long-missing documents from McDougal's savings and loan found in the trunk of an abandoned car near Little Rock.

The check wasn't endorsed by Clinton. Clinton lawyer David Kendall denied such a loan ever took place.

Jack Owen of Newport former, manager of the branch where Taylor worked, said he never saw Clinton's name on any loan documentation. Taylor left Madison after two weeks because of shoddy record-keeping and loan practices, he said.

"There was too much business by phone, the records they had weren't very good, people trying to make payments on loans there weren't any records of-stuff like that," Taylor said.

Volleyball team drops 2 on road to Buffs, Nebraska

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

After sailing down the open road with wins in nine of 10 matches, the K-State volleyball team hit some speed bumps, losing its past three matches. K-State lost both matches on the road this weekend, against No. 11 Nebraska and No. 22 Colorado. Both teams beat the Wildcats 3-0 in remarkably similar matches.

Friday night's match against Nebraska was the same old story for the Cats — trying to get the first win ever for the program vs. the Cornhuskers. When the Cats arrived at the sold-out Nebraska Coliseum, they were 0-56 lifetime against Nebraska, and when they left, the streak had grown to 57 consecutive losses.

"I wish we'd beat them and ended the streak because I think we have the ability to," setter Devon Ryning said.

The first game took nearly an hour to play before the Huskers took a 15-11 decision. Nebraska made only four hitting errors in the game to the Cats' 13 and jumped ahead 14-8. But the Cats clawed back to try to take the game. K-State held off eight Huskers' game points, but could not survive a ninth in falling 15-11.

"I thought they elevated at the right time in the first game," K-State coach Jim McLaughlin said. "They played awfully well."

In the second game, the Huskers made quick work of the Cats, jumping out to a 7-0 lead. K-State battled back to within 8-4, when a questionable call went the way of Nebraska. Huskers' all-America outside hitter Lisa Reitsma hit a ball down the right sideline that appeared to sail long of the baseline, but the linesperson's "out" call was overruled by referee Daryl Korinek.

McLaughlin jumped out of his chair and screamed fervently at Korinek after the call. For his efforts, McLaughlin was issued a red card, resulting in another point for Nebraska. The Huskers scored the last seven points of the game to win 15-4.

"I've never had a red card," McLaughlin said. "I was edgy at the call. I probably opened my mouth a little too much, but I've got to control myself there."

Game three was even, and the teams eventually were tied at 14, but Nebraska scored the next two to win 16-14.

Nebraska held the Cats to a .208 attack percentage, while the Huskers hit .337.

"I thought we played well," Nebraska coach Terry Pettit said. "I thought we played hard, and I thought Kansas State played hard."

Saturday night was a history-making night for Ryning, but the Cats fell to the Buffaloes for their third-consecutive loss. K-State is now 18-10 and 9-7 in Big 12 action. Colorado swept the Cats this season for the first time since 1994.

Ryning recorded 47 assists in the defeat, giving her 5,042 for her career. She is the first person in K-State history, and only the third in Big 12 history, to reach the 5,000 career assist plateau.

"Right now, it doesn't mean very much," Ryning said. "If we were winning and this happened, I think I'd be saying it's a great achievement, but I'd rather win this game than get a 5,000th assist. It's kind of disappointing actually."

In the first game, the Buffs jumped out to a 10-6 lead, but the Cats rallied to within 10-9. Colorado scored the next five points, however, to win the first game 15-9.

Game two was dominated by Colorado. The Buffaloes hit .533 to K-State's .159 in the game on their way to a 15-3 win. That was the Cats' worst single-game loss since losing 15-0 to Maryland on Sept. 22.

The Cats recovered for game three. K-State took a 5-2 lead early, but the Buffaloes recovered to pull within one at 8-7.
The Cats rattled off six consecutive points to take a 14-7 lead and be one point away from forcing a fourth game, but the Buffs tallied eight consecutive points on a service rally to take a 15-14 lead. Colorado scored the next point to finish up the match with a 16-14 third-game win, and sent the Cats home with a three-match losing streak.

For 13 years, K-State had a large chip on its shoulders — a buffalo chip — a string of 13 consecutive wins by the Colorado Buffaloes. The Cats hadn't beaten Colorado since 1984. But Saturday at KSU Stadium the Wildcats put an end to that streak with a convincing 37-20.

Cats snuff Buffs 37-20

The holidays came early for the Wildcats' seniors.

Colorado, a team the 15 Cat seniors had played to the last minute every year, came to KSU Stadium 5-4, needing a win to get a bowl invitation. It left Manhattan without that win as the Cats dominated the Buffaloes 37-20.

"As far as the seniors go, it was a great feeling to walk into the locker room with that win," senior left tackle Todd Weiner said. "Colorado had some great athletes out there."

The game began as a battle of the place kickers. Colorado kicker Jeremy Aldrich put a 29-yarder through the uprights on the Buffs' first drive, and the Cats' Martin Gramatica answered with his own.

"I was just glad to get the opportunity to put points on the board," Gramatica said. "But once the offense got started, they didn't need me anymore."

Both teams' defenses were key in keeping each other out of the end zone. At the end of the first quarter, the Cats had 12 rushes for 54 yards and quarterback Michael Bishop had completed one of four passes for 30 yards. The Buffs recorded 12 rushes for 52 yards and Buff quarterback John Hessler had completed two of six passes for 33 yards.

"I'm really proud of our secondary, particularly our corners," Cat coach Bill Snyder said. "They lined up against guys twice their height and did a really great job."

Colorado's woes continued throughout the second quarter. On the Cats' kickoff, Buff kick returner Ben Kelly fumbled the reception and Cat strong safety Jarrod Cooper recovered it at the Colorado 23-yard line.

Cats on path to better bowl

And God said to the Wildcats, "Thou shalt endure a drought and suffer for 13 years. And at the end of the famine, thou shalt conquer the mighty Buffaloes and travel to the desert in Arizona, where thou shalt feast. Then during the following harvest, when David the Wildcat takes on Goliath the Nebraskan, ..."

And so it was written. The Cats beat Colorado for the first time since a 38-6 thumping in 1984. K-State coach Bill Snyder, despite turning around one of the worst Division I-A programs during his nine years in Manhattan, had never beaten Nebraska or Colorado as of Friday.

But now the Cats have affirmed their status as the No. 2 team in the Big 12, the No. 7 team in the nation and a team that can beat an opponent outside of the Mid-American Conference.

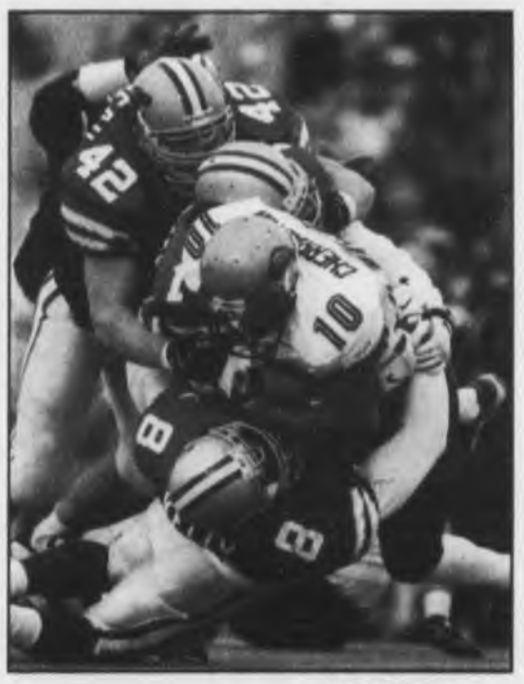
So what does the win mean to the long-term success of the K-State football program?

"It means we're 9-1, I guess," Snyder said.

Snyder said the win over Colorado said more about K-State's playing this season than the state of the program.

"I'm pleased that we won the ball game, but everybody makes such a big deal about it. Last year, '95, '94, '93, '92, '91, '90, '89 — none of that makes any difference today. Things that happened in your past don't mean anything today and tomorrow and what your future holds," Snyder said.

"And it didn't mean a doggone thing today. The difference was now and us. Did we prepare well enough? Did we play hard enough? Did we execute well enough to win a ball game? And the answer is yes. Last year and the years before had nothing to do with it. Absolutely nothing."



Snyder said the only thing the win could change with the program is its national perception. He said one win doesn't change a program, except in the eyes of those who think that way. However, he said that could include future players.

"If that's the perception of a recruit, he may be right or he may be wrong, that whoever wins has a better program," he said. "That doesn't necessarily make us a better program because we beat them or anybody else, or vice versa."

The players were happy to beat the Buffs, but also viewed it as nothing affecting anything more than that week and this season.

"We look at it as, we beat Colorado, we move

K-STATE'S AARON SWARTZENDRUBER attempts a layup against Western Carolina on Friday at Bramlage Coliseum. The Cats won 93-74.

CATS WIN SEASON OPENER

Wildcat forward Manny Dies powered his way to a double-double, leading the Cats to a 93-74 win over the Western Carolina Catamounts on Friday night.

"Manny is our best rebounder and best defender, and he showed it tonight," Cat forward Shawn Rhodes said. "The whole team gets better when Manny checks in."

Dies had 20 points, 11 rebounds and four blocked shots as he dominated the smaller Catamounts in the paint.

"We had an inside presence this game," Coach Tom Asbury said. "They don't have anybody to answer Manny."

The Cats shot 55 percent from the field while the Catamounts shot 42 percent.

After going on a five-minute, 15-0 run ending at the 10-minute mark in the first half, the Cats never led by less than eight for the remainder of the game.

Dies scored six points in the run, highlighted by a reverse dunk to put the Cats up 16-8 at the 12-minute mark. Rhodes and Cat forward Ty Sims scored, and guard Josh Reid stole a pass at midcourt and took it in for a layup in the run. Cat guard Aaron Swartzendruber capped off the run with a three-point shot, making the score 21-8.

Dies again lit up the crowd with a monster dunk over Catamount forward Joey Bryson in transition with a minute to play in the first half. Bryson fouled Dies on the play.

The Cats led 41-25 at halftime.

In the second half, the Catamounts hit the Cats with a tenacious, full-court press and a half-court trap.

"They played a very unconventional type of defense for this time of year," Asbury said. "They never allowed us any flow offensively. I bet we didn't run seven or eight offensive sets tonight because of the way they were guarding us."

Freshman point guard Adam Lopez, who scored 11 points and had four assists, said the Catamount defense made him uncomfortable.

"That half-court trap made me a little nervous, but other than that I felt pretty good," he said.

Lopez had three turnovers in the second half.

Despite the Catamount defensive pressure, the Cats held on to their lead with the inside play of Dies, Rhodes, forward Marcus McCollough and center Joe Leonard.

"I think offensively we could post up, and defensively we changed a few shots," Rhodes said.

The taller Cats blocked seven shots in the second half and continuously forced the Catamounts, which had no player on the roster taller than 6 feet 7 inches, to adjust their shots.

The Cats beat the Catamounts on the boards 47-30.

Rhodes finished the game with 10 points, six rebounds and two blocked shots while McCollough had nine points and six rebounds. Leonard blocked two shots and changed numerous others defensively.

Cat guards Duane Davis and Ayome May each finished the game with 10 points. Davis also had four assists and three steals.

Swartzendruber led the team in assists with six.

The Catamounts had four players score in double figures. Forward Dondrell Whitmore led the team with 12 points and seven rebounds. Guard Stacy Ervin also scored 12 points. Point guard Joel Fleming scored 10 points and dished-out six assists. Forward Jarvis Graham scored 10 points.

Although the Cats dominated in all aspects of the game, Asbury said he still was not entirely happy with the team's performance.

"There are probably more areas I was displeased with than things I was pleased with," he said. "I'm going to be hard on these guys. We've got to gain some respect, and it starts tonight."

Mötley Crüe, Cheap Trick deafen Topeka

KADY GUYTON
arts and entertainment editor

Everyone at the Kansas Expocentre in Topeka on Friday got treated to a loud, rocking show done by a couple of the masters — and a really good contact high.

Review Music

If rock 'n' roll were a bank, Mötley Crüe and Cheap Trick would definitely be board members and majority shareholders. Both groups demonstrated they still have what it takes to survive the '80s and come back possibly stronger than ever.

Mötley Crüe is in the middle of its "Mötley Crüe vs. The Earth" tour, and I think the earth is about to give, based on sheer volume. This was the loudest concert I've been to since Pantera.

Cheap Trick was the opening band, which was a little ironic for those of us who remember when it was classified as hard rock. But it put on a great show nonetheless. It opened with "I Want You To Want Me" and stayed in that vein for most of the show.

Even though they could have subjected the audience to a bunch of sappy ballads from the '80s, the guys resisted the temptation and just stuck to the music they're known for. "Dream Police," "Survivor" and "Anytime" had the crowd singing and moving.

Robin Zander has to have made a deal with the devil. He looks and sounds as good now as he did in the late '70s when Cheap Trick first appeared.

Rick Nielson handled most of the crowd interaction in addition to switching guitars every few songs. The famous four-necked guitar made an appearance. As did the "Uncle Dick" guitar, a two-necked hammer decorated with feet on the heads and a face on the end of the body.

My favorite drummer in modern music, Bun E. Carlos, did the usual stellar job without saying a word and Tom Petersson on bass was just that.

After Cheap Trick, the crowd got a break for about half an hour while Mötley Crüe got itself together.

During the wait, the audience was exposed to some of the more disturbing scenes from "A Clockwork Orange" in addition to various execution footage from around the world. The guys meant it when they said this was going to be the biggest, rudest, sickest Crüe ever.

Finally, finally, finally, the lights went down, the crowd started chanting, the curtain fell and there they were in all their tattooed glory.

The Crüe didn't waste a lot of money on sets like it has in the past. The stage was pretty bare, which gave the band members more room to move, and move they did. They were all over the place, rather than just playing to the lucky crowd in the front five rows. What they saved on sets, they spent on pyrotechnics. The amount of flame and smoke produced made the Expo look like a battlefield.

VINCE NEIL, lead singer of Mötley Crüe, sings a verse of the song "Girls, Girls, Girls" Friday night at the Kansas Expocentre in Topeka. This was one of the stops on the band's "Mötley Crüe vs. the Earth" Tour.

BRANDON WHITE
Collegian

Vince Neil's vocals wailed for the two-hour show, give or take a few minutes. He has held up well and will probably continue to do so.

Tommy Lee (a.k.a. Mr. Pamela Anderson) has traded in his g-string for leather hot pants to show the body art better, and it is impressive. He is probably the most physical drummer playing today. When he got going all there was to see was hair, drumsticks and flying sweat.

Nikki Sixx and Mick Mars proved that two great guitarists can only become better over time.

This concert was classic Mötley Crüe. The guys had fun and so did the audience. They played a loud mix of old and new stuff. The older music, like "Girls, Girls, Girls" and "Anarchy" was better received than the music from the new "Generation Swine" album, but what can you do?

Between sets, Tommy Lee played with the crowd. Borrowing the camera operator's video camera, at one point he got a woman in the front section to flash her bare chest on the video screen 60-feet wide.

"See, I'm telling ya," he said when a dozen other women followed suit, "it's a domino effect. Pretty soon you all will be naked."

For the encore, Tommy Lee got sappy by playing "Brandon," an ode to his son, from the "Generation Swine" album.

The group was doing so well up until that point. The interjection of this syrupy little song accompanied by home videos of baby Brandon with his mom and dad was almost too much. The crowd didn't come to see this, but they stayed polite for the duration of the song.

Following that, the Crüe got down again, wrapping up the show with classics such as "Kick Start My Heart" and "Dr. Feelgood."

This was basically a really great live show. The audience got to see a band have a great time without all the hype that usually follows a group of this stature. They were close to the audience members and made them feel like a part of the show. When a guy jumped security to give Nikki a high five and Vince a bear hug, it was all taken in stride. I hope the Crüe will keep this up for another 17 years.

'Lake Shore Drive' presents dark realities with humor

CORBIN H. CRABLE
staff writer

As soothing jazz music played in the background, I surveyed the scenery for the play "Lake Shore Drive." Checkered tile floor. A chair here, a table there. How relaxing, I thought. How quaint. Just like the coffeehouse from "Friends."

Review Theater

Soon, it became apparent that this play was going to be no comedy.

It tells the story of two brothers, Calvin and Jeremiah Jacobs, who are employed as debt collectors. Jeremiah is quite the professional, and Calvin is, well, the bad seed. Calvin kills those who don't pay off their debts, and sees himself as God because of his power to take lives.

In the first scene, Calvin shoots, among others, a 4-year-old girl who is the daughter of one of his debtors. I found this to be in poor taste; the murder of the child was unnecessary and seemed to be there for shock value. Everyone in the audience was indeed shocked, except for the guy who sat behind me. He apparently thought it was funny because he began to laugh hysterically.

At the end of the first scene, a coffin is carried across the stage, which contains the body of the little girl. Calvin reaches into the coffin and pulls out a tattered, brown teddy bear. Again, the guy behind me is laughing, and I'm becoming slightly agitated.

At the beginning of the second scene, Jeremiah has voiced his disapproval of Calvin's lifestyle and left him. Soon after, Calvin finds that his girlfriend has died of a heroin overdose. He comes to the realization that although he can take lives whenever he wants, he cannot save his deceased girlfriend.

Sitting in a coffeehouse, Calvin talks with a reluctant Jeremiah about how he abandoned him during their childhood. The debate gets heated until Calvin finally confesses that he has the AIDS virus. Calvin asks Jeremiah to kill him as an act of love. When Jeremiah refuses, Calvin shoots him and then himself.

Luckily, throughout the play, some comic relief comes from the characters of Cyd and Janis, played by Vanessa Vaughn and Amy Thompson, both juniors in theater, two women who sit in the coffeehouse on their lunch break. Cyd whines about committing suicide, but does it in such a lighthearted manner that I didn't quite mind the laughing hyena sitting behind me as much as I did at the beginning. Janis, meanwhile, is there to be the good listener.

In a corner of the coffeehouse sits a young poet, played by Scott Chamoff, graduate student in theater. Chamoff does a splendid job of being animated as the poet, who reads works that cover topics such as underwear, cigarettes and drunk driving. In fact, he candidly points out that "sobriety is overrated."

As dark as it may be, though, the roles of Calvin and Jeremiah, played by Jason Miller, sophomore in theater, and Michael Borgelt, sophomore in theater and psychology, were portrayed realistically. Miller and Borgelt gave the audience a look at how painful it can be for brothers when their lives take drastically different turns. Calvin and Jeremiah are both the extremes: Calvin is the manic depressive and Jeremiah is the level-headed, born-again Christian.

I saw "Lake Shore Drive" as a play that dealt with topics that most people aren't comfortable discussing. I applaud the cast for taking this step in dealing with sensitive subject matter while making sure that comedy was a part of the production. "Lake Shore Drive" makes the point, through the characters, that some subjects must be faced or the results could be deadly, as Calvin and Jeremiah Jacobs have shown us.

Ska bad boys the Pietasters tear the house down in Lawrence

PHIL KELLUM
staff writer

After an absence of 1 1/2 years, the Pietasters finally made another concert appearance in the area Friday night at the Granada in Lawrence.

Review Music

It was the band's first appearance since signing to Hellcat Records.

I was late getting to the show so I missed the first band, Limp. Oh well, I had only heard mediocre reviews of it in the past, so I wasn't too upset.

I, however, did miss almost all of New Jersey punk-rock kings, the Bouncing Souls. I love these guys. The band always puts on a great show, and the four songs I managed to catch on Friday night were as good as ever.

The first song I saw the band do was "East Side Mags" from its new, self-titled album on Epitaph Records.

It also kicked out "The Ballad of Johnny X" and a few older songs, too. I just wish I could have seen more by this band. Next time.

Then the stage was cleared for the one, and only, Pietasters.

The lights went down, the smoke machine was turned on, and the bad boys of ska strode onto the stage.

Steve Jackson and crew broke out with "Freak Show" from their second album and didn't let up for about an hour or so.

The set was a nice mix of old and new songs from all three of the band's albums.

The one thing that cracked me up was a roadie who sat on the drum riser and turned on the smoke machine throughout the set. Why? I don't know.

The new stuff from "Willis" sounds incredible live. I wasn't let down in the slightest bit.

The mighty soul stomp of "New Breed" sounded so good. The horn section was awesome through the whole show but especially on this song.

Bassist Todd "Boy Elvis" Eckhardt made his insane bass riffs look so easy as he sneered Elvis-style at the crowd.

About halfway through the set, Eckhardt walked up to his microphone and said, "More smoke. I don't feel like I'm in a Poison video yet, goddammit."

The roadie flipped on the smoke machine full blast. I was on the left side of the stage and couldn't see across the stage because the smoke was so thick.

Jackson dedicated a song to "all the prostitutes and drug dealers here in Lawrence, Kansas." when they played "Pleasure Bribe," a nice little tune about the seedy side of life.

"Dollar Bill" from the band's debut album rocked the house. Its massive, sing-along choruses sounded great.

Jackson then dedicated some songs to all the skinheads in the crowd, starting with a cover of Laurel Aitken's "Sheila."

The Pietasters closed the set with a rousing version of my favorite Pietasters tune "Maggie Mae." I think everyone in the crowd was screaming along to the infectious chorus.

The band left the stage, and after a few minutes of cheering and stomping by the crowd, the Pietasters came back for a couple more songs.

The encore was kicked off with "Biblical Sense" and then Jackson invited all the skinheads up on stage for the cover of British Oi! legends the Business' "Drinking And Driving." This song is a Pietasters' live staple.

At least 10 skins hit the stage and sang along and danced with Jackson and the rest of the band. Bryan, bassist from the Bouncing Souls, came out to contribute some vocals.

Then it was over. The Pietasters definitely know how to put on a great show. I just hope the band comes back before another 1 1/2 years roll around again.

Bishop ran 17 yards to the Colorado six, but a Cat holding penalty and Bishop getting sacked for 17 yards moved the ball back to the Colorado 32. But Bishop saved himself in his coach's eyes when he completed a 32-yard touchdown pass to tight end Justin Swift.

"I said at the beginning of the season there's going to be some growing pains, and we're still growing," Snyder said.

On the next drive, Buff tailback Dwayne Cherrington took off 51 yards to the K-State 1-yard line before Cat free safety Lamar Chapman could catch up with him. Hessler, in trouble, backslid seven yards while Cat linebacker Mark Simoneau swatted the ball and put it on the ground. Chapman picked it up and took off.

"Those are plays that changed the game dramatically," Cat defensive coordinator Mike Stoops said. "When we were able to come up with that play, we were in total control of the game after that."

> It was just great coming off the field to the crowd, and I hope it continues to grow.

> senior left tackle

On the Buffs' next drive, Cat defensive tackle Jerome Evans batted up a Hessler pass. Cat defensive end Joe Bob Clements grabbed it, and the ball ended up at the Colorado 28.

This play turned into a rushing touchdown by fullback Brian Goolsby, putting the Cats up 27-6 at halftime.

Colorado coach Rick Neuheisel said he was not pleased about the turn of events.

"I told the team in practice we can't turn the ball over," Neuheisel said. "Yet we fumble going into the end zone and throw two interceptions."

At the end of the third, Hessler was 4-for-17, for a less-than-grand total of 52 yards.

In the fourth, Hessler hooked up with wide receiver Phil Savoy seven times for 93 yards and a touchdown pass to shorten the Cat lead to 16. Buff backup quarterback Adam Bledsoe completed an on-side kick, but it ended up in K-State hands on the Colorado 44. The Cats got touchdown No. 4 as senior running back Mike Lawrence ran 14 yards for his last touchdown on Wagner Field with 2:16 left on the clock.

"That would have been a good one, but it would have been better if it was the one that said 'Mike Lawrence is now K-State's all-time leading rusher,'" Lawrence said.

Lawrence needs just 48 yards to take the No. 1 spot held by J.J. Smith (2,210).

Senior place kicker John Urban's extra point was his last at K-State as well.

Hessler turned on the two-minute offense and drove the Buffs 79 yards for a touchdown. A two-point conversion failed, and the score remained 37-20.

With little time left on the clock, senior linebacker Casey Wehrman forced Savoy to fumble and Simoneau recovered the ball to run it to the Colorado 30. But the four seconds on the clock just ticked away as the student section rushed the field to tear down the north goal post.

"I want us to be able to do the same thing next year in Boulder," Buff defensive end Nick Zigler said.

Now the Buffs, at 5-5, have to get that win at home against Nebraska.

Weiner said Colorado was a challenge he was glad the Cats met, and looked forward to seeing the Cats do so again as a fan.

"It was just great coming off the field to the crowd, and I hope it continues to grow," Weiner said.

on. Next week, Iowa State," running back Eric Hickson said.

However, the 13 previous years weighed heavily on the minds of the fans.

Although Colorado entered the game struggling, and the Cats were expected to win, the victory was monumental enough for fans to tear down the north goal posts.

"It was kind of crazy out there," free safety Lamar Chapman said. "It was a great feeling to see the fans. They came in and tore down the goal posts. It was a great feeling."

While Chapman appreciated the fan support, some of the non-goal post destroyers were critical of the action, booing loudly and saying there was no reason to tear them down after a home win over a team with a 5-4 record. But the goal posts came down before finding a home in Aggieville, drawing a mixed response from Snyder.

"I want our fans to feel like that's not the pinnacle of what can happen here. But again, I'm not critical of them because those are our students," Snyder said. "They wouldn't be out there tearing them down if they didn't support our program. So I have a great deal of respect for them, and I understand why they did it. I can pay for the goal posts."

If Snyder doesn't pay for the new goal posts, K-State will likely pick up the tab. Some of the money could probably come from a bowl payout. The Cats clinched bowl eligibility with their sixth win at Oklahoma Oct. 25 and after subsequent wins over Texas Tech, Kansas and Colorado, now can finish no worse than 9-2.

With a win next week over 1-9 Iowa State, though, the Cats would finish at 10-1 and possibly ranked in the top six in the nation.

An Alliance Bowl berth is possible, but without one, the No. 2 team in the Big 12 still plays in the Cotton Bowl.

"We look at it. I can't say that we don't, because that's a goal that we have. We can't decide which bowl we'll go to, the only thing we can do is come out and win," quarterback Michael Bishop said. "But every player is like, 'We want the Fiesta Bowl,' but we know the only way we get to the Fiesta Bowl is to be 10-1."

What to Know Head to Toe

Diabetes can lead to vision loss or even blindness.

To avoid eye problems:

- Keep your blood sugar under good control.
- Bring high blood pressure down.
- Get a dilated eye exam by an eye doctor every year.
- See your eye doctor if:
  - Your vision is blurry.
  - You see double. You see spots or floaters.
  - One or both eyes hurt.
  - You feel pressure in your eye.
  - You can't see things at the sides like you used to.
  - You have trouble reading.
- If you have vision problems, ask your eye doctor for a low-vision evaluation.

Diabetes can lead to infection, gangrene, and possibly amputation in feet or toes with untreated cuts or blisters.

To keep your feet healthy:

- Keep your blood sugar under good control.
- Take off your shoes and socks and ask your doctor to check your feet at each visit.
- Wash your feet every day. Dry them, even between toes.
- Check daily for cuts, bruises, blisters, redness, and swelling.
- Never walk barefoot.
- Wear shoes that fit well. Ask a doctor or a podiatrist, a doctor who specializes in foot care, for advice on proper shoes.
- Cut your nails straight across and file the edges.
- Don't smoke.
- Shake out your shoes before putting them on.

Dilbert artist fools executives

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Scott Adams doesn't just lampoon consultants in his Dilbert cartoon strip, he can also pose as one and make managers believe him.

Adams, whose strip appears in 1,700 newspapers in 51 countries, spouted nonsense during a meeting with executives of a Silicon Valley company, and most of them, following the lead of their boss, just nodded.

"What if I was a management consultant?" Adams said. "I could lead a bunch of executives in writing a mission statement so impossibly complicated that it has no real context whatsoever."

An account of Adam's hoax, which happened last month at Logitech International, the world's biggest maker of computer mice, was printed in the San Jose Mercury News' Sunday magazine, West.

Adams pulled off the deception with the cooperation of Logitech co-founder and vice chairman Pierluigi Zappacosta.

Zappacosta summoned executives to a meeting with Adams, alias Ray Mebert, to draft a mission statement for Logitech's New Ventures Group. His memo touted Mebert as an expert who could help the group define its goals.

Adams is hardly anonymous. His photo appears on his best-selling books, and his Dilbert cartoons get pinned up at innumerable companies, including Logitech.

He disguised himself with a wig and fake mustache. He also arrived at Logitech's Fremont, Calif., headquarters with a photographer, videotaping crew and a writer.

He told the group his credentials included work on Procter & Gamble's "Taste Bright Project," a supposedly secret effort to boost sales by improving the taste of soap.

Executives nodded in agreement.

Mebert sneered at the New Ventures Group's existing statement. The new statement said, "The New Ventures Mission is to scout profitable growth opportunities in relationships, both internally and externally, in emerging, mission inclusive markets, and explore new paradigms and then filter and communicate and evangelize the findings."

Finally, the ersatz consultant drew a last diagram, one that he said would bring the session into focus. It was a picture of Dilbert, and Mebert then pulled off his wig, revealing Adams' thinning locks.

"It's fulfilling to me when we make enough for tuition scholarships," Scott said. "That is something I didn't get, and I like knowing I was able to help with that."

Reggie McGowan, the fraternity's adviser, said part of the goal for the fraternity was to raise money for scholarships.

McGowan said this was probably one of the largest social events of the year on campus for students of color, but he would like to get more greek organizations involved.

"We'd like all students to participate — extend the invitation to Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils," he said. "I'd like to see it get to the point that all students are comfortable participating, and I extend this invitation to everyone."

A senior administration official said Clinton spoke with Blair by telephone from Air Force One on Saturday to discuss how to maintain unity among the U.N. Security Council.

They agreed each would telephone other world leaders.

Clinton later reached France's Chirac in Vietnam by telephone. During their 30-minute conversation, White House spokesman Joe Lockhart said, Chirac "agreed with that point that the first priority is to look for a diplomatic solution. They talked a bit about ideas that will allow them to reach the first priority of getting (the arms inspectors) back in there and eliminating the weapons of mass destruction."

Student files claim against Chase Manhattan Apartments

campus editor

A summer renter of Chase Manhattan Apartments has sued the apartment complex for work he alleges was never done.

▶ What does the Collegian think? See page 4 for the editorial board's comments on Manhattan's landlords.

Tim Hanzlik, senior in construction science, filed against Chase Manhattan in small claims court alleging unlawful retainer of deposit. The case will be heard Wednesday.

Hanzlik moved into 1430 Watson Place, Apt. H-12, when classes ended in May and, with his roommate Jeremy Wasinger, senior in management, paid a deposit of $570. The three-month lease ended August 1.

"The lady who checked our apartment went through quite fast and said she was pleased with how clean it was," Hanzlik said. "She marked down a couple things for painting but said it would cost us less than $100."

In September, Hanzlik was notified by mail of two charges taken out of his deposit including $38 for cleaning carpets and $300, a flat-rate for painting the apartment.

He said the apartment had not been painted before he moved in and when he checked the apartment after being charged, he said it had not been repainted.

"There were still small nail holes that we had put for wall clocks and pictures, and we knew they had not painted it," Hanzlik said.

"In my mind, this is a true case of fraud if they are claiming they did work they never did. Somebody is making money off this," he said. "I'd like to get my money back, and I'd like to see people get what they pay for."

Hanzlik met with Shannon Glaser, manager of Chase Manhattan apartments and then decided to file in small claims court.

Glaser declined to comment on any specifics but said she explains the terms of each lease to renters before it is signed.

"When the tenant moves in, they are asked to sign a lease which holds them responsible for damage, repair and rent. No one holds a gun to their head. We are completely and totally up front with charges they might have if the apartment is not left in good condition," Glaser said. "They have to sign a lease to rent an apartment but always have the option of not renting."

Glaser said Chase Manhattan had new renters in 150 apartments this summer because a number of renters graduated.

"Anytime you have that many people leave, you're going to have a couple dissatisfied," she said. "When an apartment is moved into, it is inspected, and when the tenants leave, the condition of the apartment is compared using the same checklist.

"We look for damage, but there's a fine line," Glaser said. "We do account for normal wear and tear, but an apartment that is excessively dirty, needs painting or has holes in the wall after just a year or so is considered damage."

Glaser said she has met to resolve problems with renters and cares about student concerns.

"We do work primarily for students and to provide housing for students. They are our major support, and, of course, we want to keep them happy," she said.

Before filing in small claims court, Hanzlik said he sought advice about his options.

Lori Barteau, administrative aide with the city of Manhattan Human Resources office, said 70 percent of the average 70-120 calls the office receives each month are from student renters.

Barteau said the Human Resources office acts as a resource for landlord and tenant problems and personnel issues, and investigates civil rights concerns.

"We are here for the citizens and to help people out," Barteau said. "But we have a disclaimer on our information packet saying we do not offer legal advice."

Code violations, infestation problems and disputes with landlords are common questions Barteau said her office handles.

"Probably retainer of deposit, though, is the most frequently asked about problem," she said.

Barteau said her office makes referrals, but student renters having problems should begin documenting events. She said concerns with landlords should be addressed in written form and student renters should keep a written record of all interaction with landlords.

Politics of prejudice

Speaker addresses prejudice, racial scapegoating

SHEYENE FOSTER
staff writer

Prejudice and racial scapegoating must be fought with efforts of both minorities and whites, said activist Tim Wise. Wise spoke at the Union Little Theatre to an audience of more than 100 at 7:30 Monday night.

Wise said the politics of prejudice are still inherent in American culture. He spoke about two predominant types of discrimination: structural and indirect.

Wise defined structural prejudice as discrimination, which is a direct cause of inequalities that are still prominent within our society based on division of resources and the structure of businesses and government.

Indirect prejudices, however, are those that exist because of the way we are socialized.

"It no longer requires an overt bigot to perpetuate the problem," Wise said. "It has to do with our socialization and perceptions of others."

Indirect discrimination is based on the assumptions we have about a general group of people based on ethnicity, gender or other social divisions. This can, in turn, affect how we perceive issues, Wise said.

> "The biggest problem with race and racism is that the dialog about these isssues has been hijacked by pathological liars."
> • Tim Wise
> politicall activist

Wise said such "racialized" issues include welfare distribution, law enforcement and educational and economic opportunities.

He said the media perpetuate incorrect perceptions based on race and gender. To illustrate his point, Wise cited coverage of crime stories that tend to depict criminals as largely minorities, especially black men.

"This feeds the perception that danger has a black or brown face," Wise said.

Wise said this assumption actually puts people at a great risk in terms of personal safety. He said, in fact, only 17 percent of bodily attacks in this country are committed by a person who is a racial or ethnic minority.

In terms of welfare programs, Wise said as the programs became more accessible to racial and ethnic minorities, they immediately became less popular.

"That is the part of the politics of prejudice," Wise said, "deciding that something is bad only when it starts to benefit people of color."

Wise said neither political parties nor the majority of individuals have been informed and willing to speak out against inequalities and misconceptions. One of the real problems in fighting this discrimination is that the dialog about racial and gender inequities in biased in itself.

"The biggest problem with race and racism is that the dialog about these issues has been hijacked by pathological liars," Wise said.

Wise said to solve these problems, people of all races must be committed to the promotion of racial equality and willing to fight for justice.

"This dialog is based on myths and lies," Wise said. "And we have to be willing to stand up and say that they are myths and lies."

Wise emphasized that those not in the minority have a moral and ethical obligation to help in this cause.

"You have to tell the truth, and you have to insist on the truth over and over again, even when it hurts," Wise said.

Wise is a Nashville, Tenn.-based organizer and analyst specializing in race relations and political movements of the far right. He is the author of "Little White Lies: The Truth About Affirmative Action," "Reverse Discrimination" and "The Politics of Prejudice: Racial Scapegoating in the 1990s."

Mercury spill affects traffic

LANCE SCHOEN
staff reporter

If your path to class takes you between Seaton Hall and Seaton Court, be advised to redirect it for the next couple of days because of a mercury spill in the north alleyway between the two buildings.

The spill is being cleaned with a special vacuum that is used for occasional mercury spills in K-State laboratories. A crew from K-State's Division of Public Safety is handling the situation, officials said.

Steve Galitzer, director of environmental health and safety at K-State, said the spill poses little danger to people and precautions are being taken to ensure its containment. Pedestrian and vehicle traffic has been blocked in the area, which includes Lot A-25, for all of Tuesday until the chemical is removed.

The mercury spill was reported to Galitzer at 8 a.m. Monday, but the exact time of the contamination is not known.

The extent of the spill is also more widespread than officials first thought. The largest amounts of the mercury were found on the alley's western edge, while tiny globs of the chemical were also discovered at the alley's eastern edge, officials said.

Mercury can be a dangerous substance if long-term exposure occurs. However, because the spill happened outside it should not pose any danger, said John Lambert, director of the Division of Public Safety. If the spill occurred earlier than reported and students walked through it, there could be a small risk, he said.

The source of the spill is not yet known and the proper local, state and federal emergency management agencies have been notified, officials said.

Health Services presents budget

SARA BURDETTE
staff reporter

Lafene Health Center, University Counseling Services and members of the Student Health Advisory Committee came to the Privilege Fee Committee meeting Monday night to debate whether to increase the student health fee.

Lafene asked for a 10-percent increase in its budget, and University Counseling Services proposed a 7.5-percent increase. Now, full-time students pay $84 per semester for the entire student health fee. If the fee is increased, students would pay an additional $7.20 for Lafene and 90 cents for University Counseling Services per semester.

If Lafene receives the 10-percent increase, it would increase its reserve budget by 15 percent.

Lafene director Lannie Zweimiller said he came up with figures for the reserve increase because it is roughly equivalent to two months of operating expenses.

"If revenue stops, it would allow us to maintain and take contractual obligations for a couple of months. It's a safety net," Zweimiller said.

Lafene employs seven full-time physicians, two nurse practitioners, two full-time pharmacists and one pharmacy intern. Disabled Student Services, a federally mandated service, also has a full-time staff member, which comes out of the Lafene budget.

University Counseling Services employs 15 individuals, however, not all of its funding comes from the privilege fee. Additional money comes from state funding and grants.

If the Lafene fee is maintained at its current level, Zweimiller said it wouldn't have the budget for the full-time position at the Disabled Student Services, nor would it have the budget for computer software and hardware. In addition to budget problems, the staff of physicians would have to be reduced and Lafene would have to cut back on its hours.

SHAC chair Julie Tarara said more than 12,000 students used Lafene last year and 95 percent of K-State students have used the health center while at K-State. Based

Gunmen in Egypt spray tourist crowd with bullets

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUXOR, Egypt — Militants dressed as police sprayed gunfire on foreign tourists outside one of Egypt's most renowned temples Monday, killing 64 people. It was the worst attack in a five-year Islamic insurgency that has haunted Egypt's vital tourist industry.

Hundreds of foreigners and Egyptians dived to the ground or scrambled for shelter behind ancient pillars as the gunmen fired randomly into the crowds along a broad plaza facing the three-story Hatshepsut temple. Police said they killed all six gunmen.

"They started shooting everyone — Egyptians, foreigners, children," Ahmed Gassem, a ticket taker at the temple, said. "They were like madmen. Anyone moving, they shot."

The massacre at the 3,400-year-old temple in southern Egypt — which killed 60 tourists — is an enormous blow to Egypt's campaign to revive the tourism crucial to its economy. Some travel agencies immediately canceled tours.

The attack began about 9:30 a.m., when six gunmen dressed in black sweaters similar to the winter uniforms of Egyptian police climbed from a car and started shooting automatic rifles wildly.

Police killed one of the gunmen outside the temple after an hour-long gunbattle. The other five assailants hijacked a tour bus and then fled into nearby mountains, where police shot and killed them as well, the Interior Ministry said.

Egypt's Information Ministry said 70 people died in the shooting: 60 tourists, two police, two Egyptians and the six attackers.

As of late Monday, police had identified 24 bodies, according to the Middle East News Agency: 14 Japanese, six Swiss, three Egyptians and one German. The British Embassy said five Britons also were killed. There were also reports that French tourists were killed in the mountain shootout.

Egypt's Interior Ministry reported 24 injured. Eight of the wounded were in critical condition.

Dressed in traditional black gowns, Egyptians lined up outside Luxor's small hospital Monday afternoon waiting for news of loved ones.

The militants had been armed with six machine guns, two handguns and ammunition — all police issue. Police also recovered two bags of homemade explosives from the militants.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility, but the government blamed Islamic militants in southern Egypt who have been waging a violent campaign since 1992 to oust President Hosni Mubarak's secular government and impose strict Muslim rule.

More than 1,150 people have been killed in the insurgency, which at first focused on tourists, trains to southern Egypt's main towns and Nile River cruisers.

In the past year, however, the violence has been mostly battles between bands of militants and police. Many victims have been the militants themselves, who demand the imposition of Islamic law, including a ban on alcohol and the veiling of women. They consider it a religious duty to fight the government for not imposing the Islamic code, known as Sharia.

Mayor's daughter charged with murder in death of newborn

BROOKSVILLE, Miss. — The mayor's teen-age daughter has been charged in the killing of a newborn baby her parents never knew she was carrying.

Shantela Smith, 19, was charged with murder Friday after garbage collectors emptying a trash can found the baby girl's partially burned body.

Smith, the daughter of Mayor William Smith, delivered the baby in a toilet at her parents' home in this east central Mississippi town on Nov. 5, police said.

Police Chief Bud Permenter said garbage collectors found the body when they stopped at the Smiths' home and picked up a trash can in which leaves and other debris had been burned.

Permenter said Smith's parents didn't realize she was pregnant because she didn't show much, and she was afraid to tell them.

Smith told investigators the baby stopped moving shortly after being born, so she took off a sweatsock and tied it around the newborn's neck.

"She said she thought the baby was dead, and she wanted the baby to have something to remember her by," Permenter said. "Then she put the baby in a sack and put him in the utility room with the other trash."

Reader's Digest recalls holiday guide for possibly risky recipes

NEW YORK — Reader's Digest said Monday it is recalling 600,000 copies of a holiday guide because recipes for flavored oils fail to mention they should be refrigerated to guard against botulism.

While no illnesses have been reported, Reader's Digest Association Inc. said it would immediately pull 450,000 copies of Reader's Digest Christmas from newsstands nationwide.

Recipes for herb, Thai, spiced orange and Indian spiced oils did not mention the need for refrigeration. The Food and Drug Administration says homemade mixtures of garlic or herbs in oil should be kept cold to avoid the risk of botulism, an often-fatal form of food poisoning, Reader's Digest said.

The FDA also recommends the oils not be stored for long periods, the company said.

Reader's Digest also said a few thousand copies of "Sensational Preserves," a book published last year in which the four recipes first appeared, can be returned to dealers for refunds.

Space station commanders named

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Americans and Russians will take turns commanding the future international space station, at least for the first four missions.

After months of debate about who should be in charge aboard the space station — an American or a Russian — NASA and the Russian Space Agency on Monday announced the lineup for the first four crews.

The space station is to be assembled in orbit beginning next summer and will take five years to build.

Its first crew, led by U.S. astronaut William Shepherd, was named early last year. He and two Russians are supposed to be launched on a Soyuz rocket from Kazakstan in early 1999.

They will be relieved in summer 1999 by Russian commander Yuri Usachev and NASA astronauts James Voss and Susan Helms, who will fly up on a space shuttle.

Driver uses police to kill himself

SYOSSET, N.Y. — A teen-ager who was shot to death by police after he waved a toy gun at officers left a note saying he wanted to die and was sorry he had forced them to kill him.

The letter, addressed "To the officer who shot me," was left Friday night by Moshe Pergament, 19. He apparently was despondent about World Series betting losses that police estimated at $6,000.

Pergament was stopped for speeding on the Long Island Expressway. His death at the hands of two Nassau County police officers was called a classic case of suicide-by-cop by Detective Lt. Kevin Caslin.

Nine other notes addressed to family members and friends were found in his car.

Wichita teens found dead in car

WICHITA — Two teen-agers were found dead in a car parked in a garage, apparent victims of carbon monoxide poisoning, police said.

The bodies of a 17-year-old boy and a girl, who was either 14 or 15, were found Sunday morning by the boy's brother, Lt. Ken Landwehr said Monday.

The boy was identified as Javier Trevizo-Estrada. Police had not identified the girl by Monday morning.

"Most likely it's an accident," Landwehr said.

Trevizo-Estrada had borrowed his brother's car and was supposed to return it by Sunday morning. He and the girl were last seen at 11 Saturday night at a party.

Clinton praises Cessna company hires in Wichita, encourages more

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA, — From behind red-and-blue safety glasses, President Clinton marveled Monday as former welfare recipients made airplane parts in a hiring and training program that 2,500 companies have pledged to copy.

"When we get 10,000, we'll really be talking turkey," Clinton told workers at the Cessna Aircraft Co. job center. He also announced new regulations giving state and local officials greater flexibility in using federal money to put welfare recipients to work.

"The best social program ever provided is a job," the president said.

His comments came on the final day of a four-day tour dominated by Democratic Party fund raising and distractions over the standoff with Iraq. From Wichita, Clinton was going to St. Louis for a $400,000 reception and dinner benefiting Missouri's Jay Nixon and other Senate candidates.

Meanwhile, White House officials released new data showing that welfare caseloads dropped by 236,000 in July, the most recent month for which statistics are available, and by nearly 2 million in the 11 months since Clinton signed welfare overhaul legislation.

At Cessna, some 250 people leaving government assistance have already been trained at company expense and put to work at an average wage of $12 an hour.

Since the Clinton administration and the corporate community launched their "Welfare to Work Partnership" in May, more than 2,500 companies have pledged to similarly hire and train workers off the welfare rolls.

That figure, which tops the partnership's original goal of 1,000 businesses, includes 24 of America's 100 biggest companies in what Clinton said has to be an American crusade.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce also announced that its 3,000 local chapters will urge corporate members to hire people on welfare.

After the 1996 welfare overhaul limited the time families can spend on public assistance, Clinton pushed the private sector to pitch in — with some state and federal dollars — and help give welfare recipients the skills needed for landing jobs once their welfare checks stop.

"We changed the role of government, but that's only the first step. We also have to change the role of the private sector," he said Monday.

In St. Louis, the president had his eye on the 1998 congressional races and their prospects for cutting the Republicans' 55-45 majority in the Senate. The dinner's expected $400,000 pot would be split between Nixon's campaign and the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee.

Nixon, Missouri's attorney general, wants the seat occupied by Sen. Christopher S. Bond — one of five Senate Republicans whom Democrats are focusing on as extremely vulnerable.

The fund-raiser was to be Clinton's sixth in four days. The Democratic National Committee has been relying heavily on the president to be the star attraction at lunches, dinners and receptions with donors to help erase a $14.2-enrollment

Spring scheduling causes closed-class troubles

JULIE LINDAMOOD
staff reporter

Good things come to those who wait.

Even if that means waiting in line to enroll, only to be added to a waiting list for a much needed class.

"The classes I had the most problem getting into were my core business classes," Arika Taylor, sophomore in accounting, said.

When Taylor enrolled, she couldn't get into the classes she needed to take in order to move further in her major. Taylor said part of the problem is the department offers enough sections for some classes, but it doesn't plan for the same number of people to take the next class in the sequence the following semester.

"I don't understand how there can be nine sections of a class this semester and then when all of the students in those sections try to enroll for the next class they need, the department only offers six sections," Taylor said. "Obviously we aren't all going to be able to take the class."

Taylor said some faculty members advised her to pick up classes she needs but can't get into on campus at area community colleges, Fort Riley or night classes.

Students like Stephanie Settle, sophomore in secondary education, said they think they should be able to take the classes they need at K-State.

"I'm going to K-State for a reason," Settle said. "I want to take classes here, not go to Fort Riley because they can't fit me in here."

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said enrollment during the spring is more difficult because enrollment can't be predicted as easily.

"Admittedly, we do a far better job for fall enrollment than we do for spring because we can predict fairly accurately the needs of incoming freshmen," Bosco said. "But it's extremely difficult for spring enrollment when you have no way of knowing who's ready to take what in a grand scale."

Bosco said he, along with advisers, try to balance the projected need for classes with available resources including college and departmental objectives, faculty workload and availability of additional resources to hire part-time instructors. However, Bosco said the hiring freeze by K-State Provost James Coffman will not effect classes for the spring 1998 semester.

"The freeze was very limited by Provost Coffman and was to affect next year's classes, not this spring," Bosco said.

Bosco said some students may not get the time or the instructor they want, but many faculty members are willing to work with students. Taylor said she went to her adviser and her dean, and they were more than willing to help her.

"I think the key is to not be afraid to go talk to your adviser or your dean because they're more than willing to help you out," Taylor said.

RCPD awaits test results on Woodyard

MATT KREPS
staff writer

The Riley County Police Department is waiting for results from a Pawnee Mental Health evaluation before taking disciplinary action against its second in command.

Bob Woodyard will begin a series of evaluations today to determine if he has a drinking problem, Alvan Johnson, RCPD director, said.

Woodyard was arrested earlier this month for driving under the influence after causing a two-car accident.

Johnson said the courts would handle formal punishment.

"Whatever they decide to do, that will address his behavior or actions as it relates to the law," he said.

Johnson will decide what level of departmental punishment Woodyard will face after the investigation is complete.

He said the RCPD does not have a code specifically addressing Woodyard's action.

"The policies we have address behavior and that sort of thing," Johnson said. "They're not so specific that they address each type of possibility."

However, he did say departmental policies hold officers to a higher standard.

Johnson said Woodyard's departmental discipline would be serious. He said a significant suspension would be the minimum action.

Woodyard is continuing to perform his administrative duties while awaiting the outcome of the investigation.

His record was spotless until this incident, the director said.

"He has an absolutely unblemished record in the 30 years and six months he's been here," Johnson said.

Woodyard is a K-State graduate who joined the RCPD after serving four years in the Air Force. He worked his way up to assistant director.

"He's held about every position if not every position in the department," Johnson said.

Student tenants should educate themselves about their rights

There's a problem in Manhattan.

Student renters make easy targets for unscrupulous landlords. Why?

Some students are not aware of their rights as tenants and are sometimes taken advantage of by their landlords.

With a constantly changing, transient college population, knowledge of tenant and landlord rights is essential for survival. There are resources tenants can use to educate themselves of their rights.

The Office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs in the Office of Student Activities and Services on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union can inform student tenants of their rights.

The Tenant/Landlord Act outlines the rights and responsibilities of both renters and landlords. Code violations, infestation problems and the unlawful retainer of deposit can be solved when addressed properly.

If landlord problems persist, students can go to Legal Services for Students, also in the OSAS, for legal assistance.

In addition to the Consumer and Tenant Affairs office on campus, there are city offices that act as an information and educational base.

Renters who have concerns with landlords are advised to address their concerns in writing. Any ongoing or potential problem should also be documented.

Students can do this by keeping a written log of interaction with the landlord as well as any continuing problems as they occur.

Before signing a lease, check up on your landlord and do some investigating. Find out if they've had renter problems in the past or talk to someone who has rented from them before.

Preparation and organization are both important in protecting yourself from unfair or unlawful actions against you as a tenant.

Students should not allow themselves to be victimized. If they have landlord problems, they should educate themselves on what steps can be taken to resolve the situation.

Homeless

Living on street helps put things in perspective

They said I was crazy.

As I left home last Monday, people were telling me I was crazy.

"That's insane," they would say, or "Kurche, you're being foolish." My mother thought I was being ridiculous, but with the holiday season approaching, I felt I needed to experience being homeless for a few days before I could understand what I should be thankful for. I felt others needed to know what it was like, also.

So, packing several pairs of jeans, my textbooks, a cotton blanket and a few toiletries into a bag, I hit the road. I took no money, no sleeping bag and no tent. I didn't really have a plan — most of that I made up as I went along. Here's what I came up with:

I would tell people I was a student who didn't know many people on campus. I would tell them I was having trouble holding down a job and making my grades, so the job had to go. I would tell them I was consistently late in my rent, so my roommates decided I couldn't stay any longer. Out I went, into the cold — that simple.

Many people I met on campus offered to give me a place to stay for the evening. I found the compassion to be admirable. I couldn't accept, though, so I was warned about the dangers of being outside at night in Manhattan.

Other people stared at me as I passed, or crossed to the other side of the street or diverted their eyes. The only thing outwardly different about me was my clothing and my bag.

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian

Inside was another story.

The first night was the worst. I had known I was going to be living as a homeless person several weeks earlier, so I had made certain to pick up plenty of wool sweaters beforehand. I washed up at a gas station, which was somewhat embarrassing, since I had no money, and I was the only one in the store at the time.

I was hungry. I was cold. I was alone and confused. I found myself starting to fit too neatly into character.

I started to get depressed.

I chose a spot in City Park in a shallow ditch to protect me from the cold. The radio announcer for KMKF-FM 101.5 had said the low that evening would be 20 degrees. I found out in the morning it had actually been 16. The ground robbed me of my body heat as a spider would suck the guts of flies. Paranoia set in — had I chosen a good enough site? Would I be caught by the police? All was quiet, and I was very much alone.

And cold. So incredibly cold.

I slept for about three hours, tossing and turning, and I finally decided to abandon my possessions in the park in favor of warmer conditions. My hands were numb, my feet were numb and my body was numb enough to cause me discomfort. I thought about what it must be like to have children in these conditions, like so many of the homeless in Manhattan, and I'm not certain a little child could survive for long outside during the winter.

I had to get my blood flowing, and I found myself walking toward the 24-hour study center at Hale Library. Knowing I was beaten by the elements, I entered.

I picked up a copy of the Collegian and began to read it, pretending I belonged in the facility, while I was really worried about getting kicked out. I passed out from exhaustion in a chair by the Surge machine.

I knew I was beginning to get an accurate feel for my situation when I returned to my place in the park the next morning. Several cars had appeared in the parking lot, and immediately I became concerned. What if they had discovered my campsite? What if they had chosen to take my stuff? All of the items my survival depended on were in that park.

Luckily, my concern was unfounded. My campsite was exactly as I had left it. Nonetheless, the worry was there, and at the time, it seemed perfectly valid.

That wasn't the only sobering experience I had. Later that day I saw a sign on a local business asking for employees. I decided to try to fill out an application without a home address or phone number, just to see what would happen. As I sat down to complete the form, though, I realized that there was plenty working against me. How was I supposed to have references when I had nobody to stay with? How was I supposed to find the exact names of past managers and the addresses of past jobs? And what about not having a home address or phone number?

I was humiliated, and I salute the employees of the store I applied to for having enough patience to try to work something out. I was unsettled, and I can see why someone who actually was homeless would be reluctant to apply for a job.

It was a lesson in humility.

My greatest experience, though, was at the Manhattan Emergency Shelter. This was where I spent my next evening.

VIEWPOINT

JON KURCHE

JON KURCHE is a freshman in physics. You can send e-mail to Jon at jk6609@ksu.edu

Here, I learned there are no victims. Everyone in the emergency shelter was a person or family who had fallen slightly short of their goals and needed a hand getting back on their feet again. The shelter requires residents to try to find jobs, bathe, care for their children, attend classes for self-improvement — anything that might help them improve. There was absolutely no reason I should think the residents were any different from me, despite my ingrained middle-class mentality.

In the end, the only reason it was me visiting the shelter instead of being visited at the shelter was because I was fortunate enough to be holding a silver spoon at birth.

Many are not that fortunate. Many who are born into poverty stay there, and the "Alex P. Keaton" Kansas Legislature, cutting benefits and killing welfare, doesn't help.

The only real difference is money. Remember that during the holidays.

Presidential tapes should help keep them accountable

VIEWPOINT

JONATHAN WINKLER

JONATHAN WINKLER is a senior in physics. You can send e-mail to Jonathan at jnw@ksu.edu.

With the publication of a complete, unexpurgated transcript of President Nixon's office tapings, it is now time to think about the role of official documentation in verifying the truthfulness and good faith of those placed highly in the government.

These tapes show Nixon at his much-feared worst, authorizing cover-ups of cover-ups, selling ambassadorships, setting aside a slush fund for private and illegal projects, ordering break-ins, and dozens of other crimes for which he would have been criminally prosecuted, and convicted, if these tapes had come to light and he were not covered by a presidential pardon.

But was Nixon really unique? It can be argued he was perhaps one of the most honest presidents of his time. Because his taping system was voice activated, the Nixon tapes furnish a complete history of his work while in the Oval Office. Other presidents, including Eisenhower and Kennedy, had their own taping systems, but these were not voice activated.

Transcripts of tapes Kennedy made during the Cuban missile crisis have been available to historians for years, and a description of how he made decisions during that time has already been published. But because Kennedy himself had to turn on the taping system for the crisis meetings in his office to be recorded for posterity, we have no guarantee he did not record only the meetings that went well.

In fact, most analyses of the transcripts show he talked very little, but decisively, as one would if one were avoiding embarrassing oneself for posterity.

Fast-forward to the present, when nobody believes in political morality anymore. A taping system of the type Nixon had would be simply unthinkable if there were any prospect of the tapes eventually being made public, and used to prosecute or even convict the president. That would make all sorts of cover-ups impossible to do.

But if presidents were taped by a voice-activated system, with or without his consent, by an independent agency of the federal government — insulated from congressional and executive pressures in the same way the Federal Reserve Board is — and they were guaranteed the tapes could never be admitted into court as evidence of wrongdoing, then taping everything that goes on in the Oval Office would in itself guarantee good government.

Most recent presidents have preferred to go down in history as great leaders rather than dutiful servants of the American people. If presidents were threatened by publication of their official deeds 30 years later by a Board of Executive Taping, then they would naturally tend to do (or at least try to do) leader-like things that would preserve their historical reputations. They would behave presidentially, in contrast to the criminal acts Nixon gleefully committed while secure in the belief his tapes would be kept from the public. Or in contrast to the criminal acts suspected of the current president, which probably won't be proved because the particulars are in people's memories rather than on paper and electronic media.

It is impossible now to keep presidents accountable to people living in the present. Our only hope is to appeal to their vanity and keep them accountable to people living in the future.

Commerce Bank needs competition to reduce fees

Editor,

Recently Commerce Bank has convinced the Union Governing Board to help it implement a 75-cent charge for non-customers at its K-State Student Union branch. This is just the latest in what has become a string of measures by the bank to take advantage of its biggest customers — K-State students.

Commerce has heavily advertised its new Wildcat Card account as being an efficient means of banking. As many students have already found out, it's not. In fact, Commerce's student account ranks among the most expensive in Manhattan. No other bank charges its customers 75 cents to use a bank-owned ATM.

The Union has given Commerce a great opportunity to gain a host of long-term customers. It has chosen to make as much money as it can now, rather than reap the benefits of long-time customer loyalty. If Commerce feels it needs to pay for its new Union branch in its first year, I think we should ask it to leave after its first year.

I urge students, faculty and UGB to allow another bank to do business in the Union. Inviting competition will benefit the university. In the meantime, let's take our banking business to a local bank where excellent customer service is still a priority, not an afterthought for profit.

Plus-grading system a plus

Editor,

I support the plus-grading system that's being considered by students. The current system, while accurate, does have some problems.

The main problem is that it doesn't distinguish well enough between average and good students. A student receiving an 89 percent in the same class as a student who only earns an 80 percent still gets only a B. If students are that close to receiving the next-highest grade, they deserve that higher grade.

This would give teachers the chance to distinguish among average, good and great students. I urge students to vote for the plus system today.

Kansas Legislature to meet to discuss student funding

Editor,

Once again the end of the fall semester brings many exciting events into focus in Manhattan. One matter that is often overlooked is the need for student activism.

In January, the Kansas Legislature will begin meeting and determining how much money K-State students and students at other Kansas Board of Regents institutions will receive through financial aid. This includes need-based aid like the Regents Supplemental Grant. Very few K-Staters will find it easy to acquire the funds to pay for next semester's tuition, books, personal expenses, and room and board. Thousands of K-Staters will make large sacrifices and pile up tremendous debts while pursuing their education.

The board of regents has requested an additional $500,000 be allocated by the Legislature to be used to assist needy students through the Regents Supplemental Grant program. This could translate into substantial financial aid for K-State students who need it most.

In order to see this need fulfilled, we need to organize a group of concerned students who may or may not be in need of financial aid, and let the legislators in Topeka know the importance of this issue.

Your involvement in this process can be as extensive or limited as you wish, but your participation is extremely important.

If you would like to learn more, please call me at 532-6541 or 537-0491.

STRECKER GALLERY
Artist finds architecture in Europe

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Overland Park, Kan., artist Dean Mitchell has never been attracted to well-known subjects in his architectural paintings.

In his watercolors of old homes or his oils of Kansas City's Quality Hill district, it was always an alleyway, front porch or eve that caught his eye. He's never painted, at least for a local show, the popular Kansas City of the Country Club Plaza or Union Station.

So when his new show of European images, all watercolors, opened Friday at the Strecker Gallery, one didn't go expecting Big Ben, the Eiffel Tower or the Piazza San Marco. Since he spent his time in Europe in London, Paris, Madrid and Barcelona, he never forged into Italy, where the images of the classic Grand Tour paintings are most rooted.

Instead, the 10 or so paintings Mitchell did show were quietly observed architectural scenes — fragments of landmarks instead of the whole shebang. Mitchell said he intentionally painted the details of landmark buildings to create a feeling of mystery.

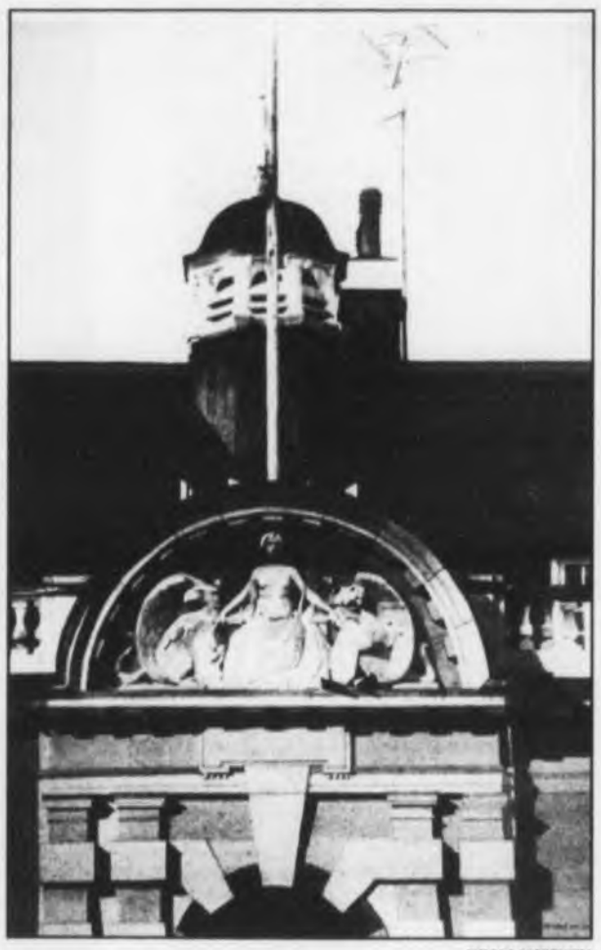
"I'm less likely to give you your typical scene," Mitchell said. "I give you a hint of what it is. It's more intriguing. You start to pay attention to the architectural details."

It's obvious Mitchell has been paying attention. The work "Near the Louvre" contains the artist's usual muted palette, eye-popping precision and marvelous hierarchy of architectural forms. The near-symmetrical painting is a rooftop with an arch-enclosed frieze and balustrade culminating in a lantern.

The images are unmistakably European in their nearly exclusive celebration of Neoclassical and Gothic architecture. Mitchell has always been nostalgic — just see one of his early house paintings that seem to take on a dowdy life of their own. His work has no fascination with Europe's rich legacy of modernism. But would Mitchell's strict attention to detail work with such a subtly detailed architecture?

Mitchell observations are usually devoid of people. "Morning in Paris" suggests the passage of time. Two dark, neoclassical buildings in the foreground frame a light-flooded counterpart. A painting of an archway in Barcelona subtly mixes in red and blue in a few elements, enlivening a locale devoid of people.

For me, Mitchell's European work, while definitely keeping in line with his earlier work, sometimes misses the point. Europe is flush with converging cultures and centuries, and its architecture reflects this. The 18th-century Italian painter Antonio Canaletto captured this sense of historical clutter in his wonderful views of Venice. The Impressionists added the nonsensical world of modern people to similar scenes.



Instead, Mitchell is much more bent on illustrating his technical mastery of watercolors, which by now is more than evident, on building forms. Perhaps now the question to apply to these architectural scenes is, why should we care? Unlike his portraiture or social scenes, his architectural paintings don't entice or elicit too much comment other than the qualified "wow" from frothy patrons.

Mitchell said he had time in Europe to visit the great museums: the Louvre, Madrid's Prado, Great Britain's National and Tate Galleries, and the Musee D'Orsay in Paris. It's exciting to think what he will do with his study of the masters. He did let slip he was working on a Madonna and child. But will it be conventionally so? He's even allowed some Impressionism to influence his usually precise work. "Ozark Riverways," an oil on canvas, attests to a willingness for experimentation out of his usual ouvre.

In the past couple of years, Mitchell's work has become increasingly in demand across the country, with prices in the five figures to prove it. Even the artist admits to being spread a bit too thin, which explains why so few paintings are in the Strecker show. So, there's the possibility Manhattan will never see a finished Mitchell Madonna.

It's been more than a year since Mitchell's small, yet celebrated retrospective at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. And it's clear from the crowd at Friday's opening that his art is still very much in local demand and favor. What remains questionable is the point in the continuance of Mitchell's love of architectural painting.

See it for yourself.
The European images of Dean Mitchell will be at the Strecker Gallery until Dec. 24. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday. Admission is free.

Stereolab, Mouse On Mars fill Bottleneck with sound

PHIL KELLUM
staff writer

Stereolab and Mouse On Mars provided one of the more interesting shows I've seen in a while on a Saturday night.

Last time Stereolab came through Lawrence, they played the Granada, instead of the smaller, more intimate setting of the Bottleneck.

The stage was filled with loads of old gear, like analog synthesizers and vintage amps and guitars. The wall behind the stage was covered with around 50 small, chrome globes to reflect lights.

Plush opened. They were really boring.

The music was slow, dreamy, indie-pop stuff that was more background music than anything else. I wasn't impressed, but I was glad its set was only 20 minutes long. If it were any longer, I would have been forced to kill.

Mouse On Mars was second on the bill. They blew me away.

Its "stage set" consisted of a table loaded full of bizarre electronics. There were patched cords strewn about all over the place and knobs galore.

The German duo of Jan St. Werner and Andi Toma walked out onstage, and Toma took the mic and said in a thick German accent, "Hello. Mouse On Mars will start now. I hope you like electronic music."

Toma and St. Werner twiddled knobs and pushed buttons to create a cool mix of ambient stuff to some banging techno.

The beats they were creating onstage rumbled the floor and shook my guts. They were mixed with interesting textures of bubbly sounds and unintelligible samples.

The first song, if you could call it that, was about 30-minutes long.

I don't know what it was called. They didn't give the song titles. It could just have been a mix that they only do live.

In the 50-minute set, Toma and St. Werner played three songs. I really enjoyed it. It was a nice way to get ready for Stereolab.

Stereolab hit the stage at around 11:05 p.m. and played for a couple minutes, just jamming and making noise for five minutes. Then they turned to face the crowd.

Vocalist Mary Hansen greeted the crowd and said they had been shopping in Lawrence earlier in the day.

"The antique mall is just superb," she said.

Then they started playing, and it was glorious.

Stereolab knows how to create a great pop song and then mix it up with electronics and live instruments.

Its second song was "Miss Modular" from the new "Dots And Loops" album.

Vocalist Lactitia Sadier's vocals sounded just like they do on record. The harmonies between her and Hansen sounded oh so sweet.

I thought Oasis didn't move around much on stage, but Stereolab moved around less than Oasis does. Virtually none.

I especially liked when a drum machine beat was mixed with Andy Ramsey's live drums.

Stereolab's set got louder as it went on it seemed. At times, they sounded a bit like Chicago's Tortoise, with its extended noise jams and rhythms. It makes sense because its new record was produced by Tortoise's John McIntire.

Tim Gane's guitar had some cool effects added to it, with a flanger pedal and all kinds of other bizarre effects.

I was really impressed with the shift from more droning, dreamy-sounding songs to faster, more driving songs.

The last song of its regular set was almost punkish with its fast and loud beats and rhythms.

At the end, Sadier flashed the metal sign and left the stage after an hour-long set.

Gane came out onstage first for the encore and then was joined by the rest of the band.

Hansen said, "Thanks for wanting more."

The last encore song was really good. About five minutes in, the band started this really cool noise, freak-out jam that lasted for 10 minutes with all sorts of feedback and sheer noise. Then the band went straight back into the song where it had left off. Very impressive.

All in all, it was a good show. I'm glad I went. Definitely check out Stereolab next time it rolls through town.

SHOOTING BLANKS

BRANDON WHITE/Collegian

K-STATE'S ANGIE FINKES PUTS a shot up over Athletes in Action's Cathy Marx on Monday night at Bramlage Coliseum. K-State lost the exhibition game 70-49.

Freshman refuses to let injury slow her down on court

SUN DEE MILLS
sports editor

Usually, anterior cruciate ligament surgery takes some recovery time. But freshman point guard Kim Woodlee runs, slashes, fakes, guards and shoots three-pointers as if the knife never touched her knee.

Woodlee had a scope five weeks ago to remove parts of a torn right meniscus in her knee. She had complete reconstructive surgery on the meniscus in high school, and the last scope removed what was left from the first surgery. Having to sit out of preseason practice with her new team was hard for Woodlee, but she quickly saw the light at the end of the tunnel.

"I missed the whole first week of practice," Woodlee said. "I started working my way in gradually. I was actually only out for 10 days, but it had been predicted that I'd be out for three weeks, so I was glad to recover so quickly."

The Victoria All-Stars, the Cats' first exhibition game, gave Woodlee the first-game jitters and found her a little off.

"I think the other night I hesitated more," Woodlee said. "Tonight, I knew if I was open, I should shoot."

Against Athletes in Action, Woodlee's jitters disappeared as her stroke was on the mark from behind the three-point line. Woodlee put five-of-five in the basket from the line, and was the Cats' leading scorer with 17 points. She also had no turnovers in the game.

"I stopped hesitating and just shot," Woodlee said. "I started looking for shots. Sometimes it goes down easier, and sometimes you can't make anything. Tonight it was easier."

Woodlee ran the point for 37 minutes and 32 seconds. Her freshman point guard opponent, Dee DeShay, saw only 4:57 on the floor. Part of that time, DeShay played at off-guard. Woodlee said she was more disappointed in the team's performance than tired from her high number of minutes.

"We're in this far enough to be too conditioned to be tired," Woodlee said. "I've just got a lot on my mind right now, trying to figure out what we have to do to win."

Originally from Beersheba Springs, Tenn., Woodlee watched Southeastern Conference women's basketball powerhouses such as Tennessee, Alabama and Vanderbilt while she was growing up. Some of those teams watched her at Grundy County High School as an off-guard, but she had one thing on her mind, head coach Deb Patterson and associate head coach Kamie Ethridge.

"I started watching Vanderbilt when I was in elementary school," Woodlee said. I went to camps in high school, and I knew I liked what they did. When they moved, I kind of went with them."

Watching Patterson's success at Vanderbilt convinced Woodlee that no matter where Patterson went, the program would be successful.

"I have the most faith in them as coaches," Woodlee said. "They have the same goals that I have, and I know they can make me the best player I can be."

Originally concerned about the crucial point guard position being split by two true freshmen, Patterson said she's pleased about how Woodlee looks at this point in the season.

"I think Kim has really stepped it up in these two exhibition games and asserted herself," Patterson said. "She worked very hard tonight to keep us in sync on the offensive end of the floor, and we really needed those threes she hit."

Patterson said Woodlee's play has progressed rapidly in the past three weeks. She expects Woodlee to meet future challenges in the Big 12 head-on.

"Kim does have a large number of challenges ahead of her," Patterson said.

"She's always going to have a different defender on her, and it'll be interesting to see how she handles that in the upcoming weeks."

Woodlee said she'd like to see her defensive efforts improve as well.

"Sometimes I feel better about my defense than others," Woodlee said.

"I've got to pick it up, and I've got to get faster. I need to be 100 percent better to put the pressure on them that they put on me."

But barring the injury, Woodlee said it should be no problem.

"I'm a little sore, but I've been sore since I hurt it the first time," Woodlee said. "At first it bothered me, but the doctors say I'm healed. And they definitely know more than I do."

Shooting woes plague Cats in loss

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

K-State's women's basketball team's exhibition finale against Athletes in Action was more like a baseball game. There were plenty of runs Monday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State lost its second consecutive exhibition game, falling to AIA 70-49 in front of 536 fans at Bramlage.

"We didn't play well on either end of the floor," center Angie Finkes said.

AIA has lost only two of 14 games it has played against college teams, losing only to Marquette and defending Big 12 Tournament champion Colorado.

The Wildcats jumped on AIA early, taking an 8-2 lead on the second of guard Kim Woodlee's five three-point field goals, but AIA scored eight straight points to lead 10-8.

K-State jumped ahead again on another Woodlee triple and four free throws to take a 15-10 lead. Athletes in Action went on a 14-6 run to end the first half and went to the locker room at halftime with a two-point lead at 28-26.

Brit Jacobson began the second half with a 15-footer to tie the game, but that was the last time the score would be even.

Athletes in Action outscored the Cats 19-7 in the next 5 1/2 minutes to take a 47-35 lead. But K-State stormed back. The Cats scored the next nine points on another Woodlee three-pointer and field goals by forward Brandy Harris, Finkes and Woodlee to come within three of the lead.

But that was as close as the Cats would get the rest of the night. AIA answered with a 13-0 run of their own, holding K-State without a point for more than five minutes, and ended the game outscoring K-State 23-5 in the last 10 minutes.

Coach Deb Patterson wants the team to play for the whole game like it did during its scoring runs.

"I think I saw 10 to 12 minutes of good basketball from us in both of these (exhibition) games," she said. "Now we have got to take the next step and put together 40 minutes of quality basketball."

Finkes said she agreed the intensity was not there.

"I didn't think anybody kept up with great intensity tonight," she said. "That's definitely what we need to work on."

The Wildcats shot 28 percent from the field for the game, while the visitors shot nearly 50 percent. K-State was nearly equal to AIA on the glass, with 39 rebounds to AIA's 40.

Patterson said she was concerned about the team's shooting.

"I don't like the shots we're getting. I don't like who's getting shots," she said.

"I feel like we're playing very young and tentative on the offensive end of the floor."

K-State was dominated inside, with AIA center Barb Franke, a 1996 Wisconsin graduate, tallying 22 points on 10-of-14 shooting. K-State was outscored 28-12 in the paint, and Franke taught K-State a lesson in post play.

"We talked about this as a staff before this game that Barb Franke's going to teach these kids some lessons, and indeed she did," Patterson said. "She just plays such a heady, strong game."

Woodlee was the star of the night for the Cats. She played more than 37 of 40 minutes and made six of seven field goals, including five-for-five from outside the three-point arc. Four of those five three-pointers were in the first 10 minutes of the game. Her 17 points were tops on the team. Finkes and Jacobson followed with 10 and eight, respectively.

Patterson said she wanted to establish a starting lineup for Friday night's season-opener against Illinois State, but after tonight's performance she said she has not made up her mind.

"I wanted to establish a starting lineup that could gain confidence and play some consistent basketball," Patterson said.

"We still have a lot of question marks in regards to combinations on the floor."

Cats make mark as conference's 2nd best team

It's Tuesday, and the goal post from the north side of Wagner Field is still roaming somewhere around Aggieville.

K-State beat Colorado for the first time in 13 years. K-State beat Colorado bad. Real bad. Thirteen years of aggression and hatred were unleashed on a team that was as intimidating as Bambi.

Is it just me, or is K-State the only school in the nation that uses its JumboTron to talk trash to its opponents during pregame warm-ups?

Effective technique.

Big 12 competition sometimes brings out the best in the best teams. For three quarters, the Wildcats dominated the Buffaloes.

Colorado, once a big dog of the Big 12 Conference, a team that 11 of the Big 12 teams feared, looked like Bowling Green for three quarters.

Even in the fourth quarter, when John Hessler threw two touchdowns — equaling the number of passing touchdowns the Wildcats had allowed all season — the game had already been long decided.

Coach Bill Snyder's response when asked how he would celebrate after the 37-20 victory: "I don't celebrate."

K-State is the second-best team in the Big 12.

K-State is one of the top seven teams in the nation.

K-State President Jon Wefald stood on the sideline in front of a television camera and told the nation about the significance of K-State's feat. Athletic Director Max Urick stood 20 feet from the goal post and looked, well, like a worried athletic director who would have to replace another goal post.

VIEWPOINT

D. SCOTT FRITCHEN

D. SCOTT FRITCHEN is a senior in mass communications. You can send your e-mail to Scott at dsf7477@ksu.edu.

Bundled-up K-State students, tailgaters since daybreak and ice cubes since game time, thawed out from a final sip of schnapps and a shot of adrenaline. The clock expired, and students stormed Wagner Field.

Forget the team records. This was Colorado.

And seconds later, an upright nearly smacked Wefald in the head.

Wefald smiled to the camera and justified that the game was a "monumental milestone" for K-State football. Bill Snyder said he didn't blame the students for celebrating. Snyder offered to pay for the party. But the seated alumni booed, and the students did not care.

Florida State tears up opponents' turf when it wins. K-State tears down its own goal post.

And the football players were mobbed by adoring fans. The seniors embraced the post-game ceremony one last time and stepped over the fallen goal post on their way to the locker room.

The goal post is the students' traveling trophy. For the first time in two years, K-State students paraded down Moro Street with the sacred artifact, which days later might be cut into pieces and shared with every bar.

The last time a goal post came down? Oct. 28, 1995. Kansas.

And perhaps the biggest question asked Saturday night, besides whether to go to Lucky BrewGrille or Rock-A-Belly Deli, was whether to make hotel reservations in Tempe, Ariz., or Dallas for New Year's Day.

Saturday's crowd of 43,981 was the third-largest in KSU Stadium history. K-State's actual seating capacity is 42,000. The lawn chairs behind the end zone looked cute five years ago, but now?

Five consecutive nine-win seasons and K-State, the second-best team in the Big 12, still has the conference's lowest seating capacity.

Advertisements blared through the JumboTron, encouraging students to vote for the stadium expansion.

Five bucks can get a K-State student two cups of beer at a house keg party. Why not pay five extra bucks a game to be included in the biggest college football party in Kansas?

K-State is 42-5-1 in Manhattan. They will not lose any time soon.

Heck, Snyder said he had the best fans in the nation. Last season's Cotton Bowl proved K-State has the biggest party-goers.

Dallas bar owners' mental note after the purple flood last year: Buy more Bud Light.

The Fiesta Bowl and Cotton Bowl representatives' mental note Saturday night: Buy Crisco for goal posts.

If, for some reason, the vote does not support Urick's proposal to include more guests in the Purple Party, K-State might be in big trouble next season with seating capacity. People across Kansas want to watch Wildcat football.

Mark your calendars: Nov. 14, 1998. Nebraska.

In that case, I suggest an approach for Wagner Field that most Aggieville bars adopt in solving the over-crowding fiasco.

The same approach that kept many bar-goers standing out in the cold Saturday night could also be used during K-State games next season when the Wildcats' popularity really explodes.

One in, one out.

Belcher picked as Royals' pitcher of the year

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Tim Belcher was picked as the Royals' pitcher of the year on Monday by the Kansas City Chapter of the Baseball Writers Association of America.

It was the second year in a row that Belcher won the award, which he will receive at an awards dinner on Jan. 31.

Belcher led the Royals' pitching staff this year with a record of 13-12 and a 5.02 ERA in 32 starts.

He has posted 28 victories in his two seasons with Kansas City.

Among the season highlights were back-to-back complete game wins at Oakland on April 27 and against New York on May 3. He pitched seven shutout innings at Detroit on May 8, and pitched a complete game May 13 in a 9-0 shutout of Boston.

Lemieux says he doesn't miss hockey at all

TORONTO — Mario Lemieux, who was inducted into the Hockey Hall of Fame on Monday night, has ended any hope he might lace on the skates for Canada at the Winter Olympics in Japan in February.

"I will not play in the Olympics," Lemieux said before an induction ceremony for himself, Bryan Trottier and Glen Sather.

"It would be very difficult for me to attempt to come back and get back in world-class shape, and I don't think it would be fair to the rest of the players who are trying to play the whole year to get a spot at the Olympics.

"I'm retired, and I'm going to stay retired."

At 32, the six-time NHL scoring champion who helped the Pittsburgh Penguins win the Stanley Cup in 1991 and 1992, has no regrets about his decision last spring to walk away from hockey.

"I don't miss the game at all," said Lemieux, one of the few players to be inducted into the Hall of Fame without the usual three-year waiting period. "I've watched a few games (on TV) and just the way the game is being played right now is not much fun for the players and not much fun for me to watch."

Ravens running back charged with assault

OWINGS MILLS, Md. — Baltimore Ravens running back, Bam Morris, was charged Monday with choking a woman at a birthday party, adding to his list of legal troubles.

The assault charge could be used to bolster Texas prosecutors' attempts to revoke Morris' probation for a 1996 drug conviction.

The 25-year-old Morris was at a party given by the family of Ravens tackle Orlando Brown at a Baltimore County banquet hall when the altercation took place Sunday night, according to a police report.

April Dawn Brittain of Dallas, claimed she was talking to Morris when the player's wife, Stephanie, accused her of having an affair with him. The three argued, and Morris grabbed Brittain by the arm and then put his hands around her throat "and began choking her until she could not breathe," the report said.

The woman later went to call 911, but was interrupted by another Ravens player who told her not to call the police or press charges because it was hurting the team, the report said.

Brittain told police she was leaving the party when Morris again grabbed her and pushed her head into a glass door.

The officer, who took Brittain's complaint early Monday, wrote "the victim had red marks on her neck, scratches across her chest and face. She also complained of bruising on her arms and back." She did not seek medical attention.

36 states join civil lawsuit against national toy chain

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Thirty-six states, Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia joined a civil lawsuit Monday that alleges the nation's largest toy retailer is bullying its competitors.

The lawsuit filed last month in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn accused Toys R Us of intimidating its suppliers from shipping Mr. Potato Head, Barbie dolls and other popular toys to warehouse discounters like Price Club, Sam's and BJ's. It sought unspecified damages.

Having other states involved in the lawsuit allows them to combine resources to demonstrate the broad effect on consumers, New York Attorney General Dennis C. Vacco said in a release.

But Rebecca Caruso, a spokeswoman for the Paramus, N.J.-based chain, said the company had expected "these tag along lawsuits" after an administrative judge in September ruled that Toys R Us illegally used its clout to get toy makers to stop selling to discounters.

Judge James P. Timony in Washington, D.C. ruled that the company warned toy makers it might stop carrying certain toy lines if the products also were offered to discount stores.

The ruling upheld charges filed in a May 1996 complaint by the Federal Trade Commission, which accused the company of using its status to keep prices artificially high and its competitors at a comfortable distance.

Caruso said Toys R Us announced at a 1992 toy fair that it reserved the right not to carry the same items offered to discount stores. She noted that the company has appealed Timony's ruling and was confident it would be found to have acted properly.

"We've always acted fairly and in the best interests of the consumers," she said.

Vacco said that Mattel, Hasbro, Tyco Industries and Little Tikes Co. had reluctantly agreed to the terms set by Toys R Us.

"These low-margin retailers were underselling Toys R Us, which feared a loss of business and damage to its carefully cultivated 'everyday-low-price' image," Vacco said.

Iowa Attorney General Tom Miller said Toys R Us, with some 600 stores nationwide and about 10 in Iowa, "muscled" toy makers to stop selling to buying clubs or to sell the clubs only combination packs of two or more toys.

Michigan Attorney General Frank J. Kelley said the secret deal cheated Michigan parents and children out of hundreds of thousands of dollars because prices were artificially inflated at Toys R Us and the discount stores.

"It is particularly galling that the company targeted the most popular toys in this scheme," he said.

HEALTH

on a poll of K-State seniors, 90 to 95 percent of them said the service was satisfactory.

Aaron Truax, vice chair of the Privilege Fee Committee, proposed adding user fees instead of imposing an increase in privilege fees.

Zweimiller said he feared this would slow down the level of traffic.

"I think you would get a 10-percent decrease in utilization. You would lose people who are coming out because they don't want to pay for a visit," Zweimiller said.

Truax argued that visitation wasn't actually free because students are paying $84 a semester for the facility and its services.

"Ultimately, it does cost you to go to Lafene," Truax said.

Troy Brin, public relations chair for SHAC, said the user fee and the privilege fee are not the same thing.

"I think we are talking about two different situations ... some guy may not come in when he is sick because he may not have $5," Brin said.

Although Lafene can maintain its services at the current fee, it would not be able to add staff or services.

If Lafene doesn't get the increase it is asking for, Zweimiller said it could cause him to cut back on his staff.

"My options are to dip into the reserves or not fix the servers," Zweimiller said. "I would have to look to find the money and the biggest place we produce would be provider staff.

"Hopefully, I wouldn't have to fire any staff member, but I would have to put them on notice."

million debt.

The three-hour Kansas stop — plus a Saturday morning wetlands tour in California — served to defray Clinton's travel costs for the DNC and DSCC. Since the government pays for all but Clinton's political travel, the two party groups have to pay a percentage of total trip costs based on how much time Clinton spent at their political events.

At the same time that the administration's new welfare rules gave states greater leeway in using federal dollars, Clinton also announced penalties for states that fail to meet federal requirements for putting aid recipients to work.

States could be levied fines of up to 5 percent of their welfare block grants if they fall short of the mandate — adults in 25 percent of all welfare families — and are not trying to correct the violation, Clinton said.

But the new rules clarify that states failing to meet a tougher goal — getting 75 percent of all two-parent families working — risk losing 5 percent of the federal funding for two-parent families.

The rules also encourage states to exempt victims of domestic violence from requirements. States will not be punished if these women are not working as long as they are moving toward self-sufficiency.

The Imagination Workshop
A Production of KANU, the University of Kansas, Lawrence
Saturday, November 22, 8 p.m.
Public: $18 Seniors: $16 Students: $9
Let your imagination run wild for a night of high-energy laughs from this Lawrence-based group. With kooky sound effects and on-the-edge excitement of live radio, the Imagination Workshop transmits more bizarro humor than a Jim Carey festival.
Recent shows have poked fun at the Clinton health care program, the O.J. Simpson trial, the controversy over gays in the military, the 1996 presidential campaign, the fall TV season, and popular films.
Enjoy the unique humor of this team of zany Kansans when the Imagination Workshop spins into Manhattan.
Call McCain at 785-532-6428
You can charge your tickets to VISA, MasterCard, or Discover. Or stop by the box office, noon to 6 p.m. weekdays.
Presentation of the Imagination Workshop is supported by the K-State Fine Arts Fee.
Presented in part by the Kansas Arts Commission, a state agency, and the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency.

The student body referendum vote on whether to create a student privilege fee to help expand KSU Stadium failed Tuesday.

The measure, which needed 60-percent approval to pass, received 1,793 votes, or 49 percent of the total. Fifty-one percent of student voters, 1,892 students, voted against the creation of a fee.

Urick

Athletic Director Max Urick said he will accept the results and move on.

"The results were given to me, and so we'll move ahead with that knowledge and make plans accordingly," he said.

Nearly 20 percent of the student body turned out for the election, which asked students whether they favor the creation of a per-credit-hour fee to fund a portion of the estimated $11 million expansion project. The proposed stadium construction would involve a new upper deck, additions to the Dev Nelson Press Box and other stadium improvements to boost the seating capacity.

Students' role in the expansion will be re-evaluated, Urick said, along with the scope of the project. Though a seating increase will still become reality, Urick said it will now focus on public needs. The project, which was scheduled to be completed by the 1999 season, might also be delayed by the lack of a privilege fee, he said.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics proposed the number of guaranteed student seats at games would be increased from the 7,500-seat guarantee to 9,000 to 10,000 seats if the referendum passed.

The referendum outcome means students must be happy with 7,500 seats, Urick said. But in recent seasons, more than 9,000 seats have been sold to students.

"Evidently, the students believe that 7,500 seats are adequate, so based on that, we'll plan accordingly," he said.

> "Evidently, the students believe that 7,500 seats are adequate, so based on that, we'll plan accordingly."

Urick said it is a possibility that the athletic department would only sell the 7,500 guaranteed student seats.

"We'll always meet our 7,500-seat guarantee to the students, but after that we'll respond to public demand," he said.

Urick said he respected the results and thanked students who voted for the creation of a fee.

Others on campus also respected the results, but said they were happy with them. Rob MacDougall II, junior in political science, was a leader of Students For First Things First, a group that organized to oppose the creation of a student fee to fund the expansion.

MacDougall said his group was extremely happy with the outcome.

STUDENTS SUPPORT TRADITIONAL GRADES

Students support the traditional grading system already in place according to results from the student body plebiscite vote Tuesday.

Students were asked to state their preference between K-State's straight-letter grading system and two other approaches.

The plus system, proposed by Student Body President Tim Riemann and Vice President Jennafer Neufeld, would add plus categories to most letter grades. The plus-minus system gives instructors the option of awarding pluses or minuses for most letter grades.

Of students who answered the question, 1,432 voted for the traditional system, 1,341 for the plus system and 760 voted for the plus-minus system.

Riemann and Neufeld could not be reached for comment, but Student Senate Intern Coordinator Kim Peschka said it was nice to know how students felt about the grading-scale issue.

"It looks like students are happy with what they have now," Peschka said. "I'm glad that we've got the students' opinion instead of having to continue fighting about it in Senate. Those debates were going nowhere."

Crew to complete spill clean-up today

CATHY BACH
staff reporter

Monday's mercury spill outside Seaton Hall will be cleaned up and walkways will return to normal by 5 p.m today, officials said.

The incident occurred when a manometer, a device used to measure pressure, broke Monday in the courtyard of Seaton Hall. Officials contacted the Department of Environmental Health and Safety at 7:55 a.m, and they contracted Hazardous Material Resource from Kansas City to clean up the spill.

The toxology lab in the College of Veterinary Medicine said the amount of mercury on the ground is not enough to cause any significant danger to students who might have come in contact with it.

Judy Willingham, environmental health supervisor for the Manhattan and Riley County Health Department, said students would have to ingest a large quantity of mercury for harm to occur.

"The reality is, this is not even a significant opportunity for exposure," Willingham said.

Willingham said most mercury poisonings are related to food consumption, not spills.

A toxology lab official said mercury is dangerous if the vapors are inhaled or if it's absorbed through the skin on a daily basis. However, there is not enough mercury in the air or on the ground for this case to be considered dangerous.

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Health Center, said there have been no reported cases of mercury poisoning since the spill and no cases since he's been at K-State.

A toxology lab official said cleanup involves adding chemicals to the mercury to bind with it and create a salt-like substance that is then vacuumed up. This altered substance can't Habitat to build 4th home in Manhattan

KRIS ROBL
staff reporter

Manhattan Habitat for Humanity is in the process of selecting its fourth family to receive a new home.

The home will be built this spring at 508 Manhattan Ave.

"Families are selected based on their need for housing, willingness to become partners in the project and their ability to repay the loan," said Judine Telck, committee chair for family selection process.

Manhattan Habitat for Humanity follows a non-discriminatory policy of family selection. A family selection committee decides who will be living in the new home.

Telck said the committee looks at the family's references, makes a home visit to speak with potential families and determines the need of each family by observing their current living condition s.

In addition to a small down-payment, families must invest 300 to 500 "sweat equity" hours in the building of their home.

Sweat equity involves homeowners investing hundreds of hours of their own labor in to building the house. This reduces the monetary cost of the house, increases the personal stake of the family members in their house and fosters the development of partnerships with other people in the community.

A three-bedroom Habitat house in the United States costs the homeowner an average of $38,000. Prices will differ slightly, depending on location and costs of land, professional labor and materials. Habitat houses are affordable for low-income families because there is no profit included in the sale price and no interest is charged. Payments on the no-interest mortgages go into a revolving fund used to build more houses in Manhattan and abroad.

Habitat is a nonprofit Christian housing ministry dedicated to eliminating poverty housing worldwide.

Since its founding in 1995, the Manhattan Habitat for Humanity has reached its goal of building two houses a year.

TWA explosion not caused by criminal act

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — After scrutinizing more than 1 million pieces of wreckage, conducting 7,000 interviews and spending up to $20 million, the FBI officially pulled out of the probe into TWA Flight 800 on Tuesday, saying the explosion was not caused by a criminal act.

Investigators also released a videotaped simulation of the jet's last minutes to back up their conclusion and explain what scores of witnesses actually saw when the plane plunged into the Atlantic Ocean.

"We ran out of things to do," Assistant FBI Director James Kallstrom said at a news conference. "Following 16 months of unprecedented investigation ... we must now report that no evidence has been found which would indicate that a criminal act was the cause."

The Associated Press reported last Wednesday that the FBI had told families of the 230 victims that it would suspend the probe, turning the investigation over to the National Transportation Safety Board.

TWA Flight 800 had just left Kennedy Airport for Paris on July 17, 1996, when its center fuel tank exploded, killing everyone aboard. It broke apart at 13,700 feet and crashed into the ocean 10 miles off Long Island.

Kallstrom showed the CIA-produced videotape, with its computer-generated recreation of the disaster, to explain why 244 eyewitnesses reported streaks of light that some thought were a missile.

Investigators concluded that the witnesses actually were seeing the crippled plane itself, several seconds after the initial explosion. The sound of the blast reached them later, making them think they were watching the beginning of the disaster instead of its end, the FBI concluded.

Ninety-six percent of the wreckage was painstakingly recovered from the sea and reassembled in a Long Island hangar. Investigators looked at more than 1,400 places where the plane was torn and 259 areas of missing fuselage, and took more than 2,000 chemical swabbings, Kallstrom said.

They searched the metal, fabric and wires for telltale signs of explosives, and tried to match up possible entry and exit holes that a missile would have made.

FBI scientists shot missile warheads at scrapped jumbo jets in the Southwest desert to compare scarring to TWA 800's mangled body. Nothing matched.

Aware that the long investigation fueled conspiracy theories and suspicion, Kallstrom bluntly rejected such conjecture.

Asked about a speck of radar some thought was a missile, or forensic evidence that might have indicated a missile, Kallstrom responded: "Never was. Never will be."

He also rejected suggestions that the investigation was too long.

"We had to look at every dark crack and crevice in this investigation," he said. "We are the Federal Bureau of Total Investigation, not the Federal Bureau of the Obvious."

Kallstrom attacked those who claimed that the military accidentally shot down the plane and that the government covered it up. He said the FBI identified all military assets within 200

Manhattan steps closer to strict food regulations

JENNI EVANS
staff reporter

Manhattan food establishments might be confronting tougher guidelines when it comes to the safety of the food they serve.

The Manhattan City Commission approved the first reading of an ordinance Tuesday evening that would create food safety coordinators for certain food establishments.

"Our mission is to assure conditions which lead to healthy lives," said Marcia Bubak, president of the Riley County-Manhattan Board of Health.

The ordinance was created by the board in cooperation with Joe Kitterman, food-service representative from the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department.

Kitterman said the ordinance was developed after finding inadequate sanitation levels in Manhattan food-service establishments.

K-State fraternity and sorority kitchens would fall under the guidelines set by the ordinance.

The ordinance would not affect K-State's Derby or Kramer food centers, because city-related ordinances are not applicable to the university or its services. Restaurants under contract with the K-State Student Union will also be exempt from the ordinance.

Kitterman said one of the benefits of the ordinance would include an increase of professionalism.

"Another one of the benefits is that

Report: Diana planned to star with Costner in 'Bodyguard 2'

NEW YORK — Princess Diana was negotiating to star opposite Kevin Costner in a sequel to the movie "The Bodyguard," the New York Post reported Tuesday.

Diana would have played a role loosely based on her life, with Costner as the bodyguard she falls in love with, Costner told Premiere magazine. The Post obtained a copy of the story, which it said was to appear in the magazine's January issue.

The actor told Premiere he had begun negotiating with the recently divorced princess more than a year ago, the Post said.

"She said, 'Look, my life is maybe going to become my own at some point. Go ahead and do this script, and when it's ready, I'll be in a really good spot,'" Costner said.

Costner said he received a second draft of the movie script just three days before Diana's Aug. 31 death in a Paris car crash.

"I picked it up, and the first 30 pages were totally her," he said. "It was dignified, sexy, smart, funny — and I couldn't finish. I stopped. It broke my heart."

Tennessee judge charged with federal perjury in drug case

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — A judge has been charged with perjury for testifying he knew nothing about his girlfriend's drug dealing.

Judge Wyatt Nowlin Taylor, 65, was freed on $10,000 bail and was back on the bench Tuesday.

Taylor, the lone General Sessions Court judge in Bedford County, was arrested by FBI agents Monday outside the courthouse in Shelbyville.

Taylor is accused of lying to a grand jury in 1996 and at a federal trial in 1997, both involving drug charges against his girlfriend, Brenda Farrar Gordon, 30.

Investigators said that from 1994 to 1996, Taylor knew Gordon used and distributed marijuana and crack, and the two smoked marijuana together.

While Taylor was protecting his girlfriend, she agreed to work with the FBI, authorities said. In 1996, she secretly taped conversations with him about her drug use and about setting up drug deals from his home.

150,000 consumers to share $5 million settlement

WASHINGTON D.C. — About 150,000 consumers will share a $5 million settlement the government has reached with operators of a pyramid investment scheme.

The Federal Trade Commission said Tuesday it had filed the settlement with JewelWay International Inc. and six officers in U.S. District Court in Tucson, Ariz. Payment would be due within five days of the court's approval.

The FTC had charged the Tucson operation and its officers with making deceptive earnings claims and promising lucrative earnings and other benefits to induce participants to invest more than $1,000 each in the multilevel marketing plan.

The FTC said about 150,000 people invested in JewelWay's program but earned no money.

The settlement also bars the company and the officers from further illegal activities.

DNA evidence frees two men convicted in 1986 rape

CHICAGO — DNA evidence not allowed at the trial exonerated two men who have served 11 years in prison for a rape they did not commit.

Cook County Judge Daniel J. Kelly vacated the convictions of Donald Reynolds and Billy Wardell on Monday. He ordered new trials, but prosecutors said they would drop charges against both men.

The ruling cleared the way for their release Tuesday. They were serving 55-year sentences and would not have been eligible for parole until 2013.

Reynolds, 31, and Wardell, 32, were convicted of raping a University of Chicago sophomore May 3, 1986.

Reynolds asked a judge to order genetic testing. The judge refused, saying the procedure had not gained wide acceptance among scientists.

Reynolds called lawyer David W. Gleicher about a year ago, saying he was a victim of mistaken identity.

Gleicher got a court order allowing a DNA test on semen that had been preserved as evidence. Tests at a private lab in Maryland proved it could not have come from Reynolds. The results were confirmed by the Illinois State Police crime lab, which also ruled out Wardell.

Corrections CLARIFICATIONS
In an article titled "Health Services presents budget" in Monday's edition of the Collegian, incorrect information was reported. If Lafene receives the 10 percent increase, the article said it would increase Lafene's reserve budget by 15 percent. However, a 10-percent increase would maintain Lafene's reserve budget at 15 percent.

In an article titled "Student files claim against Chase Manhattan Apartments," incorrect information was reported. Tim Hanzlik did not have a three-month lease with the apartment complex. He had a summer sublease.

Programs to educate others about rape

JULIE LINDAMOOD
staff reporter

Members of the Men Against Rape Society are doing more than just talking the talk.

The society is developing new programs to educate others and working to make the organization more of a campus group, said Paul English, Men Against Rape Society chair and senior in history.

"As men and women of our campus community, we need to be aware of rape so that we can actually stop it," English said.

The Men Against Rape Society began as the result of a break-in at Smurthwaite Scholarship House in fall 1994, he said.

The men who lived on the ninth floor of Haymaker Hall decided to show their support of the residents of Smurthwaite by taking the women cookies and hanging out with them. English wanted to do more and after researching the issue, he and three other Haymaker residents developed a program discussing men's issues with rape.

In spring 1995, English produced the first Men of K-State Against Rape poster, which featured 12 student leaders. Every spring, new posters are produced and posted all over campus and the community, he said.

"The purpose of the organization and its activities is to get the message out there that we need to become more aware of rape as a part of our society," English said.

This year, the organization is working on becoming a campus-recognized group and has put out postings and information to the public for recruitment, English said.

"The target audience is men, but by no means is our membership limited to gender," English said.

Many people, including women, have expressed interest in joining and helping the organization, Leo Prieto, junior in pre-medicine and Spanish, said. Prieto said he got involved with the Men Against Rape Society because of what it stood for and because of the diverse group of people involved.

"We have people in the organization that are from the residence halls, there are people from Senate, some people are athletes," Prieto said. "It's a spectrum of this university."

With diverse role models, the Men Against Rape Society is hoping to focus on organized living groups such as fraternities and sororities, residence hall assistants and individual residence hall floors, Prieto said.

"We recognize this is a significant problem," English said. "That's why we want to target pledge classes and RA trainings."

English said the organization wants to reach women when they first get to college so they are educated about rape issues before they become statistics.

"It's not crazy madmen that do this," English said. "It's the guys who live next door to us."

New editor in chief, advertising manager chosen; spring semester applications due by 5 p.m. today

LORI GUILFOYLE
staff reporter

The spring 1998 Collegian editor in chief and advertising manager were chosen Monday by the Board of Student Publications.

Kelly Furnas, sophomore in print journalism and secondary education, was chosen as editor in chief, and Marty Goodnight, senior in advertising, was chosen as advertising manager.

▶ Want to be part of the Collegian? See the editorial on page 4 for application terms and tips.

Furnas is the Electronic Collegian editor this semester. He said he began in print journalism and always knew it was something he wanted to do.

Furnas will begin his job as editor by selecting the rest of the Collegian staff. Although he said he won't change the nature of the Collegian, he would like to see it become a public forum for the campus.

Goodnight began working for the Collegian advertising staff in spring 1997 as an account executive. He has also been phone book manager in summer 1997 and sales manager in fall 1997.

Goodnight said the advertising manager is a position he has always respected.

"I always hoped I would learn enough to have a chance to get the position," he said.

As advertising manager, Goodnight is responsible for hiring the assistant advertising manager and sales manager positions. Together, they will hire the rest of the advertising staff.

The Board of Student Publications' most important job is to hire the executive student positions, which include the Collegian editor in chief and advertising manager and the Royal Purple editor for the fall, spring and summer terms, said Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications and ex-officio member of the board.

Through an extensive application process, applicants pull together their goals, previous experience and their own management philosophies, he said.

"They are both extremely talented journalists," Johnson said. "Marty Goodnight has had a phenomenal track record in serving clients, and Kelly Furnas' extensive involvement with the eCollegian will allow him to be successful in his position as editor."

HALO to receive portion of clothing sales

LANDON TRAWNY
staff reporter

The Hispanic American Leadership Organization will benefit from the sale of authentic South American sweaters this week.

HALO is sponsoring Mario Andrade, sales representative of Intirupay Inc., while he sells his homemade sweaters, scarves and gloves in the free-speech zone outside the K-State Student Union. The merchandise is imported from Bolivia, Peru and Ecuador.

Andrade, originally from La Paz, Bolivia, said he will donate 20 percent of his earnings to HALO.

"It's so they can travel and do other things," Andrade said.

Leo Prieto, junior in pre-medicine and HALO president, said HALO will use the money to help pay for a trip the group took to Chicago earlier this semester and to help a senior-citizens center in Wichita.

"It's a great deal. He's really helping us out," Prieto said.

Carlos Contreras, sophomore in business and art, said HALO members will help Andrade throughout the week.

"We will have representatives out there working with him," Contreras said.

Prieto said this is the first time Andrade has been to K-State and hopes he will come back because he is enjoyable to work with.

"He's outgoing and personable, and we get to learn a lot about his culture," Prieto said. "You can talk to him about anything."

Andrade said he enjoys traveling to different schools in the Midwest and meeting students.

"At the beginning they're very shy, but after a couple days they warm up to us," Andrade said.

He said he enjoys working with Intirupay Inc. because the business deals directly with the South American countries. This allows him to pass the savings to the students, Andrade said.

"We can sell the sweaters at wholesale price for $39. They retail for between $79 and $120," Andrade said.

Contreras said this shows what kind of person Andrade is.

"This is his life. He sells them from the heart," Contreras said.

Andrade said the light-weight sweaters are popular because they are original designs and are handmade from alpaca, sheep and llama wool. Alpaca is a cousin to the llama and is native to the Andes Mountains, he said.

▶ Look it up in the e-Collegian. Point your web browser to collegian.ksu.edu to read past Halo stories.

"The wool has natural oils and is brushed out so it keeps the wind out," Andrade said. "This makes the sweaters very comfortable."

Andrade said once he leaves K-State, he will take a break during Thanksgiving before traveling to Today's the day. If you've had a beef with the Collegian all semester and you want a hand in the production, or if you just want to join the family, applications for spring semester are due today at 5 p.m. in Kedzie 103.

Before you panic, we'll fill you in on all the steps you need to take.

- Pick up an application in Kedzie 103.
- Trot over to Anderson Hall and lay down the $3.85 application fee.
- Dust off your resume.
- Prepare a cover letter.

"Wait, wait," you scream. "I can do the first two, but what about that whole résumé/cover letter thing?"

On the résumé, be sure to include previous media experience if you have any. You can include relevant high school, community college and collegiate experience, as well as other related work you've done. Also include journalism and media-related course work.

But don't worry if you don't have any official experience. You do not have to be a journalism major to apply. Everyone is strongly encouraged to apply.

Include two professional and one personal reference as well. Professional references can include professors, employers or teachers.

Touch on the following topics in your cover letter:

- How many hours you have for the spring and what classes you're taking.
- How much time you'll be able to devote to the paper each week.
- Discuss things you'd like to improve and how you'd do it.
- List the strengths and weaknesses of the Collegian and how you would make things better.
- Why you think you deserve the job.

Also include samples of writing or design work you've done to enhance the application.

It might sound a little daunting, but it should only take about an hour of time to put your materials together. And who knows — by the spring, you could be part of the eighth-largest daily newspaper in Kansas.

If you have any questions, contact Kelly Furnas, spring 1998 editor at 532-6556 or by e-mail at krf5663@ksu.edu.

Student urges Alumni Association to reconsider location of building

Editor,

The alumni center is being designed to fit the land at the south end of Memorial Stadium. I am urging the KSU Alumni Association to reconsider this site as the location of the new center. Although I realize the Foundation Building is not adequate to meet the needs of the Alumni Association, I believe there are more sites on K-State's campus to better meet the needs of not only alumni, but also friends, faculty and students.

First, I believe placing the alumni center at the south end of Memorial Stadium would pose some structural problems. The Alumni Association is hoping the center will sit 100 feet back from Anderson Avenue; however, with Anderson expansion, the building will replace the extreme south end of the track and existing field. And I believe there might be drainage problems on the site as well. Because the water table at the south end of the stadium is so close to ground level, the alumni center would have to be elevated equal to the level of Anderson Avenue to prevent any flooding from occurring.

Second, I believe the interior design of the alumni center should include more overall space with technological capabilities greater than the Alumni Association is planning to incorporate. I believe that by incorporating more conference areas with computers and Internet access, the needs of the alumni and students could be met more efficiently.

I believe the Alumni Association can find a better area for the center and still incorporate high visibility for alumni, a gateway to campus for students and an addition to K-State's campus that would reflect years of alumni support in K-State's purple pride.

Proposed roundabout presents pedestrian hazards, student says

Editor,

There could be a serious problem at the intersection of North Manhattan Avenue and Claflin Road in 1999 because of the proposed roundabout that is to be voted on by the Manhattan City Commission.

The main problem is there are no means of stopping traffic. There are going to be many students walking through the roundabout to and from class. The yield signs, which are the substitute for stop lights, could cause traffic to slow down during the busy hours of the day.

Another problem is the roundabout could create confusion during football games, as well as on moving days for the dorms and housing in that area. There is already traffic buildup during games now even with the traffic lights. Imagine what the intersection could be like with a roundabout.

Also, there is no truly defined student crosswalk available. Students could wait for a long time for a nice driver to let them by and walk to the splitter island in the middle of the road. Then they'd have to wait again for traffic to slow down to get to the other side of the road.

A solution to these problems is encouraging the City Commission to vote no on the roundabout and leave the intersection the way it is.

Student claims Collegian coverage of politics biased toward liberalism

Editor,

I was not surprised to see yet another instance of published liberalism in your opinion page on Monday. I am referring to your choice of letters to the editor.

I don't mind your decision to allow the promotion of the Tim Wise speech in Grant Denny's contribution, but you failed to "edit" the portion of the letter degrading conservatism and Rush Limbaugh. I wondered when the Readers Write section had become an open forum of trash-talking, but then I remembered this is not a new occurrence, as long as the content agrees with the ideology of the Collegian staff.

For those of you not paying attention, there have been several instances of bias by our newspaper writers. One such occasion occurred when the story of Landon Lecturer and U.S. Republican Sen. Phil Gramm was buried on the third page while the story on his 1996 election Democratic opponent Victor Morales' speech the following week was given front page ink.

I hope this trend will not continue in our newspaper in the future.

New York media and Kansas just don't get along

VIEWPOINT

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

RUSSELL FORTMEYER is a senior in architectural engineering. You can send e-mail to Russell at rmf@ksu.edu

Kansas doesn't make the nightly news all that often.

True, once in awhile Bob Dole or a president will drop in for a photo opportunity, but there's never been a CNN logo of "Crisis in Kansas" or "200 Days in the Wheat Belt." That's surely fine with Kansans.

Occasionally, however, some reporters or writers make Kansas their mission. They fly out from some large airport to Wichita, rent a car and drive to whatever backwater town they choose to lambast or celebrate, but never anything in between.

The classic case of Kansas vs. the world was writer Truman Capote's coverage for the New Yorker of the 1959 Clutter family murders in Garden City, Kan. Capote at least had the reputation of eccentricity, which partly excuses his book, "In Cold Blood," and his reporting, depending how you feel about either.

Stupid New Yorkers.

More recently, when the Los Angeles Times covered the Grammys a few years ago, someone wrote a piece about Rock, Kan., and the potential for having the music industry lovefest in the unassuming town's high school gymnasium.

In the case of the L.A. Times, it was a humorous and light piece. But take the recent case of Esquire magazine's November issue. In it is an expose, of sorts, on racism (they call it the "new hate") in Dodge City, Kan.

The piece, "Eating Jack Hooker's Cow," was written by Michael Paterniti. The story, which literally pits two Dodge City motel-owners against each other — Jack and Bev Hooker and a Laotian immigrant, Donna Sinhpraseut.

Paterniti colors his piece with a shoddy vernacular and a stilted conversational tone. He surely thought himself a sly writer approaching his subject by placing the reader in the middle. He directs the reader by telling us to "look" over there or "see" that. Not only is it condescending, it just doesn't work much after the first few paragraphs. As if the writer's style wasn't enough to push us over the edge, he describes Dodge as a "town stuck between a slab of meat and a frying pan."

After telling both sides of the story, Paterniti asks us "have you really listened to Bev Hooker's story? Have you figured out what she's really trying to tell you, herself?"

At that point, the entire story breaks down to silliness. It gets sillier yet when the writer tells us some of Jack Hooker's son's cows "have the face of Christ himself."

To say this story has caused problems out west would be a grand understatement. There were rumors, later proved untrue, that the Dodge City Chamber of Commerce was buying up all copies of Esquire to prevent the townspeople from reading it. That, my friends, assumes anyone in Dodge City reads such an inconsistently written, superficial magazine as Esquire in the first place.

Then again, Kansas has a shaky history with outsiders, big-city types who come out here expecting the unexpected and, when finding not much more than typical Kansas, end up inventing something to sell their editors. It doesn't have to be Kansas.

Last spring, about a week before the Academy Awards telecast, a reporter for the New York Times was rambling about Manhattan asking locals how many nominated movies they had seen, who they thought would win, etc. It was to be a "cute" feature comparing how much New Yorkers and Manhattanites knew about the Oscars race.

The story that emerged from the writer's casual interviews was pure effrontery. He expressed his shock at finding some Manhattanites who had actually seen such rather mainstream fare as "Breaking the Waves" or "Shine." As it turned out, the Kansans knew quite a bit more about film than the New Yorkers, but far be it for the story to reflect this. Why does every article about Kansas have to sound like we just got electricity in 1987 and are still wary about the earth being round?

Interviews always end up written quite differently from how they actually were, all in the name of making the point to coast-dwellers that the Midwest is still full of slow people stuck in the 1950s (Ike in 2000!).

Reporter: Who is your favorite painter from art history?

Local: Well, of course there are the giants: Picasso, Michelangelo, Raphael and Rembrandt. But, I'm particularly fond of Monet, especially the paintings of his garden in Giverny. I visited Giverny last year and ...

And somehow the interview ends up reading like this in the newspaper story:

"Manhattan is a dusty little Kansas city. There's an art museum, but it displays some Kansas artists no one's heard of. Locals don't care much for art, anyway. Ask people on the street who their favorite painters are from art history, and they're likely to tell you some French Impressionist they know from poster art at Wal-Mart."

If you choose to make a fuss about this, you'll likely get laughed off the page by some wittier writer who'll shove the 1930s in your face and call you a narrow-minded fool. Or you'll be accused of xenophobia.

It's been decades since Kansans, and the rest of the country, have been afraid of strangers, but Kansans will always remain wary of the cocky reporter with an angle to push.

Columnist explores the depths of Satanism

VIEWPOINT

KEVIN BAILEY

KEVIN BAILEY is a senior in elementary education. You can send your e-mail comments to Kevin at (kevinsb@ksu.edu).

For one column, I will give the devil his due.

As a columnist who writes from a Christian perspective, I recently received a letter from a person who, quite simply, did not like my perspective. This reader encouraged me to write about the opposing perspective. The reader asked why I did not ever write a column about, oh say ... satanism.

Though the reader's sincerity could no doubt be called into question, I have decided to fulfill this request.

To be honest, there is more than one perspective to be addressed when one speaks of satanism. There are those within the "satanic circle" who believe there is no supernatural world. Basically, this is a type of atheistic viewpoint. They simply believe in the opposite of God, not in any specific supernatural force named "Satan."

This group includes the founder of the infamous "Church of Satan," Anton Lavey. Lavey was interviewed extensively by satanism researchers and was recently quoted on Hank Hanegraaf's daily radio show on Oct. 30.

Lavey is an intellectual who enjoys philosophy as well as fooling unsuspecting Christians. He receives letters from people who wish to convert him from satanism. In response, he sends back a sarcastic letter saying he has "been saved" and asking those who would support him to send him lots and lots of money.

Unfortunately, many have fallen for this ruse. Lavey finds great humor when one of these "conversion letters" shows up at a religious convention as "proof" that even the founder of the Church of Satan has converted to Christianity.

However, there is a more sinister side to any discussion that takes place on the topic of satanism. That dark side is embodied in the horror known as satanic ritual abuse, or SRA.

In "Satan's Underground," an autobiographical account of one woman's escape from SRA, Lauren Stratford vividly details what goes on within a satanic cult. The book gives horrific descriptions of the abuse Stratford was subjected to after she was sold to child pornographers by first her mother, and then with the consent of her father.

It goes on to describe the rituals she was forced to endure in college as part of SRA. Stratford describes how babies are "bred" for the specific purpose of serving as human sacrifices to Satan. She gives accounts of sacrifices, punishments and other atrocities that are unconscionable to the rational mind.

Stratford was almost always offered as a sexual sacrifice during the rituals. But, the best sacrifice to Satan — according to the high priest who had claimed Stratford as "his woman" — was the sacrifice of a child. Stratford writes this was "... because children represent purity and innocence; they belong to God" ("Satan's Underground" p.93).

In the same section of the book, she writes of witnessing the ultimate sacrifice of such an innocent child.

The baby was skinned alive.

For Stratford, the torture and fear that bound her to this horrifying "Satanic Church" were overwhelming. As a result of the times she was sexually sacrificed, she became pregnant. Her two little girls, Carly and Lindy, were used in "snuff" films. These are a particularly horrifying type of pornography, in which the "actresses" are actually killed.

Her other child, Joey, was eventually offered as one of the "perfect sacrifices." I will quote briefly from Stratford's own words, taken from page 146 of "Satan's Underground."

"I will not ... go into a complete accounting of Joey's sacrifice ... Suffice it to say, that ... they chanted something about Satan accepting his heart as a pure and unblemished sacrifice ... Joey's body was laid on a black robe. The coven members each held a candle to the edge of the robe. It was quickly engulfed in flames. Joey was no more."

Granted, SRA is an issue very few people ever hear about. It is hotly debated within religious circles, and many deny it even occurs with any regularity. Eyewitnesses are so rare that books such as "Satan's Underground" are must-reads.

As I stated in the beginning of this column, I have clearly shown what some of the results of satanism in America today are. I have "given the devil his due," so to speak. The forces of evil are indeed very powerful.

But, Jesus is more powerful still.

Two thousand years ago, he was sacrificed in our place, and overcame death — and Satan — when he rose from the grave on the third day.

Yes, this is a column about satanism. But, a column about satanism would not be complete without telling of the eternal defeat of the central figure of the religion — Satan himself.

People who have a personal relationship with Jesus have no reason to fear Satan or his cohorts. The one — Jesus — who resides within their hearts is much greater than any power derived from demonic forces.

The Apostle John says it this way in his first letter (4:4, NIV):

"You, dear children, are from God, and have overcome them, because the one who is in you is greater than the one who is in the world."

Philanthropy leaves student cycling across United States

KRISTIN BOYD
staff reporter

A K-State student is one of 60 bicycling across United States to help raise funds for people with disabilities.

Phil Beatty, sophomore in communication sciences and disorders and also a member of Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity, isn't a professional cyclist. In fact, he said he hasn't been on a bicycle in years.

"I haven't ridden a bike since I was in elementary school," Beatty said.

Beatty and other Pi Kaps from across the nation are riding in support of the philanthropy PUSH America, which raises funds and creates awareness of people with disabilities.

Beatty has never worked with disabled children before, so he said this will be a new experience for him.

"I have never had a lot of experience with kids with disabilities. It is hard because you don't know whether or not to help them with everything or not," Beatty said.

Though the children won't be participating directly with PUSH America, they will be there to encourage the bicyclists.

The Journey of Hope, the cross country bicycle ride, is PUSH America's largest fund-raising campaign.

The journey will begin June 10 in San Francisco and will end Aug. 15 in Washington, D.C.

"We will be riding an average of 75 miles a day to help raise awareness. Hopefully, we can bring information back to our chapter in how people should deal with others' disabilities," Beatty said.

Team members have committed themselves to raising a minimum of $4,000 each for the cause.

The funds raised through the Journey of Hope benefit the projects and programs of PUSH America.

"Basically, the program helps build handicap accessible playgrounds for kids with disabilities," Beatty said.

Beatty said he has raised about $800 so far.

"I have gone to sororities and have done a letter campaign to try to raise money. I have also tried to get support from the alumni of my chapter," Beatty said.

Along with raising money, Beatty has had to maintain his schedule.

"It shows what kind of time-management skills I have. I work as a house boy for Pi Beta Phi and am pledge educator for my fraternity. Plus, I have 13 hours of classes," Beatty said.

"I can't wait to meet 60 other brothers who have gone through what I have in time commitment to raise $4,000."

Beatty's fraternity brothers said they are excited about his trip across the United States.

"This is a huge thing for him to do. I think it is something that a lot of people don't try to do because they don't think that they can cut it and ride all away across the U.S.," said Doug Miller, freshman in mechanical engineering and a fellow Pi Kap.

Miller said Beatty is willing to work hard for something he believes in.

"He is definitely a good guy. He is caring and wants to put time into things he cares about," Miller said.

A typical day on the Journey of Hope for Beatty will include getting up at 6 a.m. and being on the road by 7 a.m.

Beatty said the team will finish riding each day at about 1 p.m. and actually meet the children at social events, presenting puppet shows for them.

Secondary major might be option for seniors

LANDON TRAWNY
staff writer

Students might be on the verge of earning a secondary major in international studies without even knowing.

Brad Shaw, associate professor of Spanish and director of international and area studies, said the secondary major has been available at K-State since 1979.

A secondary major requires more hours than a minor but fewer than a major, he said.

Shaw said classes offered in other departments such as modern languages, business, political science, geography and history can count toward a secondary major in international studies, as well as a student's major.

A secondary major in international studies is meant to promote a student's awareness and understanding about different aspects of cultures around the world.

Aruna Michie, associate professor of political science, said most of the international courses in political science apply to the secondary major.

If a course is not listed to apply for the secondary major in international studies, it still can count, Shaw said.

"We are constantly upgrading the class list," Shaw said. "When we learn of a course, we count it if it has an international aspect to it."

He said this includes courses students have taken in the past, but they might not have been listed as part of the curriculum at the time.

Jason Chace, senior in education and Spanish, said the lack of knowledge about the program among students is probably because classes that apply to the program are in different departments across the university and are constantly changing.

"I'm a senior, and I didn't know about the program until recently," Chace said. "Even though classes that apply to international studies are scattered all over campus and change a lot, I think students need to keep up with those changes to see where they stand. I'm looking at the possibility of finishing my last requirement after graduation."

▶ Look it up in the World Wide Web. International studies has an informational page on the web. It can be found at www.ksu.edu/iae.

Shaw advised students to check the curriculum to see how close they are to finishing it. If they are close, they might find it advantageous to add the secondary major, he said.

Shaw has set up a World Wide Web page to help students see where they stand for the secondary major and said he constantly makes additions to it.

She said a secondary major in international studies is important for students to consider because the world is becoming a tighter community and international aspects of other countries have more of an affect on the United States.

Chace said he believes a formal education that deals with other countries is becoming vital.

"Any time you can understand other cultures and the processes of their nations, it can benefit you in whatever you do," Chace said. "It opens doors to other areas and gives you opportunities to travel outside the nation."

Hoops teams need fan support equal to that of football

VIEWPOINT

SUN DEE MILLS

SUN DEE MILLS is a senior in electronic journalism. You can send your e-mail comments to Sun Dee at sundee@ksu.edu.

I promised myself when I got this job I'd never write one of these columns. I hated reading them, and they rarely serve as motivation for the average student. But when the pep band alone outnumbers the people in the student section for a basketball game, something must be said.

I counted 37 people in sections 19 through 21 at tipoff time at Monday night's women's basketball exhibition game vs. Athletes in Action, with no one in section 21. The alumni section had a fair amount of people, and no doubt were there students in these sections. But the 536 people that went through the turnstiles throughout the night probably included the band, the cheer squad, the Classy Cats and various members of the media who forgot their passes (like myself).

There are the various excuses. I realize weekday games are difficult to attend. I know this was an exhibition game. I, too, am not looking forward to football winding to a close. But the reality is, after this weekend, basketball season has arrived. And if people want to call themselves true K-State sports fans, it's time for them to start acting like it.

Once again, the pattern of sports follows that they support winning programs. Usually. The women's basketball team went to the NCAA Tournament last season, something I'd consider an accomplishment of a winning program. The volleyball team went to the tournament as well, and it has garnered slightly more support with its recent success.

All these successes, regardless of the sport, put K-State higher in the limelight as a national, well-rounded sports school like Stanford, Nebraska or UCLA. The football team has gotten our feet in the door as of late, but lest we forget, the men's basketball team got there first.

In the late 1980s, the Wildcats had Steve Henson, Mitch Richmond and Will Scott on various teams that went to four consecutive NCAA Tournaments. People camped out for days on end to get basketball tickets when games were at Ahearn Field House, and the first years at Bramlage Coliseum were exciting for the team as well as the fans.

As the men's basketball program went through changes, the fan base turned its back on Bramlage in favor of the little football stadium down the hill, where football wizard Bill Snyder was working miracles on the losingest program in college football history.

Now that K-State is a "football" school, basketball is referred to as an afterthought. Students 10 years ago would have broken up hysterically if you'd told them the Cats would be in contention for an Alliance Bowl bid in 1997. They were happy to get to the NCAA Midwest Regional Championship game vs. Kansas in 1988 and heartbroken to lose to the state rival. It's not much consolation, but that Kansas team did go on to win the championship, so a fan has to be somewhat pleased with the Cats' success in '88.

Some of those fans braved scorching heat, bitter wind and all other bad weather conditions while suffering through Stan Parrish's three miserable seasons and Snyder's first year when he went 1-10. And what happened when he and his team got that first win in 30 games against North Texas State? Cat fans took down their own goalpost in celebration and relief.

Those are the fans who went to the Cotton Bowl last year and lived high on the hog as though Santa Claus had given them a Porsche for Christmas. And some of those fans were at the women's basketball game Monday night. But not very many.

As I write this column, students are deciding the fate of their student section at KSU Stadium. I lost my ID, but I felt my vote was important enough to warrant buying a new one. The students in 1988 faced the same dilemma when Bramlage was proposed, and now K-State basketball has one of the most upscale facilities in the Big 12. But for most of the 1990s, the arena has been less than full.

In fact, not since 1994 has Bramlage set a top-10 attendance record. Last season's K-State/Kansas matchup Jan. 4 drew a respectable 13,500 for being in the middle of the winter break, but it stands alone when the average attendance fell in at 8,248.

When the expansion happens — and it will, regardless of the students' vote — KSU Stadium will only seat 8,000-9,000 more fans. The main principle was to start small in case, heaven forbid, the football team takes a backward slide and the new upscale facilities open to empty crowds. It's a sad state of affairs when no plans can be made for fans to be in the stands, no matter what the team's record.

Bowl picture fuzzy as Cats' season winds down

SUN DEE MILLS
sports editor

K-State, now facing a 1-7 Iowa State team this Saturday, has enough bowl possibilities circulating to give the average fan a tremendous headache. And all the Wildcats can do is concentrate on winning at Ames this weekend.

"I just don't think anybody knows what the bowl situation is," junior linebacker Travis Ochs said. "We can only do what we can do, which is go to Iowa State and get a win. As players, that's the only thing we can do."

If the Cats were to win Saturday at Iowa State, the team would post its first 10-1 season since 1910. Coach Bill Snyder sees this record as a good one but has higher hopes for next year.

"When you post eight or nine wins, not much is made of it," Snyder said. "And when you post nine or 10 wins, not much is made of that, either. Now, going from 10 to 11 wins, that might make a difference."

With a 10-1 record, the Cats would finish with a record deserving of an Alliance Bowl invitation. But with only four at-large bids available, Snyder said there is still too much football left to be played to make a clear call.

By definition, the Alliance will have the Big 12, Atlantic Coast, Big East and Southeast conference champions participate in two of the games. As long as a team has won at least eight regular-season games, is ranked among the top 12 bowl-eligible teams in the Associated Press or CNN/USA Today final poll and is ranked no lower in either poll than the lowest-ranked team selected by a bowl from the conference champions, it is eligible for an Alliance invitation.

Confused? Snyder said, believe it or not, it's not that hard to figure out.

"I guess you'd like to see the lines more clearly defined," Snyder said. "The selections are made for the most part, with the third-place team going here, et cetera, but it is much more clear-cut than it used to be. Outside of a few conference championships, everything is up for grabs, and whoever seems to be the best team in the rankings went to the more high-profile bowl."

If No. 1 Michigan beats No. 4 Ohio State this weekend, once again the Big Ten's tie to the Rose Bowl will keep an 11-0 team out of the national championship game. Although the Rose Bowl joins the three Alliance bowls in 1998, Snyder said the bowl being out of the Alliance group does not bother him.

"It's always been that way, and I've grown up with it being that way," Snyder said. "Of course, if we were the team in question, it might bother me."

With the Orange Bowl slated as the championship game this year, No. 3 Nebraska and No. 2 Florida State will likely meet in Miami. As long as Nebraska beats Colorado on Saturday and Texas A&M in the Big 12 Championship game, and Florida State beats Florida in Gainesville this weekend, this match-up will probably occur.

The Sugar Bowl takes the Alliance third and fifth at-large picks. The Southeastern Conference champion (which No. 5 Tennessee is strongly favored to be), and the Big 10's No. 6 Penn State, are frontrunners for this bowl.

That leaves the Fiesta Bowl. The Fiesta Bowl gets the Alliance's fourth and sixth picks, and No. 19 Big East team Virginia Tech could be the sixth pick. The fourth pick is a toss-up, and No. 9 K-State is included in the mix, along with the loser of Saturday's Ohio State/Michigan game, No. 7 UCLA and the "home" team, No. 12 Arizona State.

PELLOM MCDANIELS, DEFENSIVE END for the Kansas City Chiefs, spoke Tuesday evening in McCain Auditorium. McDaniels' speech focused on motivation.

Work supervisor inspires player to rebuild career

PELLOM MCDANIELS took indirect route to Kansas City Chiefs roster.

Kansas City Chiefs defensive end Pellom McDaniels didn't go into the NFL straight after college.

In fact, he took a job at Procter and Gamble after his college football career at Oregon State University.

McDaniels, who spoke for Blue Key Leadership Appreciation Day on Tuesday night in McCain Auditorium, said if it weren't for a supervisor who kept driving him, he wouldn't have pursued his dream.

"We were sitting at a bar, and he asked me if I ever thought about playing football again," McDaniels said. "I said of course. He said, 'Don't you think if you we're good enough, you'd be playing?'"

McDaniels gave his job a two-week notice and decided to try out for the World Football League where he was drafted in the fifth round to a Berlingham, Ala., team.

A member of the Chiefs since 1993, McDaniels said students should pursue their dreams.

"If there is something you want to do, you have to go do it. You have to take the chance. You have to try," he said.

McDaniels said the point he wanted to make in his speech was not to walk through life without taking the chance or letting an opportunity slip by.

"Find out what is going on. Don't be someone who sits back and doesn't know what is going on or lets others do it," he said. "If we don't address problems, they just become bigger problems."

Along with his football career, McDaniels owns a clothing company and has established the "Arts for Smarts Foundation" in Kansas City, Mo. The program introduces disadvantaged children to theater and art.

He said parents needed to take the initiative to expose their children to all types of life.

"We need to all stop and think about what we do day-to-day — how we affect other people's lives," McDaniels said.

He said students shouldn't be sleepwalkers.

Students need to be role models for others instead of looking down on them for the race they are or the car they drive, he said.

McDaniels also said an opportunity might only come around once.

"Pursue your dreams," he said. "Time waits for no one."

Showin' some leg

Gramatica kicks his way to national honors

Kicking a 22-yard field goal is a big deal for K-State place-kicker Martin Gramatica.

Even though pretty routine for him — he's 17 for 17 in his career inside 30 yards — he still celebrates as if he just kicked a field goal from 70 yards out.

Jumping, screaming and running all over the field are part of Gramatica's post-field goal celebration routine.

"It's kind of something you expect from him. After every field goal, he shows his emotion," K-State long snapper Brandon Knowles said. "He's just that type of player."

On Dec. 9, though, Gramatica could bring his wild celebrations to a new level.

On that night, he'll find out if he is the recipient of the Lou Groza Collegiate Place-Kicker Award, given annually to the best college place-kicker in the country.

And if Gramatica's name is called, viewer discretion should be advised.

"Whoever the announcer is, I hope they're well aware of what he does," Knowles said.

However, Gramatica said if he doesn't win the award, he'll be able to take it in stride.

"I'm not going to be upset. There's nothing I can do about it," Gramatica said. "The only thing I can do is make my kicks. If the other guys make more or longer kicks or better kicks, that's good for them. So I'm not going to be mad about it. I'm going to do the best I can to keep kicking field goals."

Gramatica was selected as one of three finalists for the award Thursday, along with Sims Lenhardt of Duke and Chris Sailer of UCLA. He leads the nation with a .941 percentage (16-17), is fourth in the country with 1.78 field goals per game and is three for six outside 50 yards.

And if the voters feel the same way about him as K-State coach Bill Snyder does, he should start clearing space for the trophy.

"I think he is the most deserving kicker in the country of that award," Snyder said. "I'd be hard pressed to believe that there is a better place-kicker in the United States at this level."

Gramatica was one of 20 semifinalists for the award and survived the cut to three. A 109-member voting panel, consisting of journalists, professional kickers and previous Lou Groza Award winners, will decide if Gramatica is indeed the best place-kicker in college football.

He'll find out in West Palm Beach, Fla., and because his parents live in Labelle, Fla., they'll probably be there to hear the news. And that, Gramatica said, would give the West Palm Beach celebration patrol two more people to worry about.

"If my parents are there, I think they're going to jump around more than I am," Gramatica said.

His final chance to make a statement for the award comes Saturday when the Wildcats take on Iowa State. Judging by statistics, he'll probably get plenty of chances to kick. The Cyclones are giving up an average of 46.5 points a game, so he'll probably have a few extra-point attempts.

But a long field goal — by Gramatica's standards — could help his cause. So far this season, Gramatica has two 52-yarders and a 55-yarder, but his range extends beyond the 50s. His long field goals have easily cleared the crossbar, and his pregame range has extended to nearly 65 yards this season.

Snyder said he might give Gramatica the opportunity to try a long field goal, although he won't let such an attempt affect the outcome of the game.

"I've often wanted to be able to do that, 60 or beyond. I'm not adverse to it at all," Snyder said. "But I'm not going into the ball game with the silly notion that that's what we're going to try to do. When that happens, you're fighting for your life at the end of the ball game."

WILDCAT REPORT

REGULAR-SEASON FINALE INFO

K-State's final regular-season football game, against Iowa State, will be at 11:30 a.m. Saturday in Ames, Iowa. The game time has been changed from the originally scheduled 1 p.m. kickoff because of its T.V. broadcast. It will be part of the Big 12 syndicated package and can be viewed in Manhattan on WIBW-TV from Topeka.

FRESHMAN LEADS TEAM AT REGIONALS

Anna Wetterhus led the K-State women's cross country team to a fourth-place finish at the District V Cross Country Championships in Ames, Iowa. She finished third, covering the 5,000-meter span in 18 minutes and 23 seconds, to qualify for the NCAA National Championships Nov. 24 at Furman University in Greenville, S.C.

The women's team finished fourth among 24 teams, behind Missouri, Nebraska and Minnesota.

On the men's side, freshman Brandon Jessop finished 35th to pace the Wildcats. He ran 10,000 meters in 34:01. The Cats finished 15th out of 21 teams on the men's side. Oklahoma State won the team title with 86 points, and Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa State and Missouri rounded out the top-five team finishers.

Other results for the K-State women include Emily Diederich in 30th, Kelly Andra in 39th, Alison Canny in 43rd, Ashlie Kinton in 58th, Julie Kronoshek in 81st and Lindsay Moser in 119th.

For the men, Brent Stover finished 60th, Zach Davies finished 77th, Adam Hobson finished 107th, Andy Pelsma finished 110th, David Barland finished 113th and Justin Wrigley finished 154th.

K-STATE SIGNS RECRUIT

Kristin Rethman of Centralia (Kan.) High School has signed a national letter of intent to play basketball with the Wildcats.

"Kristin is a tremendous addition to our program," K-State coach Deb Patterson said. "She is a great shooter and can handle the ball. She is intense, competitive and hard-working. She also is an excellent student and a quality person. Kristin brings the total package we're looking for at Kansas State. We're excited to have another top-level Kansas recruit in our program."

Rethman averaged 21.9 points and 5.6 rebounds as a high-school junior. She shot 53.2 percent from the field and 40.7 percent from three-point range. The five-foot-nine-inch guard made 87.5 percent of her free throws as a member of the 27-1 state runner-up team in Class 1A last March.

Rethman is a three-time first team all-league selection and a three-year letter winner. She was named first-team Class 1A as a junior and third team as a sophomore by Topeka Capital-Journal and Kansas Sports Magazine.

BASKETBALL TEAM NAMES TRAINER

K-State has announced William Graham as an assistant athletics trainer. He spent nearly five years as the athletics trainer for USA Volleyball in San Diego, Calif., and will work closely with the men's basketball team.

While with USA Volleyball, Graham implemented strength and conditioning programs for the United States men's national team and was the athletics trainer for both the men's and women's national volleyball teams. He also served as a volunteer sports medicine athletics trainer for the U.S. Olympic Committee at the 1996 Summer Olympic Games in Atlanta, Ga., the 1995 U.S. Olympic Festival in Colorado Springs, Colo., and at the U.S. Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs in 1994.

He earned a bachelor's degree in movement and exercise science in 1988 from Chapman University in California. He obtained his master's degree in physical education and human movement studies from the University of Oregon in 1991.

THREE WILDCATS HONORED

Football News has named three Wildcats to its All-Big 12 team. Place kicker Martin Gramatica, right tackle Ryan Young and linebacker Jeff Kelly were named to the first-team squad.

Gramatica was also honored by Football News as its selection as first-team, all-American kicker, named one of three finalists for the Lou Groza Collegiate Place-Kicker Award and Big 12 Specialty Player of the Week for last Saturday.

He has made 19-of-20 field goals this season. His .950 field-goal percentage is best in the nation, and he is second in the country with 1.9 field goals per game.

He is the K-State career scoring leader, has the school record for field goals in a season and made a school-record 13 consecutive field goals this season.

"I couldn't really believe I was selected, considering all the great kickers out there," Gramatica said.

"For me to be chosen is really special, but any success I've had is really due to the entire field goal unit from snapper to holder and the blockers. The whole K-State team is a part of this recognition."

A regionalist in the TRUE SENSE

Review by Russell Fortmeyer

Wichita might not be considered a significant center for art, but if there was a large force in Wichita's art in the 20th century it might well have been William Dickerson.

"The Regionalist Vision of William Dickerson," an exhibition of 51 paintings, drawings and prints at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art until Jan. 4, 1998, reveals the artist, who died in 1972, as a worthy contemporary to the American scene painters of the modern era.

The exhibition, mostly from the DeVore collection, achieves a greater importance in recognizing Dickerson's work as an artist and as a teacher at the Wichita Art Association in an enlightening companion book. For those interested in the state's art history, this is required reading.

Scholarly work on Kansas artists, especially Dickerson, is a gaping hole in state history. Even in comprehensive Kansas history books, little of merit is written on the fringe groups of artists who have rambled about Wichita, Lindsborg, Topeka and other artistic pockets since the late 1800s.

Outside artistic circles, Kansas artists of renown are rare yet today. It's not entirely surprising to hear even well-educated people occasionally ask who John Steuart Curry is and if he's still living. In some ways, Kansas is still the rough-and-tumble agricultural outpost it was when Dickerson's mentors began their work around the turn of the century.

The book brings together essays from two Kansas art historians, Beach museum curator Bill North and Hall Professor of American Art at the University of Kansas Charles Eldredge and also a Chicago-based historian, Liz Seaton. Tributes are also included from several of Dickerson's own students.

The Beach museum firmly plants its feet in the artistic legacy of Kansas with the Dickerson show.

The exhibition conjures up the notion of why Dickerson has somewhat played second fiddle to Curry as the state's artist of importance. For all of Curry's insistence that he truly loved his home state, Dickerson's work is truer to the subject. He shrugs off Curry's melodrama and nationalistic agenda for a purer art that relishes interesting composition, purposeful color and a sense of place, subtle as it may be. Which is why it's easier to appreciate Dickerson's landscapes as art.

Dickerson owes much more to the work of Charles Burchfield and even Georgia O'Keeffe, both regionalists in a way, and occasionally the realist Edward Hopper. However he never quite approaches Hopper's mastery of light or ability to evoke alienation with such subtely. According to the catalog, Dickerson and Hopper met and had some sort of relationship, though no details are given.

Dickerson was born in El Dorado, Kan., in 1904. He studied art at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago, with some financial and career help from C.A. Seward, a noted Kansas printmaker who helped found the influential Prairie Print Makers. He returned to Wichita in 1930, where he began work at the Wichita Art Association, retiring as director in 1971.

It's clear Dickerson owes a great deal to the early Kansas artists — Birger Sandzen, Seward. But Dickerson owes little to the Kansas art celebrity Curry or the rest of the supporting cast of Thomas Hart Benton and Grant Wood who were to "create American art" in the 1930s.

For the true American art, at least on the level of an all-encompassing style, didn't emerge until the 1950s with the New York school of abstract expressionists. Dickerson's work doesn't reflect this artistic force; in that he aligns more with the individualist O'Keeffe and her quasi-exile in New Mexico.

SPRING, 1942, oil on canvas

Dickerson was drawn to New Mexico, as were a fair amount of Kansas artists throughout the last century. He visited several times, the first in 1931. "Road, New Mexico," a watercolor with black crayon on paper (1946), is the most lush landscape in the show, the vibrant greens of trees and shrubs muted just so by the sandy ground and adobe house peeking through. Dickerson truly knew the landscape of both New Mexico and Kansas.

Dickerson matters more as a local painter anyway. He'll doubtfully ever see a wider recognition outside Kansas and the immediate Midwest, but he remains significant to our state artistic heritage as a historical figure who influenced generations of Kansas painters.

His influence comes from his appreciation of rather mundane subject matter, finding interesting compositions in a typical Wichita neighborhood, alleyway or grain elevator.

In the striking "Spring," oil on canvas (1942), Dickerson presents a farmhouse in a Kansas landscape. It wouldn't be extraordinary if it weren't for the colorfully colliding forms of the house's roof, which is subtly carried into the windswept foothills below. The dynamic forms, which curator North likens to Picasso's cubism, terminate in the strict horizontal of a railroad track and the vertical of a lone utility pole.

Such spontaneous use of color penetrates the best of Dickerson's work. "Buildings in the Snow," oil on canvas (1938), is a riotous use of color for a Wichita alleyway. Or the pulsing and careful use of orange in "Suburb," oil on canvas (1950s), a Burchfield-esque neighborhood with an exquisitely arranged tree grouping.

Dickerson's portraits align more with regionalist Reginald Marsh's caricatures of 1930s society. In "Museum Reception," oil on canvas (1960), no actual art is present, but instead he chose to portray doll-like society women superficially concerned with the activities. Dickerson's wife, Betty, divides the painting in half in a stilted contrapposto, looking as though she is not enjoying herself.

Or take the two bloated women in "After Dinner Speaker," oil on canvas (1956), who sit bored and half-asleep. "The Man on the Street," oil on canvas (1950s), looks like one of the dirty characters from Truman Capote's ominous book, "In Cold Blood." Intentional? Maybe. Dickerson can have a sly wit at times.

In the case of Dickerson, the joke is not on us. If there is a tendency to overplay the role of some regionalists, who are perhaps best forgotten, Dickerson's re-emergence seems late in the coming.

"The Regionalist Vision of William Dickerson" will be at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art until Jan. 4, 1998. Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday through Friday and 1 to 4:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. The museum is open until 8 p.m. on Thursday. Admission is free. Grindcore bands crush all in the way

Black Army Jacket/Noothgrush
Apesplit 7"
(Monkeybite/Reservoir)

Man, oh man. This is one frightening record. Two monstrous hardcore/grindcore bands team up to further their conquest of the human race on this chunk of vinyl.

New York's Black Army Jacket leads the way with three fast and furious tunes.

The A side is led off by "Make It Stop! Make It Stop!" It's a blisteringly fast hardcore song that will rip your face off in an instant.

Black Army Jacket changes the tempos throughout the song to keep it interesting amid the blast beats. The lyrical content is a serious, pro-animal rights rant.

"Corpselawimage" is a slower, more dirge-like tune that is just as heavy or heavier than the first song. The lead singer's vocal style is sheer evil.

The side is closed by "Pretenders to the Throne," a mid-tempo number that plods along roughly like a drunken Bigfoot. It's capped of by a sample from "Planet of the Apes" that keeps in line with the theme of the single.

Noothgrush only has one song on its side, and it's absolutely crushing.

"29th Scroll (6th Verse)" is an agonizingly slow song that is one of the slowest songs I've ever heard. It's even slower than old Melvins' songs, which I previously thought was impossible.

The lyrics about humankind's inferiority to animals are screamed over a brutal, sludgy attack that sounds like a cross between the Melvins and Black Sabbath.

It too ends with a sample from "Planet of the Apes."

This comes free with a copy of Monkeybite Apezine. So get to searching for it, because it's well worth it.

Stereolab
"Iron Man" b/w "The Incredible He Woman" tour-only 7" (Duophonic)

This newest effort from Stereolab is only available from the band on its current tour.

The A side is "Iron Man," which I was hoping would be a Black Sabbath cover, but it isn't. I guess the Cardigans already captured the poppy covers of the Sabbath department.

This song is definitely weird, with its bizarre keyboard sounds and effects seemingly looped throughout the song.

The drums sound looped too, yet they still sound live.

This is a cool jazzy, loungy, poppy, techno instrumental tune. The guitar sounds surfy at times, too.

I especially like the bridge of the song because it sounds more like a collage of sounds, rather than a typical song structure.

A couple of the sounds sound like they came straight out of a Chemical Brothers song.

The interestingly titled "The Incredible He Woman" takes up the B side.

It fades in slowly and is more subdued than the A side track. It's more keyboard- and organ-based, with the drums and guitar pushed into the background.

The rhythm of the drums is seemingly provided by little gurgling electronic sounds.

It's a perfect showcase for the beautiful minimal vocals from Mary Hansen and Laetitia Sadier.

This is a good tune and a great seven-inch vinyl. Since it's only available on tour from Stereolab itself, be prepared to pay outrageous prices if you can find it in a store.

Speaker calls for commitment to eradicate bias

MATT KREPS
staff writer

Before a crowd that nearly filled the Union Little Theatre, Arnett Doctor told the story of a massacre and ended with a message of hope.

Doctor's speech was about the massacre of a black community in Florida and his fight to bring those events to the government's attention.

Rosewood was a small community carved out of a Florida swamp in the late 1800s. Its citizens were mostly middle-class black families.

After a white woman falsely accused a black man of robbing and assaulting her, white men from as far away as Georgia converged on the town for a massacre that lasted from Jan. 1 to 7, 1923, Doctor said.

Doctor's great-grandmother and mother, a young child at the time, were at the woman's house when the incident took place, he said. They witnessed that it was actually the woman's white lover who assaulted her after a heated argument.

Both the county sheriff and the governor knew of the massacre, Doctor said. The governor went fishing until the massacre was over. The sheriff was involved in planning the events.

Only a few women and children were smuggled out of the town by night. Most of the town was burned to the ground.

After the massacre, the state buried the events and 70 years passed before Doctor helped compile the history.

Doctor said even after a state report documented the events, the state still referred to it as the "so-called massacre."

The story was finally recognized as history when Ernest Parham, a 95-year-old white man and a member of the mob, burst into the Florida Legislature in 1993 and declared he could identify who had killed whom in the massacre and that the state covered it up, Doctor said.

After that, the state of Florida recognized Rosewood's history and compensated the victims and their families.

However, while he said the compensation is inadequate, Doctor is more concerned with what can be learned from the story.

"The inequalities of the past are things that we need to be seriously concerned about," he said.

Doctor said the Rosewood survivors and relatives do not view the events as a historical inequality.

"We believe what happened in Rosewood is a historical reality," he said.

Doctor said the difference is that these inequalities continue today. If people say racism is a thing of the past, there is a responsibility to oppose that view.

"We have a responsibility to immediately challenge that view," he said. "To do anything less is tantamount to ethnic genocide."

"We must be a society that deplores violence against any of our citizens," he said later in the speech.

Doctor said events such as the ethnic cleansing in Bosnia show that the world has not yet learned to avoid bias. His solution follows the precedent set by President Nixon extending peaceful relations to China and President Reagan supporting the Soviets. Previously, both nations had been enemies of the United States.

"If there is a commitment from the top and it is then articulated to the masses, we can then eradicate racism and bias from the masses," he said.

Clinton orders extra warplanes to Persian Gulf

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Strengthening his hand in the standoff with Iraq, President Clinton ordered a fresh buildup of U.S. firepower in the Persian Gulf on Tuesday even as signs emerged of an accelerated push for a diplomatic solution.

Clinton told the Air Force to dispatch six of its F-117 stealth fighters, six B-52 long-range bombers and four refueling planes. Pentagon officials said the decision was based in part on a heightened state of alert by Iraq's air defenses.

A U-2 surveillance plane flew over Iraq without incident — despite Iraqi threats — and the Pentagon said at least one more mission would be flown this week.

The fresh warplanes are to arrive in the region by the end of the week, officials said.

Pentagon spokesman Kenneth Bacon said the president also authorized Gen. Anthony Zinni, commander of U.S. forces in the Middle East, to send up to 30 other warplanes — including F-15 and F-16 fighters and B-1 bombers — if he deemed it necessary.

The president's national security adviser, Sandy Berger, said the addition of U.S. aircraft, pushing the total to more than 300 in the Gulf region, was a precautionary step — not a signal that Clinton had concluded a military clash was inevitable.

"This is part of our effort to be prepared in a prudent way for any contingency that may arise in the region," Berger said at the White House.

The United States had about 1,700 combat aircraft in the Gulf during the 1991 war against Iraq.

Berger said the buildup was not related to a U-2 surveillance flight over Iraq on Tuesday morning. The spy plane, operating in support of U.N. efforts to monitor Iraq's weapons program, completed its mission without incident, he said. Iraq had threatened to shoot down the U-2, but U.S. officials said it did not try.

Bacon said the U-2 flew for about one hour just west of Baghdad, and he added that at least one more surveillance mission would be flown by the end of the week.

Berger confirmed the Clinton administration was prepared to consider altering a U.N. "oil-for-food" program under which Iraq is allowed to buy $4 billion a year in food and medicine from U.N.-supervised Iraqi oil-export revenue. One possibility is Iraq would be allowed to buy more goods.

Berger said Iraq would first have to comply with a U.N. demand that it permit U.N. weapons inspectors back, including the American team members it kicked out last week.

"Saddam Hussein must reverse course and allow the inspectors back in," he said.

In New York on Monday, Iraq's U.N. ambassador, Nizar Hamdoon, called the proposal a "no-starter."

Although a senior administration official traveling with Secretary of State Madeleine Albright in Pakistan had characterized the "oil-for-food" suggestion on Monday as a "little carrot" for Iraq, Berger insisted the administration was not negotiating. He said changes in the oil sales arrangement had been under consideration before the current crisis arose more than two weeks ago.

"The president has mentioned this to me and raised this with me on a number of occasions over the past few months as there have been reports out of Iraq of hunger or malnutrition. So this has been a longstanding position of the United States," Berger said.

In Moscow, Russian Foreign Minister Yevgeny Primakov told reporters that President Boris Yeltsin, in a meeting Tuesday with Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz, had come to an understanding on an unspecified diplomatic solution.

"In the course of the talks a certain program has been worked out that allows us, we think, to avoid a confrontation, to avoid the use of force and achieve a settlement," Primakov said.

White House spokesman Michael McCurry said U.S. officials had not yet learned details of the Russian initiative.

At a stop in New Delhi, India, on Tuesday, Albright spokesman James Rubin said Albright was talking by phone with her French, British and Russian counterparts about the possibility of convening a special meeting on the Iraqi crisis.

Bacon said the six F-117 stealth fighters would be dispatched to Kuwait City Airport from their home base at Holloman Air Force Base, N.M., and the six B-52 bombers would go from Barksdale Air Force Base, La., to Diego Garcia, a British territory in the Indian Ocean that is equipped to handle long-range bombers.

If Zinni decides to send the additional 30 Air Force planes as an "air expeditionary force," they would operate from a base in Bahrain in the Persian Gulf, Bacon said. The spokesman characterized those planes as being "on call."

In explaining Clinton's reason for sending the extra planes to the Gulf, Bacon said it was based in part on indications that Iraq's air defenses are on a higher state of alert now than when Iraq invaded Kuwait in August 1990. He said the Pentagon was worried that Iraqi air defenses are being shuffled around and might be hoping to set a trap for allied aircraft patrolling southern Iraq.

Speaking from aboard the carrier USS George Washington, Rear Adm. Michael G. Mullen told The Associated Press in a telephone interview Tuesday that his five-ship battle group expected to reach the Persian Gulf by this weekend. It moved out of the Red Sea on Tuesday into the Gulf of Aden, the admiral said.

"Hopefully our presence will add to a peaceful resolution to this crisis, but if called on to respond in combat we can do that as well," Mullen said.

The aircraft carrier USS Nimitz and its battle group already are in the Gulf.

BOWLING

Tucson, Ariz., which is about an hour and 45 minutes southeast on Interstate 10 from Tempe, Ariz., the location of the Fiesta Bowl. This tournament could draw Cat fans to Arizona earlier, bringing added revenue to the towns that perhaps UCLA, Ohio State or Michigan would not bring. Plus, Arizona State could provide a large fan base but would not invest in tourist events or hotels like the other teams would.

Another drawback for K-State's chances for the Fiesta Bowl is the national interest aspect. The game, being played on New Year's Eve, won't be watched by as many fans as games scheduled on New Year's Day or the days before. Other schools might be able to draw a larger TV audience, and the Fiesta Bowl representatives will examine this.

But the 45,000 Cat fans who attended the Cotton Bowl last year will also play a significant factor in the Fiesta Bowl's decision because of the smaller TV audience.

If the Cats lose in Ames, they will post a 9-2 record, which will tie No. 16 Texas A&M's record if the Aggies beat Texas Nov. 28. In this case, the Cats would fight the Aggies for the Cotton Bowl spot, the place the Cats could end up even if the team beats Iowa State.

Of course, with the Aggies being a Texas team, the Cotton Bowl could make a case about taking A&M over K-State, bumping the Cats to the Holiday Bowl game. This happened last year with the Cats and Colorado, both finishing with 9-2 records. Cotton Bowl officials said even though Colorado beat K-State, the Buffaloes had just been to Dallas last season and the fan turnout wasn't pleasing, so the Buffs went to San Diego.

However, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported that the Cotton Bowl is seriously looking at K-State meeting UCLA on Jan. 1. Executive Director Rick Baker told the Star-Telegram, "That's the best game we could hope for."

K-State could share exclusive company with Notre Dame and Alabama, the only other two teams to receive consecutive invitations to play in the Cotton Bowl; various Southwest conference teams received automatic bids as conference champions in consecutive years.

Regardless, Snyder isn't concerned about the location of his winter break "vacation," as long as it's somewhere the Cats deserve to be.

"If we were the team that ends up with a 9-2 season, not deserving of the Alliance Bowl or the Cotton Bowl, then that's the way it should be," Snyder said. "But if we were fortunate enough to go 10-1, in accordance to the parameters of the Alliance Bowl and deserved to go to an Alliance Bowl, then I would be disappointed if we weren't."

be absorbed by the skin, and the mercury becomes nontoxic.

Officials said people find the liquid metal appealing to look at and pick it up, which leads to absorption through the skin.

Anyone coming into contact with mercury should take a shower or a bath with lots of soap and water.

Officials warn students to stay away from the area until cleanup is finished.

Mercury poisoning degenerates the nerve cells in the brain, causing neurological problems.

Willingham said signs of mercury poisoning include feelings of weakness and lethargy, numbness, coordination loss and body tremors.

Willingham said that, historically, mercury poisonings occurred when people ate fish that ingested the material when feeding and when people worked with felt when making top hats. Now most incidents involving mercury containment occur through smelting.

She said incidents involving mercury containment have become uncommon because strict government regulation.

"It's so rare that people take immediate action when it happens," Willingham said.

John Lambert, director of public safety, said students should not handle unconfined mercury.

He said if students see unconfined mercury anywhere, they should call the Department of Environmental Health and Safety at 532-5856.

not get the 60 percent that it needed to pass, but they didn't even get a majority. I think that says a lot in the skepticism that students had," MacDougall said.

MacDougall said he had worried that students would fall for athletic department propaganda.

"I was really kind of worried that maybe students would fall into the athletic department's trap. It was a manipulating, almost mind-washing campaign. I think students were really skeptical about it because they saw a lot of things about it that just didn't seem kosher," MacDougall said.

The referendum's defeat is a victory for activism, MacDougall said.

"I really didn't think we would win. I really thought the athletic department would have their way. It was a pleasant surprise," he said. "It renews my faith in our student body, and it also shows that grass roots and student activism really do work."

it increases the public confidence in the safety of Manhattan food service establishments," Kitterman said.

The proposed Food Service Safety Coordinator certification would require all food establishments that process potentially hazardous foods, such as meats, to designate a full-time employee who would be certified.

Certification can be obtained through an eight-hour course offered through the health department.

The concern of commissioners centered on the interference of government into the activities of private businesses.

"I'm in agreement with what this ordinance is all about, but I'm also in agreement with Commissioner Hall and I'm against government intrusion into private business," Commissioner Ed Klimek said.

After hearing from local restaurant owners who support the ordinance, the motion was approved 4 to 1. Commissioner Steve Hall voted against the proposal.

In other business, the commission denied a request to rescind the downtown business improvement district.

Hall said it seemed to him the problem was internal. He suggested people who wish to have the business improvement district rescinded meet with board members from Mainstreet Manhattan to reach some sort of agreement.

"It's important that you work together. I would urge people to get involved in boards and change things to be what you want them to be," Commissioner Karen McCulloh said.

White House spokesman Mike McCurry said Tuesday that air-travel security precautions resulting from the disaster remain in place.

"I think we have some confidence that we struck the right balance, irrespective of the announcement today," he said.

Families of the dead filed lawsuits last year blaming the airline and Boeing, the 747's manufacturer, alleging mechanical malfunction.

Seattle-based Boeing said it would continue to work with the NTSB in looking for the cause.

Kallstrom left the door open to new leads.

"If something comes up, we are going to jump into it with both feet as quickly as possible," he said. "We are not writing a big 'closed' on it and putting it in some dusty safe somewhere."

Manhattan Main Street spruces up holiday shopping

LESLIE NACHTRAB
staff reporter

Thanks to efforts by Manhattan Main Street and three area radio stations, holiday shopping in downtown Manhattan might seem a little more festive this year.

Manhattan Main Street, composed of area downtown business owners, is making plans to spruce up the holiday shopping experience and increase downtown business sales, with the help of KMAN-AM 1350, KXBZ-FM 104.7 and KMKF-FM 101.5.

"Some of the atmosphere-enhancing activities are being done so people can just enjoy coming downtown," said Scott Morrill, project manager for Manhattan Main Street.

Morrill said one activity already operating Thursdays from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. is horse and buggy rides. The rides are free, but Morrill said they are requesting nonperishable items for the Flint Hills Breadbasket. Starting Friday, Manhattan Main Street will extend the horse and buggy rides to include weekends.

"Riding in buggies might not get someone to go into a shop and buy something, but it might get them to come back," Morrill said.

Morrill said he expects the rides to especially attract couples.

"We've even seen a few engagements happen in those buggies," he said.

In addition to the rides, Morrill said they are looking into caroling and other forms of entertainment, but details are still being planned.

The kickoff to the holiday shopping season begins with a downtown open house the weekend before Thanksgiving. Morrill said that is when they will activate the decorations and put up holiday flags and lights. Friday night will focus on the lighting of the trees and buildings, and Saturday will bring the arrival of Santa Claus, he said.

Morrill said he hopes kids will also take advantage of the festivities.

"Hopefully, going downtown will become a fond memory for them, and when they grow up to be shoppers, they'll come back," he said.

KMAN, B104.7 and K-Rock will all be broadcasting live during the kickoff weekend from about 20 downtown businesses. Jason Schlitz, sales manager at K-Rock, said the stations will have one-hour broadcasts all weekend from different businesses. During that hour, Schlitz said people will have the chance to come down for a one-hour sale and can register for prizes worth $50 or more from that business.

"We have such a large listenership between the three stations, all you're going to hear all weekend is downtown, downtown, downtown," Schlitz said.

Schlitz said the kickoff weekend was part of a larger project for the city, called Season Ticket to Manhattan.

"The goal is that by keeping shoppers in Manhattan, instead of going to Kansas City or Topeka, it's helping to keep Manhattan the place we like to live," he said. "The kickoff weekend is a really neat way to drive retail business to the downtown district."

"I think this is the most focused district-specific promotions downtown has done in a long time. It's a great cause. It helps local shoppers and the local businesses as well," Schlitz said.

Andrea Johnson, sales manager for B104.7, said the stations are excited for the chance to help out Manhattan businesses and the community.

"This unifies downtown Manhattan," Johnson said. "People forget about downtown when they shop. This gives us a chance to bring people back to the core of Manhattan."

Manhattan Main Street has also been working on indirect ways to make the shopping experience in downtown better.

"As an organization that works in revitalization, there's more to shopping than promotions," Morrill said. "We're doing things in design, which include just picking up trash every day to the restoration of the buildings at 407 and 409 Poyntz Ave."

Holiday season brings growing credit card debt

LESLIE NACHTRAB
staff reporter

With 36 days left in the holiday shopping season, many K-State students, faced with a lack of income, will turn to plastic to purchase gifts for friends and family. But by January or February, they often find themselves in credit card debt.

Fortunately, students aren't without help. Local services provide both counseling and legal advice to students experiencing debt. Consumer Credit Counseling, a part of United Way, is one such service.

Ross Siegle, credit counselor for Consumer Credit Counseling, said right after the holidays until March is when the service sees its largest clientele. Siegle estimates K-State students make up 25 percent of the people the service counsels.

Margaret Dukes, credit counselor, said the holidays are a time when students should think about how they're using their credit cards. Dukes said she thought the most common reason students got into credit card debt was improper credit use and a misunderstanding of how credit works.

"Credit isn't bad. It's how we use it that gets us into trouble," Dukes said. "People who go into debt are using credit cards as an ongoing source of income. They're also using them for non-essentials, instead of for big, long-term purchases.

"Before signing up to receive a credit card, students need to think about their budget," Dukes said. "You need to budget the payments into your spending budgets. You need to know your budget. You know, creditors are very serious about their terms of payment. Misuse of a card is fraud."

The biggest misconception of credit cards is how interest and minimum payments work. Diane Urban, students' attorney for Legal Services for Students, said students don't understand that if they just pay the minimum payment each month, they will never get a debt paid off, and they will end up paying more than what the item charged cost.

"I'm not sure people are understand-

Holiday events around country available for nostalgia seekers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The holidays tend to make people nostalgic for the past, and there are many celebrations and open houses around the country to indulge the feeling:

● "An Old World Christmas at the Pabst Mansion" in Milwaukee is observed Nov. 21-Jan. 16 with 19th century decorations and traditions that pay tribute to the Danish, English, German and Polish immigrants who settled in Wisconsin. For information, call (414) 931-0808.

● Folks in Wisconsin park their 4x4's and get into the spirit of things by taking a sleigh ride in the snowy countryside. Dozens of farms and riding stables across the state offer horse-drawn outings. On some, you get a ride to a Christmas tree farm and the opportunity to cut your own tree; others include stops for bonfires, marshmallow roasts and barbecues. Operators are listed in the Wisconsin Winter Event & Recreation Guide. For a free copy, call (800) 432-8747.

● Benjamin Harrison, the nation's 23rd president, was the first one to put up a Christmas tree in the White House. His restored 1875 home in Indianapolis will be decorated with tree and trimmings of the period, starting Nov. 17. The tree will be a duplicate of Harrison's 1889 White House tree, with wooden soldiers, hand-blown glass figures, candles and cotton batting. On Dec. 13, an 1888 Christmas celebration will be re-enacted, with apple cider and cookies for visitors. For information, call (317) 631-1898.

● A new production of the classic fairy tale, "Hansel und Gretel" by the Juilliard Opera, with sets and costumes designed by Maurice Sendak, highlights holiday entertainment at Lincoln Center in New York City. Performances are Dec. 11, 13 and 17; call (212) 769-7406 for tickets and information. Lincoln Center's popular production of "The Nutcracker" by the New York City Ballet returns Nov. 28-Jan. 4; call (212) 875-5570. And the National Chorale's "Messiah Sing-In," returns for its 30th anniversary on Dec. 18; call (212) 333-5333.

● The old-fashioned ancient oak trees and lagoons in New Orleans' City Park are illuminated by new-fashioned neon, fiberoptics and kinetic displays for the annual "Celebration in the Oaks," Nov. 28-Jan. 4. The park's stand of mature live oaks, said to be the largest in the world, are decorated as massive Christmas trees. Also decorated and lighted are the New Orleans Botanical Garden, Storyland and Carousel Gardens. For information call (504) 483-9415.

● Bonfires are a holiday specialty in New Orleans. The Algiers Bonfire lights up during the 5:30 p.m. ceremony on the Algiers Levee across from the courthouse. There will be a Christmas concert and caroling by candlelight on the river. On Dec. 24, residents and visitors can see the Marketing strategies cause stress long before holidays

TONYA ALLOWAY
staff reporter

The mall is becoming more and more crowded every day. Credit card companies are rolling in the dough, while shoppers wonder how they'll pay off their debts.

The stress levels are beginning to soar, and it isn't even Thanksgiving yet.

Elaine Johannes, K-State Research and Extension specialist in community mental health, said earlier marketing strategies could be a reason some people get stressed out for the holidays.

She said marketing messages amplify the expectations of the holidays, although people create their own stress.

"Some folks are really good at ignoring these messages, but others are ready-made followers," Johannes said.

She said it is important to show maturity in distinguishing marketing ploys from reality.

Johannes said a large part of holiday stress is caused by too much to do and too little time. As a mother, worker and full-time graduate student, Johannes said she has to realize that it is impossible to meet everyone's needs and all the demands that exist.

Johannes said three important steps to avoid or reduce holiday stress are moderation, organization and seeking support.

Johannes said overindulgence is a problem during the holidays in the areas of eating, drinking and buying gifts. She said people need to set a limit for themselves and follow it.

"Organization is also very important in our time, our days and in ourselves," she said. She also said seeking support when needed was a key to reducing anxiety.

Johannes said to use common sense when dealing with holiday stress.

"Eat well, exercise, sleep and take a break when you need one," she said.

"It's not a sign of weakness," she said. "It is a sign of wisdom."

She said help can be found from a friend, family member or clergy member, as well as through the University Counseling Services at Lafene Health Center.

Dr. Ata Karim, therapist and diversity coordinator for University Counseling Services, said the best thing to do during the holidays is pay attention and be in touch with one's own feelings and thoughts.

Karim said some students will experience stress from going home for the first time and having conflicts with parents or siblings.

"There's a feeling of, 'OK, now what is my place in the family?'" he said. "There are issues of having grown up and become your own individual."

Karim said academics even play a part in holiday stress because people get unexpected or disappointing grades and worry about the spring semester.

He said relaxation exercises usually help reduce stress, which could include working out, listening to music, watching a movie, eating well, breathing, meditation exercises or taking a long bath.

Karim said it is also important to keep sleeping and eating patterns regular and to remember to laugh.

Karim also said that Aggieville isn't a cure for anxiety, and meditating through drugs and alcohol is not the answer to holiday stress.

"It is never a good idea to depend on a chemical substance for relaxation," he said.

ANGELA TRUELOVE, of Manhattan, waits for holiday shoppers at the Hickory Farms booth in the Manhattan Town Center on Monday afternoon. Hickory Farms has been selling holiday gifts in Town Center since Saturday and will be selling products until Dec. 26. So far, the hottest-selling items have been beef sticks and cheese products.

Awards to be given to citizens for random acts of kindness

LAURA POPE
staff reporter

Area communities will observe the Flint Hills Random Acts of Kindness Day for the second year on Nov. 28.

A random act of kindness can be anything great or small, and all people have their own interpretation, Howlette Kleiner, chairwoman for the event, said.

"Kindness can be anything that makes you happy or changes your life," Kleiner said. "It can be something very big, but don't overlook the small things."

Kleiner developed the idea two years ago, because she said she thought there was a lot of negativity and people weren't getting along.

"I just wondered, why can't there be a day when everyone can get along?" she said. "This year we also had the governor sign a proclamation for the whole state to observe the day."

Citizens in Manhattan, Ogden, Junction City and Fort Riley will be honored for their kind actions during 1997. Nominations for the award can be mailed or taken by today to the following places: Main Post Chapel, Bldg. 6, Fort Riley, Kan. 66442; Ogden City Hall, P.O. Box C, Ogden, Kan. 66517; Chamber of Commerce, P.O. Box 26, Junction City, Kan. 66441; and Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, 555 Poyntz Ave., Manhattan, Kan. 66502.

Nominations should state what the act was, why this act is deserving of an award and when and where it occurred. Nominations should also include the name and address of the nominee.

Kleiner said she remembers two of last year's winners because of their situations.

"One of the awards went to a lady who nursed a cat back to health," she said. "It wasn't something that you wouldn't necessarily think of, but once I saw how serious it was to her it was very touching to me."

Another recipient received 20 nominations for his kindness. Joy Pfaff, school crossing guard, received the award for his everyday kindness and giving.

"I have yet to hear anything bad about him," Kleiner said. "He told me that people just can't be nice anymore, and I told him we were trying to fix that."

A selection committee made up of one person from each community evaluates the nominations. Two members from each community are chosen for the award. The communities rotate playing host to an awards ceremony to recognize the recipients.

The awards ceremony will follow a parade and holiday lighting ceremony on Nov. 28 at Heritage Park in Junction City. The parade begins at 5 p.m. and awards ceremony will be at 6:45 p.m.

Kleiner said the day can do nothing but grow, and only good can come out of it. She said she also hopes the schools can adopt a program to go along with the observance day.

ing the price they are paying for what they charge," Urban said.

Urban counsels students with legal advice concerning consumer debts. Urban said she advises about one student every two weeks.

"If they have income, I'll refer them to credit counseling," she said. "But oftentimes, my clients don't have anything left after they pay the rent and eat. A lot want to explore bankruptcy, and unfortunately, that's not cheap."

Urban explains to students that their bank accounts can be garnished, and wages can be taken away.

Urban, Siegle and Dukes said they all would support some kind of education program through K-State to inform students of the proper use and potential danger of credit cards.

"It would be helpful if someone would educate students," Urban said. "But to get people to sit down and learn about credit is not easy. Education would be a good thing. How to accomplish that, I'm not sure."

Siegle said it would be helpful if incoming freshmen were required to take a consumer credit seminar or incorporate it into part of freshman orientation.

Dukes said even though credit card companies offer free gifts and incentives at the beginning of the semester, that doesn't mean students need to sign up.

"Just because credit cards are offered doesn't mean students have to take it," Dukes said. "Students are not only compromising their income, but they're also compromising their parents' income. I've seen more often than not parents coming to the rescue."

Dukes said she thought credit card companies should also share some of the responsibility with college-age clients. She said requirements for qualifying for credit have been loosened too much because of competition among credit card companies.

Students making an appointment to see a credit counselor at Consumer Credit Counseling will first go through an in-depth money-management interview, Dukes said.

"We're going to find out what you've done with your money so far," Dukes said.

After the interview, Dukes said counselors will discuss options with students for the best way to handle their debt. Options include students handling their financial concerns on their own, enrolling in a Debt Management Plan, referral for legal advice or referral to other community resources.

Dukes said the sessions are thorough and usually last an hour. Those needing credit counseling can contact either Siegle or Dukes at 513 Leavenworth St., Suite C or by calling 539-5757. Appointments are required.

Those needing legal advice regarding their consumer concerns can contact Diane Urban at Legal Services for Students in the K-State Student Union or by calling 532-6541.

feux de joie (fires of joy) along the levee.

● "First Night New York '98" is a 13-hour non-alcoholic revel Dec. 31-Jan. 1 in New York City, with activities all over town. Among them will be a skating party at Central Park's Wollman Rink, a masquerade ball at the Wintergarden in the World Financial Center, jazz concerts at St. Peter's Church, country-western and square dancing at the Lexington Avenue Armory, dancing in the Manhattan Mall, and pony rides in Bryant Park. Patrons will be admitted to these and other activities by purchasing a First Night button ($25 adults, $5 children younger than 12, free for children younger than 3). Call (212) 922-9393.

● San Antonio's most glittering attraction is the illumination of its River Walk with 70,000 lights on its trees and bridges. The lighting ceremony Nov. 28 gets under way with a floating river parade lead by Santa. In another event, Pony Express Christmas Couriers make a 90-mile gallop from Goliad to San Antonio during "Christmas Along The Alamo-La Bahia Corridor," heralding the multicultural history that characterizes the corridor.

● The stately Biltmore House in Asheville, N.C., recalls Christmases of the George Vanderbilt era a century ago during its holiday celebrations Nov. 11-Jan. 4. A 40-foot tree in the banquet hall is decorated with brightly papered packages, and there are trees in the tapestry gallery decorated with German hand-blown glass ornaments. More than 35 decorated trees are found throughout the house, along with 200 wreaths, 2,000 poinsettias, 600 hand-tied bows and nearly 22,000 feet of evergreen roping. An especially romantic time to visit is during the Candlelight Christmas Evenings, when the house is filled with glowing candles and lighted fireplaces. For information call (704) 274-6333.

● Christmas at Blithewold in Bristol, R.I., this year will recall a Christmas spent abroad, "The Grand Tour-Christmas Abroad 1903." Displays will include a tree decorated in Italian national red, green and white lights, and another will be decorated with sailboats, referring to an Atlantic steamer crossing. For information, call (401) 253-2707.

● "Yuletide at Winterthur," Nov. 12-Jan. 11 at the du Pont estate in Winterthur, Del., evokes Christmases in the 18th and 19th centuries. A series of rooms will recreate an 18th-century house party. There also will be trees decorated with ornaments of the 19th century. For information, call (302) 888-4600.

● Holiday visitors can seethe most historic properties in New York's Hudson River Valley by candlelight during December. Sunnyside, home of writer Washington Irving, will have evening tours Dec. 13, 14, 19, 20, and 21. Two estates reflecting the area's Dutch past also welcome evening visitors — The Van Cortlandt Manor on Dec. 20, 21, 27 and 28; and the Philipsburg Manor, Dec. 7 and 14. Lyndhurst, the estate of 19th century magnate Jay Gould, opens the evenings of Dec. 13, 14, 20, 21, 27 and 28. Montgomery Place, another 19th century estate, will be open afternoons Dec. 6, 7, 13 and 14. Reservations are strongly recommended; for information, call (914) 631-8200.

Pledge charged with felony forgery from fraternity accounts

campus editor

Discrepancies in two Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity checkbooks and a little amateur detective work led to the arrest of a pledge for felony forgery.

Brian Hinel, sophomore in art and Pike pledge, was arrested Nov. 5 and charged with forging two checks worth a total of $900 from the house account and cashing them using fake identification.

Two previous checks were allegedly written by Hinel to the same assumed identities from the Pike's judicial account for $125 and $25 in mid-October.

Shon Chapman, senior in criminology and treasurer, said he was concerned when the judicial checkbook was missing at the beginning of the semester. As treasurer, Chapman collects, deposits and pays house bills in addition to setting budgets and distributing money to committees.

Hinel

When two canceled checks were returned from the judicial account, Chapman said he discovered they had been cashed at a Dillons in Hinel's Wichita neighborhood.

"I was going through the checks and when I found out where they were cashed, we talked to the guys in the house from Wichita," he said.

Chapman said when Hinel was questioned, he admitted writing the checks and immediately paid $150 back.

Matt Marron, president of Pi Kappa Alpha and senior in advertising, said Hinel was vague about why he needed the money.

"We got the checks back and met with Brian, and he paid it back on the spot," Marron said. "I called an emergency executive council meeting and we came to the conclusion that what he did was unexcusable and there was a unanimous vote to excuse him (from the house)."

The vote meant Hinel, a hold-over pledge to be initiated if his grades improved this semester, would never become a Pike, Marron said.

However, most of Hinel's pledge class wanted to be compassionate. The 126-member fraternity, with 60 living in-house, decided during a chapter meeting to allow Hinel to remain in the house until the end of the semester.

"We didn't want to leave him without a place to live. At this point, we didn't know about the other checks," Marron said. "He accepted our decision to let him stay until he had another place, knowing he had cashed us for $1,000. We were still thinking in terms of $150."

Less than two weeks later, Chapman received the two canceled checks from the house account worth a total of $900. He compared the assumed names and handwriting, then called the police. Hinel was arrested and expelled immediately.

"None of us could justify keeping him here. No one wants to live in a house where everyone has to lock their doors," Marron said. "That's not what a fraternity is about."

Marron said the initial decision to expel Hinel was more difficult.

"He lied to us. The guys don't want to live in the same house with someone who would do this," Marron said.

"Even though he stole an abundant amount of money, it was hard to come to the decision to ask him to leave. It was emotional because we never saw this coming."

Despite the fact that Hinel was a hold-over pledge for grades, Marron said he had expected Hinel to become more active in the house once he was initiated.

"Brian always presented himself as a gentleman, really laid back and sort of quiet. I was looking forward to him becoming a member of our house," Marron said.

"It was a shock that anyone would go through pledge class and learn about the house and get to know the members and then steal from their pockets. He took money out of all our pockets."

Hinel, now living with his family in Wichita, could not be reached by phone for comment.

The only fraternity members authorized to write checks on the house and judicial accounts are Chapman and Marron. Marron said trust among members is important.

"In a fraternity, there is no room for lying and stealing and being dishonest," Marron said. "There's no policy that would have prevented this. I told Brian before we knew about the last two checks that if he was really in trouble, he could have come to us and asked for help. We were his brothers."

Debate continues over student fees for health services

STORY BY ANDREA COREY

More than two-thirds of K-State students used Lafene Health Center last fiscal year.

But at what cost to students? Privilege fees for Lafene from students equaled $2.5 million last year, according to Mike Lynch, vice president for institutional advancement. He said privilege fees equal $86 for a student with a 12-credit-hour class load.

Lafene houses both the Eriksen Sports Medicine Clinic and University Counseling Services, which are both paid for in part by student privilege fees.

Lafene's budget is 66 percent funded by student dollars and 34 percent by user fees such as charges for X-rays and lab work.

Counseling Services is 54-percent funded by student fees, with another 41 percent from state fees, and the remaining 5 percent from grants and user fees.

Student dollars also pay a small part of Disabled Student Services' budget.

Lafene handled slightly fewer than 60,000 appointments last fiscal year, but only two-thirds of students used Lafene.

As the debate goes, these facts beg the question whether students should pay for services they might not use.

Lafene education department offers services to increase health awareness

STORY BY ASHLEY YOULE

Eating disorders, rape, stress and sexually transmitted diseases are just some of the areas the Lafene Health Education Department focuses on.

The department's purpose is to increase individual and group awareness about health and wellness-related topics.

Available to students, faculty, staff and the surrounding communities, the department encourages all people to take advantage of their resources.

"We have many services available to everyone, such as the Health Resource Center, where we have a video library on many topics such as diabetes, herpes and HIV," said Reita Currie, assistant director of the Health Education Department.

"We don't allow people to check these videos out, but they can come here and watch them anytime," she said.

In addition to the resource center, the department has other services such as support groups, individual consultations and programs on health topics.

"We do a lot of public relations for Lafene by handing out information on STDs, HIV and AIDS," she said. "This is done primarily by our student group, SHAPE, which stands for STD, HIV/AIDS Peer Educators."

The main purpose of this group is to go out and do presentations to help educate the public about these topics, she said.

"We go out onto the campus and into the community and speak to organizations such as fraternities and sororities, residence halls, high schools and many others," said Jennifer Wright, member of SHAPE and junior in environmental engineering.

To become a member of SHAPE, one goes through an interview, which is done each semester. Once roughly 10 new members are chosen, they have a one-year commitment to be on SHAPE and receive three credit hours for their participation, Currie said.

"The first semester the students have a class once a week where we educate them on STDs, HIV and AIDS. Second semester is when the students get to go out and do the presentations," she said.

As the liaison between Lafene and the members of SHAPE, the Health Education Department educates SHAPE members about these diseases.

The department is made up of Currie, who is the assistant director, and Cindy Burke, the director.

"They know so much, and they do their jobs so well," Wright said. "They have been out there to see the effects of these diseases, so they know firsthand what they're talking about."

A KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN SPECIAL REPORT

Iraq expected to let weapons inspectors return, Albright says

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GENEVA — Iraq has indicated it will allow U.S. weapons inspectors to return to the country, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said today after an emergency, middle-of the night meeting among the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council.

Albright said the United States made no concession to Iraq to gain its agreement.

There was no immediate word from Iraq, but Albright said she understood an announcement would come later in the day from Baghdad.

"We expect that today Iraq will make a decision that absolutely all the inspectors, without any exceptions, will return to Iraq, and will begin to work there normally," Russian Foreign Minister Yevgeny Primakov told reporters as he left to catch a plane for Brazil.

Primakov briefed Albright and their counterparts from France and Britain, plus a Chinese representative, about his government's proposal for ending the three-week-long crisis about weapons inspections.

Albright, speaking at an early morning news conference, indicated she was skeptical of Iraq's intentions.

"We have to wait to see if it's carried out," she said. "I will believe it when I see it." She added that the Clinton administration would be pleased if the weapons inspectors were allowed back quickly.

In a joint statement read by British Foreign Secretary Robin Cook, the diplomats said they hoped the Russian initiative would lead to Baghdad's unconditional and complete compliance with U.N. Security Council resolutions.

They gave no indication of bending to Iraq's demands for a reduction in the number of Americans on U.N. weapons inspection teams. They noted however, that the U.N. special commission responsible for the inspections would meet Friday in New York to review its work.

The statement of solidarity hid deep differences about whether military action should be used to force Iraqi President Saddam Hussein into compliance. France, China and Russia oppose the use of military force.

In Washington, D.C., President Clinton said anew that the United States wants a peaceful solution to the three-week crisis but that Iraq could set no conditions on the inspectors.

Stratotankers leave McConnell air base

ASSOCIATED PRESS

McCONNELL AIR FORCE BASE, Kan. — About 16 KC-135 aircraft left McConnell Air Force Base on Wednesday morning, and at least four were scheduled to refuel six Stealth fighters deploying to Kuwait.

The stratotankers, which refuel other aircraft while both planes are in the air, left the south-central Kansas base near Wichita on Wednesday morning.

Aircrew, maintainers and support people at McConnell were placed on alert status Friday in response to Saddam Hussein's refusal to allow American arms inspectors into Iraq.

Donaldson to deliver 112th Landon Lecture

ANDREA COREY
senior staff writer

Sam Donaldson, ABC News co-anchor of "PrimeTime Live," and "This Week," will give the 112th Landon Lecture at 1:30 Friday afternoon in McCain Auditorium.

Donaldson

Charles Reagan, executive assistant to the president and chairman of the Landon Lecture Series, said Donaldson hasn't announced the topic of his address, but no matter what the topic is, students should attend.

"It's just a shame if students miss seeing people like this — most students won't get a chance to see them in their lifetime," he said.

"A rare advantage K-State students have that other students don't have and that is to see, semester after semester, a major figure in person."

Donaldson is in his 29th year at ABC News, and his work has included breaking news, in-depth investigative stories and interviews of prominent figures from around the globe.

His noted interviews include President Clinton while Clinton was a presidential candidate, Secretary of State James Baker, Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall, Gulf Forces Commander Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, former Pakistani Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto and boxing manager Don King.

Donaldson was born in El Paso, Texas, and attended Texas Western College for his bachelor's degree and University of Southern California for his graduate work.

Donaldson started as a broadcaster in Dallas in 1959. Soon after, he joined a Washington, D.C., station where he was a weekend anchor and did a weekly interviewing program.

He joined ABC News in 1967 as a Capitol Hill correspondent where he covered news in Vietnam, the Watergate scandal and the impeachment investigation in 1974.

From 1977 to 1989, Donaldson covered Washington as ABC's chief White House correspondent. He also anchored "World News Sunday" for a decade.

DES MOINES, Iowa — An Iowa tailor gave birth to four boys and three girls on Wednesday, listening intently as doctors told her the condition and sex of each child. It was only the second set of septuplets known to be born alive.

One boy was in critical condition, and his siblings were listed as serious.

Bobbi McCaughey's septuplets, born two months early by Caesarean section, weighed from 2 pounds, 5 ounces to 3 pounds, 4 ounces. A medical team of 40 specialists helped with the delivery.

"All the babies are so well-grown, so well-developed, it just strikes me as a miracle," said Dr. Paula Mahone, who helped perform the delivery at Iowa Methodist Medical Center.

It was only the second such birth in the United States. There are no known surviving sets of septuplets in the world.

The first baby — also the heaviest — was nicknamed "Hercules" because he "held all the others up" in a pyramid formation in the womb, Mahone said.

News of the delivery came from grandfather Bob Hepworth, who said his daughter was resting comfortably. "I'm probably one of the proudest grandfathers in this country at this moment," Hepworth said.

Joel, the last born, was in critical condition, his siblings in serious condition. All of them were on ventilators.

"It is not at all unusual for babies delivered at this stage of pregnancy to be in critical condition," said Dr. David Alexander, medical director of Blank Children's Hospital, where the infants will be cared for.

Federal appeals court upholds decision blocking abortion ban

CINCINNATI — Ohio's ban on certain late-term abortions — the first of many such laws enacted across the country — is unconstitutional and cannot be enforced, a federal appeals court has ruled.

U.S. District Judge Walter Rice of Dayton ruled in December 1995 that the law imposed unacceptable burdens on a woman's life, health and right to choose an abortion. His decision was upheld Tuesday in a 2-1 ruling by a three-judge panel of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The procedure, called partial-birth abortion by opponents, involves pulling the fetus partially out of the uterus feet first. The skull is then punctured and the brain suctioned out, causing the skull to collapse and easing passage through the birth canal.

The procedure, performed in the second half odf-pregnancy, is used in 1 percent of the 1.5 million abortions performed each year in the United States.

President Clinton last year vetoed federal legislation that would ban the procedure, saying it allowed no exceptions for a mother's health. While Ohio's was the first such ban, other state legislatures have enacted similar laws, including at least 12 this year alone.

Investigators say Denver's plane crash caused by lack of gasoline

SAN FRANCISCO — A plane flown by singer John Denver crashed into Monterey Bay because it ran out of gas, an investigator from the National Transportation Safety Board told KRON-TV.

NTSB investigators said Denver had tried to switch from one fuel tank to another. He never completed the switch, but investigators say that didn't matter because both tanks were empty.

The 53-year-old singer was practicing takeoffs and landings when his plane nose-dived into Monterey Bay on Oct. 12. Denver was killed instantly.

Investigators retrieved several pieces of the privately built Long EZ aircraft, including the small plane's 150-horsepower, 200-pound engine.

The Federal Aviation Administration had pulled Denver's medical certificate, which is required to fly with a pilot's license, in June 1996 because of his two drunken driving arrests. Tests found no drugs or alcohol in his system.

Kansas Republicans to question Democrats about contributions

TOPEKA — Some Kansas Democrats have been asked to meet with representatives of a congressional committee investigating allegations of fund-raising violations during last year's elections.

Democrats say the questioning is a move by Republicans to divert attention from their own campaign activities in the state last year.

A dozen Kansas Democrats are reported to have received letters asking them to be available for interviews between Wednesday and Dec. 5 in Kansas.

The committee is looking into reports that the national party used Democratic parties in 12 Kansas counties and in 17 other states to funnel almost $315,000 to the state Democratic Party, the Wichita Eagle reported.

Teens crushed at Hanson concert

LEAWOOD, Kan. — Several thousand Hanson fans were crushed against a metal fence in front of a stage Tuesday night, and some fainted as an excited crowd of about 10,000 people pushed toward the platform to get a better view of the trio, officials said.

Leawood police said a few fans caught in the crush had fainted, but none of them appeared to have life-threatening injuries. Organizers of the free event said most of those attending were girls between the ages of eight and 14 and their parents.

Child busted for candy possesion

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — A 6-year-old boy has been suspended for half a day for bringing "drugs" to school — lemon drops bought in a health food store.

The fire department and an ambulance were called after a teacher found first-grader Seamus Morris giving the candies to a fellow pupil on the playground Oct. 29, Shana Morris, his mother, said. She said both boys' parents were urged to take their children to the hospital for tests, despite her assurances the lemon drops were harmless.

John Bushey, an administrator at Taylor Elementary School, said the half-day suspension was consistent with the district's drug policy, which treats unfamiliar products as controlled substances.

Cat in the Hat entertains children for Book Week festivities at Union

ANGELA BUCCIGROSSI
staff writer

Books by Dr. Seuss have entertained and delighted children for years. During Children's Book Week, this week through Saturday, the characters from his books are continuing to encourage children to read.

The K-State Union Bookstore is providing activities to help promote the national week and incorporate this year's theme.

"This year's theme is 'The Cat in the Hat,' because 'The Cat in the Hat' turned 40 years old this year," said Cindie Snyder, marketing and promotions director for the K-State Student Union.

The week is sponsored by the National Children's Book Council and is celebrated by schools, libraries and bookstores across the nation during the week before Thanksgiving.

"Their mission is a dedication to spread the word about children's literature and encourage the joy of reading," Snyder said.

The Union Bookstore is helping celebrate this week by offering activities for children in the Manhattan area.

"The bookstore has invited children from day-care centers in the community and campus to attend the reading activities. The events are also open to the public and anyone who has a child that they would like to have enjoy the experience," Snyder said.

The national theme of Dr. Seuss's "The Cat in the Hat" has been used for most of the Union Bookstore's activities.

"Kids get greeted by 'The Cat in the Hat' and watch a Dr. Seuss video and then someone reads to them," she said.

A Union Bookstore employee, LaToya Farris, volunteered to wear the well-known red and white striped hat from "The Cat in the Hat" and the rest of the character's costume for the week's daily events and readings.

"I come out so they can all meet me. All the kids come running up to give me a hug and get to shake my hand. It's a tall costume, so when they see me they really get excited," Farris said.

Along with getting to meet the popular character, children are also read to by other store employees or special guests.

"We've brought in different people to read, like Mike Lawrence. The kids really loved it because he was right down on the floor reading with them," she said.

Activities are scheduled for every half hour today and Friday from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. The Union Bookstore is also offering a 25-percent discount on all children's books and has stocked the store with a large selection, including many of Dr. Seuss' 47 stories, Snyder said.

"We also have Seuss-wear merchandise, like boxer shorts, T-shirts, ties and even 'The Cat in the Hat' hats," she said.

Crumbling Classroom funds provide improved safety, disabled access

SARA BURDETTE
staff writer

Whether it is a fresh coat of paint on the wall, updated equipment or a new elevator, some of the buildings at K-State are in need of renovation.

The Kansas Board of Regents and the Kansas Legislature have worked together to provide money to regents schools that need to renovate their buildings.

Eric King, director of facilities, said Kansas Development Finance Authority, a state agency, sold $50 million worth of bonds a few years ago to make the project feasible. It sold an additional $100 million for the project, which allowed renovations to continue. The agency distributed the money at different times because the schools didn't need the money all at once, and the bonds have to be used within three years.

Director of Communications for the Regents Barb Conant said the Crumbling Classroom project began a few years ago with the intent to not only renovate the classrooms in need, but to also bring the buildings up to standards with new technology, safety regulations and disabled student accessibility.

Gerald Carter, director of facility planning and university architect, said K-State is committed to working on several buildings throughout the three-year time span.

Carter said a team is responsible for deciding which classrooms will be renovated.

"There are many different classrooms that are in need," Carter said. "The classrooms here go from the 1880s to 1996. When you have that many classrooms that are old, it takes a lot of work to bring them all up to current conditions."

By statute, Carter and other school architects are only allowed to design projects that are less than $500,000. Carter said they design some projects, but they also get a lot of outside help from consulting firms and other sources for projects totaling more than $500,000.

"We work closely with the consultants to make sure projects are how we want them to go," Carter said. "We are part of a team that works with students, faculty and staff to see what they need to teach and administer. We then interpret that and design the best plan to see that they get what they want."

The Crumbling Classroom project has many goals, but one goal it is working on is the King Hall renovation. In King, the plans are to renovate all fume hoods, which are used to absorb fumes that might be harmful to students. Carter said the renovations will begin later this month. The process isn't a quick one and much time has been spent in preparations alone.

> "When you have that many classrooms that are old, it takes a lot of work to bring them all up to current standards."
> • Gerald Carter
> dirctor of facility planning and university architect

"We hired a consulting firm to work with the Department of Chemistry to develop plans and to tear down all existing fume hoods that aren't safe," Carter said.

Carter and the firm hope to have everything operational by September 1998.

In addition to the classroom renovations, Carter said they are also focusing equally on bringing the classrooms up to safety requirements and improve disabled accessibility.

The American Disability Act requires different standards for various facilities. Universities have different requirements than businesses, Carter said.

• K-State's programs must be accessible to disabled students, but the classrooms the programs are taught in do not have to be, Carter said. However, K-State is trying to go beyond having only accessible programs.

"We want to be even more accessible. We have more disabled students and we can provide better accommodations to those students," Carter said.

The Crumbling Classroom project was responsible for the renovations in Calvin Hall. The building now has internal fire stairs, elevators, bathrooms that are easily accessible to disabled students and the latest technology.

"We have plans to do that to a number of buildings around campus," Carter said.

When the money from the Crumbling Classroom project runs out, there will still be changes that need to be made. Carter said the university will have to find money through other avenues when that time comes.

"When the Crumbling Classroom money goes, there will still be people excited to give money to this university," Carter said.

Group issues call to action on college campus alcohol policies

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEWTON, Mass. — A group of college and university presidents says schools that are preaching alcohol abstinence are practicing the opposite by allowing alcohol advertising on campuses and doing little to enforce drinking rules.

In a report sent Tuesday to the presidents of every four-year college in the country, the six-member Presidents Leadership Group complained about liquor stores in college towns that fail to check for proof of age, bars that offer low-price promotions, on-campus advertising for beer and other alcoholic beverages, faculty who take little interest in their students' private lives and lax enforcement of campus drinking regulations.

"College presidents should openly and publicly acknowledge that alcohol and other drug-abuse problems exist," the group said.

Presidents involved in writing the report were Manuel T. Pacheco of the University of Missouri; Robert Carothers of the University of Rhode Island; B. James Dawson of Tennessee Wesleyan College; E. Gordon Gee of Ohio State; Charles A. Hines of Prairie View A&M; and Mary Sue Coleman, University of Iowa.

There have been at least three student deaths this fall related to alcohol abuse, one each at Louisiana State University, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the University of Massachusetts.

"Some of today's students engage in what we call 'industrial drinking,' with the sole purpose of drinking until they can no longer feel anything or they pass out," Coleman said.

"The Presidents Leadership Group has issued a call to action," said William DeJong, director of the Higher Education Center for Alcohol and Other Drug Prevention, where the group is based. "College presidents ... need an overall vision of how the prevention of alcohol abuse should be approached."

Hang up on Slamming

Slamming. By now, most everyone has heard the term – the deceptive practice in which a consumer's local or long-distance service is switched without their knowledge or permission. Chances are good that you or someone you know has been adversely affected by slamming.

Harry Watts

The Federal Communications Commission recently reported that slamming is the No. 1 telephone customer complaint, with the number of complaints tripling since 1994. The folks at Southwestern Bell know a thing or two about slamming. This year, we estimate that we will handle 500,000 slamming complaints — up more than 30 percent from last year.

But we aren't taking slamming sitting down. In June, Southwestern Bell Corporation was the first and only telecommunications company to formally petition the FCC to develop and implement rules that would strengthen laws and penalties against companies that repeatedly slam consumers and businesses.

In September, SBC proposed to the FCC a "three-strikes-and-you're-out" three-part penalty system to penalize telecommunications companies that repeatedly engage in slamming.

We pledge to go the distance to help our customers — and all the telephone customers across the country — combat the frustrations and costs of slamming.

We're protecting you against slamming

Our fight against slamming is just another way Southwestern Bell is striving to be your friendly neighborhood global communications company. For more information on slamming, call 1-800-585-SWBT to receive a free brochure called "Hang Up On Slamming," or visit http://www.swbell.com.

Students, leaders should educate themselves on Lafene issues

The Student health fee is quickly approaching consideration on the floor of Student Senate.

While it's too early to tell whether the fee will increase or decrease, it's not too early for students and student senators to educate themselves about student health care. No one should wait until the night of the final vote to educate themselves about such an important issue. All too often, directors of K-State student services are asked to senate meetings and end up wasting their time fighting off pedantic questions by senators who have not researched an issue.

Two years ago, then-Student Body President Jeff Peterson, for better or worse, set an early tone in the fee considerations by stating fees would not rise. This gave Senate a sense of direction and fueled a grass-roots effort that eventually raised the fee.

Direction setting is strangely missing from this year's crop of student leaders. Student Body President Tim Riemann has concentrated his efforts on a failed attempt at a plus-system, all at the expense of giving Senate some direction on Lafene Health Center and a possible Hale Library student-support fee.

Wake up student leaders. Recognize that the concerns of the average student aren't with tinkering with grading or the Senate by-laws, but with the pressing needs of campus.

Senators and students need to get in touch with each other in the next few weeks and address these issues.

We learned this week that students don't want to pay more money in fees to expand KSU Stadium. That vote, representing 18 percent of campus, emphasizes an aversion on the part of students to paying higher fees.

When Lafene asks for a fee increase, it needs to be scrutinized intelligently. Some fee raises might be necessary this year, but not without substantial research and understanding on the issue by both Lafene and student leaders.

An open letter to a PLASTIC PRINCESS

Dear Barbie,

I read recently that Mattel has decided to give you a makeover, that they're going to give you a breast reduction, a nose job and even a thicker waist. They say it will make you more realistic. They say you won't be the cause of little girls' eating disorders and self-esteem problems anymore. They say you will be a healthier icon for the masses.

I would like to say that I understand, Barbie. I know it's been tough. You just wanted to make people happy, and you have, despite the horrible things that have been done to you.

It's bad enough that some rotten kids have chopped your hair, flung you across rooms and cooked you with magnifying glasses, but you really didn't have a chance at a normal life from the start, did you?

Most of us have only the vagaries of genetics to blame for our most unfortunate physical attributes. You have a marketing staff to blame for yours. They have much to take the blame for. They were probably men, Barbie, so I hope you can forgive them for not understanding what they were doing to you.

How would they know that wrenching your tiny little feet into a permanent high-heel-shoe position would be uncomfortable? Add to that the dinky waist and the monstrously oversized breasts, and you come up with an equation for some long-term back problems.

And what about the fact that you weren't provided with nipples? I say it might be a good thing, Barb. You really didn't have the hips for child-bearing, and Ken seems equally inadequate to the task of fathering a child. I don't know if you even wanted children, but I'm glad you'll always have cousin Skipper to take to the beach.

The worst thing is that even though you had no say in the matter, you're blamed for many bad things by people who should know better. You're blamed mostly for young girls feeling like they're not good enough, even though most child psychiatrists point out that dolls are something through which children's imaginations flow. As Robert Schacter, a New York psychiatrist, was quoted as saying in The Kansas City Star, "(Children) create all kinds of scenarios that really don't have anything to do with (Barbie's) looks."

Besides, you definitely can't be blamed for the rest of American culture in which women are portrayed as ... well, you know how they're portrayed. I don't think that your losing some plastic is going to stem the tide of image-conscious young women adding plastic to their own bodies.

I also don't understand why it is that feminists have such a hard time embracing you, Barbie. Isn't judging someone by their looks a bad thing to do? The fact that you're built like a supermodel/Valkyrie maiden doesn't mean you haven't got some things to say, especially now that you're not saying "Math is hard" anymore.

If other feminists (yes, I consider myself a feminist, thank you) would notice the variety of careers that you've had, they would see that you might have been a very good influence on the women of this generation. You've been a veterinarian, a teacher and even a Marine. Even the more radically minded of the feminism set should be pleased by the fact that the Malibu Dream House, the townhouse and the Corvette were all in your name. I could be wrong, but I don't remember there being a "Wedding Barbie." I just remember that you had the cool jobs, the cool houses, the cool car and that Ken rode in the passenger seat.

I will be honest with you, though- little boys from small towns in the middle of Kansas didn't play with dolls. I was no exception. Sure, there were the killing toys — the G.I. Joes and the Transformers, et al — which, for some reason, were acceptable when a harmless female dress-up toy was not, but we called those toys by name only. The word "doll" was conspicuously omitted and "action figure" put in its place. I may not have owned a Barbie doll, but I can still feel your pain.

I think I would be hurt if someone wanted to change me, Barbie. I've been through that, actually, in different ways. Haven't we all? Maybe it's appropriate that another thing they're taking away from you is your smile.

Temptation of snooze button hard to battle

There are two kinds of people in this world — those who use the snooze feature on their alarm clocks and those who don't. It's a convenient wedge issue, like political parties, that can divide a given population into almost equal halves, and you don't see a lot of crossover between camps.

I am a member in good standing of the first group. Without some pressing reason to get out of bed, I have no qualms about hitting my snooze button four or five times — my dreams intermingling with the news reports of National Public Radio's "Morning Edition" — until I'm able to stay awake throughout the entire nine-minute snooze interval. It's such a civilized way to begin the day.

MAJED KHAN is a graduate student in electrical engineering. You can send e-mail to Majed at majed@ksu.edu.

Devotees of the snooze button often find it baffling that some people would rather not indulge in such a harmless luxury and instead prefer to rise automatically, like Dracula climbing from his coffin, at the first rude tones of the alarm. To me, non-snoozers are the same ascetic, joyless wretches who tell you the best way to get into cold water is just to jump right in. And after you take their advice and plunge in, and your heart seizes up, they say something trite like, "It's not too bad once you get used to it."

Of course, the early risers look upon those preferring to sleep in as slothful and sluggish, as shiftless laggards who waste the best part of the day. But I disagree.

The best part of my day is that brief period of time when the alarm is telling me to get up and I refuse, dropping my hand down onto the clock and silencing it for a few more blissful minutes. The second-best part of my day is when I do it again.

The snooze button, and more broadly, the alarm clock itself, are necessities of life in the modern world, because most people rarely get sufficient sleep these days. The average American now sleeps 20 percent less than a century ago, according to a research group called the Better Sleep Council.

Despite this, the human requirement for sleep — about eight hours a night — has not changed (college students, incidentally, are thought by experts to need about 10 hours of sleep a night — the average student gets six). The result is that on any given morning, one person in four will get out of bed groggy, grumpy and sleep-deprived.

This can have more dangerous consequences than merely a strong urge to nap. Every year, nearly 200,000 motor-vehicle accidents were attributed to sleep deprivation, and about 25,000 of those resulted in serious injuries or death.

Sleep deprivation has been cited as at least a partial cause in some recent, large-scale disasters, including the gas leak at Bhopal, India, the Three Mile Island near-meltdown, the Chernobyl disaster and the grounding of the Exxon Valdez.

I remember once that the entire three-person flight crew on commercial airliners sometimes fell asleep, a bit of relaxed vigilance predictably banned under FAA regulations. In one extreme incident, the flight attendant who was tasked with waking up the pilot also fell asleep.

All this renews my belief in an extra 10 or 20 minutes each morning. Because of my strong views on the subject, I pay attention to snooze button design.

The feature on my clock is really closer to a strip than a button. It's a broad, durable piece of plastic designed around Fisher-Price standards for reduced manual dexterity, so that even the most numbed hand — something you've slept on for hours and reduced to a rubbery, weighted prosthesis — can thump down on the clock and arrest that annoying, minor-key beeping.

But if today's snooze buttons are good, tomorrow's will be better. The design process marches forward.

Gillette's Braun subsidiary has put itself on the forefront of snooze technology with its newest alarm clock. When the alarm goes off, people who feel they aren't yet ready to take on the day can simply wave a hand or foot or pillow in the path of an infrared beam, thus stopping the alarm for eight more minutes.

The best alarm clock, especially for people who have a hard time waking up each morning, uses light instead of sound. Exposure to bright light in the morning resets the body's 24-hour circadian rhythm, which in turn makes people less groggy when they wake and less tired all day. Unfortunately, the device costs about $750, which means it will be a long time before I pick up such an item to replace the $8 Westclox I bought at Wal-Mart.

Researchers in the field have advice for people who don't get enough sleep — always go to bed and wake up at the same time each day, take only short naps in the afternoon and don't try to catch up by sleeping in on weekends.

All this sounds good on paper, but it's much harder to put into practice, especially for students, whose schedules vary widely from day to day. Instead, my advice is this: Sleep as much as you can, and when the alarm goes off, hit snooze and sleep for another nine minutes.

Failed referendum jeopardizes seating

Editor,

Unfortunately for K-State students, the stadium expansion fee referendum failed. Do students understand the consequences of the vote? We as students should expect some changes.

Two-time national champion Nebraska seats its students in the end zone. K-State students have been blessed with great seats, and the referendum was our chance to keep those seats. Don't you think the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics could turn the ICAT section into season-ticket chair backs and generate twice as much revenue? Public demand is there. Don't you think they could find a new section for the general student section, like in the end zone?

Sadly, the student mentality is, "We don't think we should pay for one-third of the expansion, but we'd better have the best seats in the stadium." If students aren't willing to help fund the expansion, we'd better not expect preferred treatment, such as 50-yard line seats.

This Christmas I'm going to ask Santa Claus for student seats on the 50-yard line because I don't think we'll get them any other way.

To Athletic Director Max Urick, Coach Bill Snyder and the football team, you have at least one unconditional fan who will follow you anywhere — even to the bank.

Urick's comments disregard students

Editor,

While reading the article "Students vote down stadium fee" in Wednesday's Collegian, I was appalled to read what Athletic Director Max Urick had to say about K-State students. He is quoted as saying, "We'll always meet our 7,500-seat guarantee to students, but after that we will respond to public demand."

I believe the first and foremost priority of any department at K-State is the student. Urick wants to meet the needs of the public and make money more than he wants students to attend games. I voted yes for the stadium and support the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics' plan to expand the stadium.

Students should still have priority on tickets. If it weren't for the students, there wouldn't be a football team. Our stadium is for college football, not an NFL franchise.

I hope Urick will re-evaluate his priorities.

Proposal put interests of K-State students 1st

Editor,

I would like to thank a part of this university for trying to be the best — the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. We need to at least give these folks some credit. Athletic Director Max Urick and his staff took the initiative to try to create a top-notch football facility that would have no rival. It would benefit fans, all student athletes and the university as a whole.

Instead, the proposal was rejected by us, and we will pay the price. Members of Students for First Things First are excited about the outcome, I guess, because they kept first things first. I, though, have no clue as to what that might be here at K-State. It certainly is not maintaining a reputation as a first-rate academic and research institution.

I don't see anyone proposing any $24-a-year library periodical fee, which I would happily pay if it meant the library might begin to carry any of the six or seven journals it did not have last time I needed them for research. I don't really see anyone putting out the kind of effort our athletic department has, simply in an attempt to be the best.

Maybe Students for First Things First ought to put its grass-roots activism to use in making positive improvements to the university. That is the only goal the athletic department had in mind.

Let's not fault our athletic department for using resources and trying to make positive things happen. How about we follow its example?

Coach Bill Snyder, in every address he makes to the team, insists that the most important career we have at K-State is our academic one. The entire athletic department does keep academics first, and it also tries to make its piece of K-State the best it can be.

CHECKING THE PULSE OF LAFENE HEALTH CENTER

Lafene works to provide quality care for students, maintain good relations

STORY BY BRANDI HERTIG

From the doctors to the way students' complaints are handled, Lannie Zweimiller, Lafene director, said Lafene strives to provide good quality care.

Lafene is home to seven full-time doctors, ranging in age from late 30s to early 50s, Zweimiller said.

Lafene's doctors don't make as much money as doctors in private practices, Zweimiller said. However, they get some fringe benefits, including vacation time.

Zweimiller said college-age patients are generally easier to work with, which is another reason the doctors have chosen to work at Lafene.

"Student health care is a little more relaxed than private practice," he said.

In return, students get less-expensive care than from a private practice, but the quality of care is just as high, he said.

In addition to the doctors, Lafene also has two nurse practitioners and 21 nurses, which includes supervisors, and full- and part-time workers, Catherine Barry, director of nursing, said.

Satisfaction surveys, which are done each semester, have a return rate of about 88 percent. Of those 88 percent, about 95 to 97 percent usually say they are satisfied with Lafene. Those percentages generally stay the same, Zweimiller said.

Parking is the No. 1 complaint Julie Tarara, chair of Student Health Advisory Committee, said she hears about Lafene. Parking for Lafene is allocated by Parking Services, so Lafene has no control over the number of spaces it receives.

"I find it kind of funny that the No. 1 complaint is something we can't do anything about," Tarara said.

SHAC, a committee that looks at issues pertaining to Lafene and counseling services, is composed of 11 students and two faculty members.

"We have a service that's used by a majority of the students. We have to look out for the quality of care," she said.

As a committee composed mostly of students, it obviously has a vested interest in good student health care, she said.

Barry said he also plays a role in handling student complaints.

Sometimes students will have a complaint about charges for services rendered, and occasionally students are correct, Barry said.

In such instances, Barry said the student's chart and billing will be reviewed and adjustments will be made if necessary.

Often, Barry said students don't realize there are charges for certain things, and sometimes the people working with them might forget to inform them.

They try to remember to inform them of the charges, but physicians don't like to get into cost because it's not a grocery store, Barry said. There's the concern that a student won't get a certain test done because of the cost.

"Doctors try to make the decisions for what's best for the students' health," she said.

Complaints about the attitude of staff members are dealt with on an individual basis, Barry said. They've had about 14 since the beginning of the year.

If it's a complaint about a nurse, Barry said she will talk to that person's supervisor, then either handle the situation herself or let the supervisor handle it.

Barry said Lafene always takes complaints seriously.

"Students have the right to expect quality service," she said. "We don't want to minimize something that could be potentially serious."

Health center proposes 10-percent fee increase

STORY BY ASHLEY YOULE

Lafene Health Center is proposing a 10-percent increase in privilege fees. Lafene has a reserve budget that consists of 10 percent of the whole year's expenses.

"It's kind of like a checking account. It's money you have left," said Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene.

"You are constantly taking out of it, and you need money going into it. This reserve is used to maintain fiscal stability and it is equivalent to a two-month operating expense, which includes staff salaries, wages, equipment and supplies for Lafene."

The reserves are there in case any large problems occur.

"If something catastrophic happens, the reserves will allow me to be able to continue to provide these services to the students, at least for a couple of months until we can get back on our feet," he said.

For example, a few years ago a fee reduction caused Lafene to dip into its reserves to keep up, Zweimiller said.

"In order to maintain a 15-percent reserve rate, we would need to cut our expenses or try to generate revenue to offset the loss," he said. "Next year, if we have the same student fee as we do now, with everything else increasing because of inflation, we'll end up having to make up $175,000 in 1999 and over $500,000 in the year 2000."

The money needed to make up for the loss will come from cutting the number of health-care providers as well as cutting the hours of those on staff.

"If this were the case, the students would be affected because it would mean longer waiting lines and fewer visits per day," he said.

Another option Lafene has is to use its reserves until they are depleted.

In addition to those two options,

Lafene director strives to keep low-cost services

STORIES BY MATT KREPS

At Lafene Health Center, Lannie Zweimiller doesn't fight the common cold or the flu. He fights budgets.

Zweimiller said, as director of Lafene, his top priority is keeping costs as low as possible while keeping services as good as possible.

IVAN KOZAR/Collegian

LANNIE ZWEIMILLER is the director of Lafene Health Center. As director, Zweimiller said he tries to keep costs as low as possible while keeping services as good as possible.

An experienced hospital administrator, Zweimiller is also a tried-and-true Kansan. After graduating from Fort Hays State University in 1983 with a business administration degree, he served as administrator in various Kansas towns for both hospitals and mental health units.

Zweimiller came to K-State in 1989.

Since then, he has streamlined Lafene's service and tried to focus its services on the students' needs.

"I think we're doing a real good job of the quality of the patient care and responding to the needs of the students, without trying to be all things to all people," he said.

Zweimiller said he has three main priorities.

"The top one is to maintain services as we're currently providing and keeping costs in line," he said.

Zweimiller said inflation and salary raises mandate gradual increases in fees to keep up with costs. However, he said Lafene does everything it can to keep costs down for students.

He said the fee increase does not add any services, it just keeps Lafene at its current level and would replace

Newton works to maintain Counseling Services' stability

After 17 years as director of University Counseling Services, Fred Newton has seen a lot of change. Now, he just wants to keep the program stable.

Newton moved here from Duke University, where he worked in counseling and was on the psychology faculty.

IVAN KOZAR/Collegian

FRED NEWTON, director of University Counseling Services, has been at Lafene Health Center for 17 years.

Counseling services was in Holtz Hall then.

"The waiting room was actually the exit way to leave Holtz Hall," he said.

The group then moved to Holton Hall until it was renovated in the late 1980s.

At the same time, Health Services, Lafene Health Center's predecessor, opened the second floor of Lafene by eliminating its hospital unit.

"They had beds for overnight patients except, in the late '80s, having an inpatient facility was already sort of passé," Newton said.

The mental health unit of Health Services was also without a director. When the regents conducted a review looking for duplicated services, the mental health unit and counseling services were merged with Newton at the top of the new unit.

Since then, Newton's program has dealt with career choice, academic learning problems, crisis intervention and even psychiatric services as part of his unit's work.

"We're focused on both remedying problems but also providing, in some sense, skills and education," Newton said.

Now counseling services has 10 1/2 full-time jobs filled by 12 counselors and psychologists. The staff

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, said he thinks so.

"Spreading the cost. It's the idea of a fire truck coming to your house — without others helping to pay, you couldn't afford it," he said.

Zweimiller said he has considered alternatives to making all students pay for services while some might not use them, but he said it's a difficult process.

While he said the idea of charging for office visits has been tossed around, there is the danger that those who get sick will get worse because they didn't want to pay a $5 or $10 office-visit fee.

"It's a philosophical thought," he said. "If you run up the cost of the health care, you wonder if that will happen and what are the consequences if you do something different."

Guy Smith, director of the Eriksen Sports Medicine Clinic and medical director of Lafene, said he agreed.

"What we're trying to do is make it easier for people to know where to come to take care of injuries," he said.

He added that part of making sure students know where to go is having those services at Lafene, as opposed to making students go to a hospital or off-campus doctor's office.

Though full-time students are paying $86 per semester, Zweimiller said Lafene needs more money to make sure there is money in the reserves.

Several factors have an effect on Lafene's budget. First, there has been a 13-percent total increase in the cost of running Lafene in the past five years.

While the overall budget has increased, perhaps the biggest change is in the way Lafene is funded.

Five years ago, 25 percent of Lafene's budget was from user fees, in contrast to today, when 34 percent of the budget is from user fees. This means students who are using Lafene's services are paying for them more so than in the past.

Also, there is the issue of pay raises. Both classified and unclassified staff at Lafene receive state-mandated raises of at least 2 percent each year. While this is normal, it can be costly, and paying the state-mandated raises is a contractual obligation.

Lynch said Lafene tries to maintain a 15-percent reserve. Projections show Lafene's reserves might fall below that 15-percent mark.

Lynch said reserves are important because they help pay for expenses during the summer when there are few appointments, but the costs to run Lafene are about the same as during the school year.

Use creativity: Stadium-funding suggestions abound

Now that the KSU Stadium expansion vote has failed, I'm not really sure how I feel about it.

I had a really hard time deciding which way to vote.

You see, at first I was completely in favor of it. I didn't feel like a few extra bucks a semester was too much to ask, especially for something that is obviously in high demand.

In the beginning, I was also pleased with the way the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics tried to inform everyone about what the proposed expansion involved. However, that was when the propaganda started.

First it was a few subtle ads in the Collegian stating, "Vote For Stadium Expansion." That would have been OK, except it didn't stop there.

After that, they put up banners in the K-State Student Union and at the stadium, put players on the big screen asking us to vote for expansion and even got Dick Vitale in the act saying, "Vote for expansion. It's awesome, baby!"

After all of that, I was halfway expecting Sally Struthers to pop up on the big screen with tears in her eyes, pleading, "Please vote for expansion. Do it for the children."

Another thing that bothered me about the whole process was that I felt like the students were being bribed to vote for the expansion.

Through the conditions they set, they basically said, in not so many words, that if you students don't vote for this, we're taking away student seats, and we're raising your ticket prices.

Even though we voted down this expansion proposal, the students have been very supportive of the team, and I really don't think we deserve to be treated like that. After all, there wouldn't be a football team without the students.

Anyway, I'm not going to say how I ended up voting, but I want to state for the record that I am sympathetic toward the athletic department's cause. I want it to know that not all hope is lost, because there are several ways through which it can raise the money that it wanted the students to pay.

In fact, I've come up with 10 ways to do it:

10. Build a canal around the stadium so the only way to get into the parking lot is over a toll bridge.

9. Give Bill Gates an honorary diploma and convince him, as an alumnus, to give a substantial donation.

8. Get corporate sponsors to donate the money and rename the stadium something like, "RCA-IBM-AT&T-CBS-KFC Stadium."

7. Periodically go around to area stores during the holidays and steal the money collected by those Salvation Army Santas with the bells.

6. Get Willie Nelson to do a benefit concert called "Expansion Aid" every year.

5. Follow the example of area high schools and have a cake raffle at halftime of the next basketball game. Charge $50,000 a chance and hope that several people really, really like cake.

4. Kidnap Willie the Wildcat and send a ransom note to each K-State student stating, "Leave $50 on the 50-yard line, or else the cat gets it."

3. Move the stadium into the desert, and charge $1,000 for bottled water.

2. Put a huge swinging watch on the big screen during the season opener next year to hypnotize everybody, then say, "When I count to three, throw all of your money on the field."

1. Sell beer at the games. (I, of course, am serious about this one.)

So you see, stadium expansion is not a lost cause after all. It's just going to take a little ingenuity.

Freshman sensation Annie Wetterhus keeps her all-American hopes alive with a hot performance in winter-like conditions

JOEL WHITE
staff writer

Rain, sleet, snow or hail.

What sounds like the U.S. Postal Service's motto is actually a list of freshman cross country runner Annie Wetterhus' favorite things to run through.

"I love adverse conditions because it weeds out the weaker competition," Wetterhus said.

When Wetterhus stepped up to the starting line last Saturday at the District 5 Championships in Ames, Iowa, the cold weather was just what she ordered.

"There were three inches of snow on the ground, and it was windy," she said. "The temperature was about 20 degrees."

With the snow at her feet and the bitter wind in her face, Wetterhus raced to a third-place finish with a time of 18 minutes, 23 seconds on the 5,000-meter course. By placing third in the field of 161 women, she qualified for the NCAA National Championships in Greenville, S.C., on Monday.

Wetterhus started the race as most freshmen would in their first collegiate championship race — with uneasiness.

"I started out quickly, because it's easier to run with the front runners than to try to play catch-up," she said. "I was kind of scared because I didn't want to go out crazy."

After a competitor tripped next to her at the one-mile mark, Wetterhus said she made the decision to burst to the front of the pack. She found herself in the lead along with Mary Ellen Hill of Bradley and Erin Windler of Missouri, the Big 12 champion.

Windler eventually separated herself from Wetterhus and Hill.

"After Windler broke away, I tried to keep my position," she said. "With about 400 (meters) to go, I went wide on the turn, and Mary passed me.

"With about 100 meters to go, I was like, 'I'm going, I'm going,'" she said. "In my head I was thinking, 'I got third,' like the race was already over. That's the part of the race I wish I would have done better."

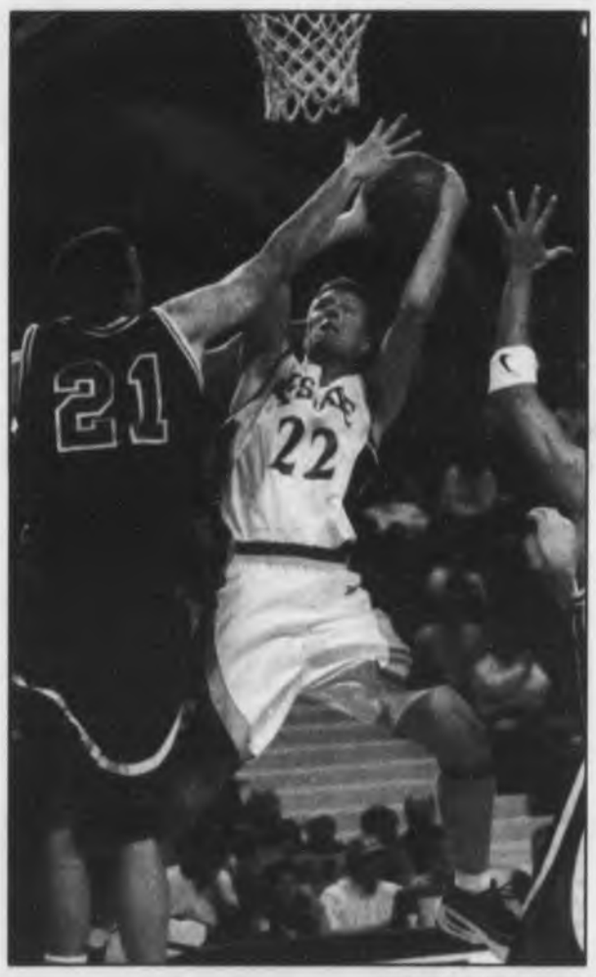
In next week's NCAA National Championship, Wetterhus will have a chance to be K-State women's sixth cross country all-American. Only one other K-State freshman, Cindy Worcester, has been a cross country all-American. Worcester achieved the feat in 1977. To become an All-American, Wetterhus needs to place in the top 25 of all competitors from the United States.

"I would be thrilled if I was to get all-American now," she said. "It would make my goals for later much higher."

Wetterhus said she knows what she needs to do compete well in the NCAA Championships.

"I expect to run aggressively like I did last week," she said. "I can't just think that because it's the nationals it's going to be too hard. If I think that way, I could lose to some people who I shouldn't lose to."

If Wetterhus earns all-America status, it will not be her first time to hold that distinction.



Last year, as a high school senior at Morton High School in Morton, Ill., she was an all-America cross country runner. In addition, she was the class AA 3,200-meter state champion in track.

Wetterhus said she credits part of her success to her willingness to train in harsh weather conditions.

"When it was cold, I would just bundle up and go running outside," she said. "There was one time last year when my parents told me I was not going out because it was 50 below. I had to run on the treadmill that day."

"For some runners, if it's too cold outside, they run inside," she said. "But that isn't how I learned to do it."

Wildcats prepare to face off against unknown opponent

JOEL WHITE
staff writer

When the Long Beach State 49ers roll into Bramlage Coliseum on Saturday night, the Big West opponent will be a relative unknown to the Wildcats.

"We've got a full week to prepare for a team we know very little about, and can't get a film on anyway," Coach Tom Asbury said. "We have plenty to work on without having a detailed scouting report on them."

What Asbury does know is that the 49ers are a team with a 1-0 record. The 49ers squeaked by Florida A&M 53-51 Saturday at Long Beach, Calif.

Junior forward D'Cean Bryant contributed a double-double with 11 points and 10 rebounds in the win.

Freshman forward Grant Stone and sophomore guard Antrone Lee both led the 49ers in scoring with 13 points each. Stone also pulled down nine rebounds.

The 49ers had only seven assists in the game.

Something the 49ers lack is depth. The team had only seven players contribute 10 minutes or more against Florida A&M.

In the Cats' only game, which was a 93-74 win over Western Carolina, the team had 10 players contribute at least 10 minutes.

Asbury said his team is deep — almost too deep in some positions.

"To be truthful, we're almost too deep in a couple of places," he said. "We're not going to be able to find enough minutes for everybody who's really deserving."

The Cats' depth is primarily centered around the point-guard and off-guard positions.

Against Western Carolina, sophomore Duane Davis, freshman Adam Lopez and junior Chris Griffin each saw action at point guard. Griffin also played the off-guard position along with junior Ayome May, senior Aaron Swartzendruber and sophomore Josh Reid.

"Generally speaking, when you have quality depth, guys have to do the things they don't always like to do the most like defend and rebound," Asbury said. "Everybody's got to dig down and play a little bit harder and a little bit smarter and do the things that aren't quite as glorified."

No Cat guard stood out among the rest statistically against Western Carolina, yet they all played well. Lopez led the Cat guards in scoring with 11 points. Davis and May scored 10 points each. Leading the guards in steals was Davis with three, while Swartzendruber led the guards with six assists and five rebounds.

"One of the blessings of having depth is in the event you get somebody hurt," he said. "Hopefully, it doesn't impact your team too much."

The positions in which the Cats have the least depth are the center and power-forward positions. Juniors Manny Dies, Shawn Rhodes and Ty Sims played the only substantial minutes at those positions against Western Carolina.

Fortunately for the Cats, Dies and Rhodes stepped up big time against Western Carolina. Dies powered his way to a double-double with 20 points and 11 rebounds. Rhodes chipped in 10 points and grabbed six rebounds.

"Manny and Shawn are really going to have to do a nice job for us," Asbury said. "But they're juniors, and it's time they step up and do it."

1-9 Iowa State coach expects to rebound

SAM FELSENFELD
staff writer

On paper, K-State's game at Iowa State on Saturday looks like a breeze.

After all, Iowa State is 1-9, coming off a 77-14 loss at Nebraska and losing by more than 25 points a game.

Meanwhile, the Wildcats are 9-1, coming off their first win in 13 years over Colorado and winning by 20 points a game.

However, Iowa State coach Dan McCarney is confident the Cyclones will be able to bounce back after last week's loss to the Cornhuskers.

"Embarrassment can be a strong motivator," he said. "I think this team will bounce back Saturday."

In order to spoil the Cats' hopes of an Alliance Bowl berth, the Cyclones will have to step it up on defense.

Through 10 games, they've given up an average of 439.8 yards and 46.5 points a game. While K-State will try to run its balanced offense — the Cats gain 213.8 yards a game on the ground and 154.2 in the air — the Cyclones will try to avoid displaying the defensive balance they've shown this season.

Iowa State is relatively poor against both offensive phases, giving up 240.8 yards rushing and 199.0 yards passing per game.

The Cyclones will also have to come out strong early in the game, something they couldn't do against the Huskers. They trailed 35-7 after the first quarter and were down 63-7 at the half.

"Nebraska is absolutely a truly amazing football team," McCarney said. "We ran into an avalanche in the first half. It was kind of a men and the boys game there at Lincoln, Nebraska, and that's as honest as I can be about it."

Iowa State's opponents have scored more points in the second quarter, 150, than in any other this season and the first-quarter tally, 118, is still better than the other two. The average halftime score in an Iowa State game this season is Opponent 27, Cyclones 11.

The Cats, meanwhile, score in the same pattern. K-State's top quarter is the second and the Cats average a 20-5 halftime lead.

Offensively, the Cyclones' diverse attack causes concern for K-State coach Bill Snyder.

Iowa State is led by quarterback Todd Bandhauer, wide receivers Tyrone Watley and Ed Williams, and running back Darren Davis.

"I talked with our coaches (Sunday) morning about the diversity of their offense. This is probably the best balanced offense we will have faced all year," Snyder said.

Bandhauer leads the Big 12 with 20 touchdown passes and is second in the conference with 163 completions, 334 attempts and 2,250 yards. At one point this season, he went 140 consecutive attempts without throwing an interception, an Iowa State record.

"Bandhauer is probably as good a throwing quarterback as we'll face this year. He zips the ball around quite well, makes good decisions and knows and understands their offense," Snyder said.

Watley leads the Big 12 in receptions and receiving yards, and this past week, he tied a school record with his eighth touchdown pass. Williams, first-team all-Big 12 last season, ranks fourth in the conference with 3.9 receptions per game. He needs 198 receiving yards to become Iowa State's leader.

Davis, the brother of two-time 2,000-yard rusher Troy Davis, is showing signs that football skills run in the family. He needs 61 yards rushing against the Cats to top 1,000 yards for the season.

"Darren Davis is every bit the same player his brother was. I really believe that," Snyder said. "He can do some things his brother couldn't, no offense to Troy."

Wins against Longhorns, Aggies would help NCAA Tournament chances

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

What seemed like a certainty two weeks ago is now questionable.

On Nov. 6, K-State's volleyball team had won nine out of 10 matches, had an 18-7 record and a 9-4 conference mark. But consecutive losses to Oklahoma, Nebraska and Colorado have put the Wildcats in a position where they probably need to win at least one match this weekend to make their second-consecutive NCAA Tournament appearance.

"We win Friday night, odds are we're in the tournament for sure," head coach Jim McLaughlin said.

That will be no simple task for the Cats. They go on the road to play No. 10 Texas on Friday, and No. 17 Texas A&M on Saturday. This is the final road trip of the season for the Cats. K-State ends the regular season Nov. 28 and 29 at home against Missouri and Iowa State.

The Longhorns come in with only one conference loss in 16 matches, a 3-0 loss to the Aggies on Nov. 12. Texas A&M is not far behind. The Aggies have a 12-4 conference mark, and are tied with Nebraska for third place in the league.

This weekend is similar to Oct. 24 and 25 for the Cats. Texas A&M and Texas came into Ahearn Field House for matches with the Cats — a weekend K-State split.

When the Aggies visited the Wildcats, they were 14-4 and ranked No. 12 in the nation. The Cats dominated A&M, handing the Aggies their worst loss since 1990, beating them 15-6, 15-2, 15-2. K-State kept the Aggies to a negative .031 attack percentage for the match.

Since that October meeting, though, Texas A&M has won six of seven matches, with its only loss in five games against Texas Tech. In their last two matches, the Aggies have beaten the Longhorns and Oklahoma by a 3-0 score, two teams the Cats are a combined 0-3 against this season.

The Longhorns are in the driver's seat to win the Big 12. Before losing to the Aggies, they had won 15 consecutive matches, losing only six games total during their streak. The Longhorns recovered from their setback to beat the Sooners 3-0 last time out.

The match between the Horns and Cats in Manhattan seemed almost secondary to the "homecoming" of former K-State coach Jim Moore, now the Texas bench boss. But a match had to be played, and Texas got the upper hand, winning in three close games by a 15-13, 15-11, 15-8 count.

K-State is looking to get into more of a rhythm than it had in last weekend's sweep by Nebraska and Colorado.

"Our rhythm has been up and down," McLaughlin said.

McLaughlin also said the team has been working on passing. Nebraska served several short balls, forcing K-State out of its normal offensive rhythm by forcing the Cats to make short passes to setter Devon Ryning.

"When we pass, that dictates the whole rhythm of the offense," McLaughlin said.

Hollywood insults viewers with 'The Jackal'

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Movie Review

After sitting through the movie "The Jackal," one begins to wonder if the title character, an international assassin played by Bruce Willis, could have been hired to shoot the movie's director, Michael Caton-Jones.

"The Jackal" is a 1-1/2-hour, $60-million insult. All of the stock Hollywood devices are here: ultra-violence, Communists, no plot, no characters, gay-bashing and the U.S. government.

This year's model, based on the 1973 movie "The Day of the Jackal," is something about the Russian mafia trying to get revenge on the United States by hiring Willis (a.k.a. the "Jackal") to assassinate the director of the FBI. To protect itself, the FBI releases the Irish Declan Mulqueen (Richard Gere), who has known the Jackal, to help them follow Willis' plans and to spot him in public before something bad goes down. Wuzza, wuzza, wuzza.

Throw into the mix the Russian agent, Valentina Koslova (Diane Venora), who would be a typical Hollywood babe if it weren't for her face injury, and Gere's former love, Isabella (Mathilda May), who has since set up shop with a husband and kids. Gere, whose Irish accent occasionally breaks down, is torn between the two women. And so are we, because we never understand either woman, their motivation or why they would care about some Irish man who was rightfully imprisoned.

The FBI, which is personified by Sidney Poitier (his talent wasted, as usual) as Carter Preston, lets Gere run loose to track down the Jackal. And, truthfully, it is in these scenes we realize the Jackal is one of the most homoerotic action movies made in a long time.

The kissy-kissy glances Willis and Gere trade each other throughout the movie are simply unexplainable. The Jackal couldn't look more gay in this movie if they had cast him as Harvey Fierstein, except he goes from preppie gay to surfer gay to military gay to businessman gay in a variety of bad disguises.

In one scene, the Jackal even kisses a man at a gay bar in hopes of using him for cover later in the movie (oh, Hollywood, you are so shocking). Apparently, Manhattan, Kan. audiences are willing to accept 50 or so people getting shot in the head, but nearly everyone at the Friday night late show gasped at the kiss. And when the gay man (no name or character necessary, as usual) is shot by Willis later on, several in the audience expressed relief. This revelation alone scares me more than the movie.

Further complicating the movie is its insistence on using an array of exotic international cities for locales. Willis spends half the movie just driving to and fro in a Ford minivan. Product placement, anyone?

So, we're never quite sure where anyone is during some crucial scenes, especially the final assassination attempt in Washington, DC. And when Isabella walks in to save the day, all similarities to a real plot are destroyed (we are told she lives out in the country somewhere).

"The Jackal" could have easily played as parody, but it takes itself so seriously. Even an early scene that poorly rips off "The Untouchables" infamous bat-over-the-head sequence is as humorously pathetic as it is gory.

Still, the homosexual subtext could have been used for comic effect with some relish; instead, the joke's on the movie and those who paid admission.

'Space Ghost's Musical Bar-B-Que' provides humor

MARY RENEE SMITH
staff writer

Music Review

It's late at night. There is nothing on television. You're flipping channels, and you come upon Cartoon Network. "Cartoon Planet" is on. It's sick and twisted, and you like it. You're laughing hard. You can't breathe.

Now, you can have all that fun on a compact disc. You don't have to be a big fan of the show to enjoy the CD — for that matter, you don't have to have ever seen the show.

"Space Ghost's Musical Bar-B-Que" is a hoot. It's true humor that can be appreciated by all ages. These all-original songs will bring you to tears of laughter. There is no way to sum up the kind of humor on the CD. You have to hear it to believe it.

A bit of television background for those of you who don't know Space Ghost. The liner notes explain it this way: "Space Ghost is a swaggering '60s superhero, who, in true '90s fashion, has reinvented himself as an intergalactic talk-show host on Cartoon Networks' 'Space Ghost Coast to Coast.'"

On the paired show "Cartoon Planet," Space Ghost has two sidekicks, Zorak, a 6-foot space mantis, and Brak, a dim-witted space pirate. The liner notes describe the music created by the three as "the carefree scourge of all things sophisticated for astonished viewers everywhere."

The CD contains 25 of these bizarre songs along with 13 comic interludes. The songs vary in style including rock, rap, reggae, pop, jazz and blues, successfully mocking all the musical styles in the process.

Space Ghost gives the listener the skinny on himself and his show with "The Cartoon Planet Story."

"Zingor" is Zorak's blues tribute to a lost love. "I've got ants in my pants as I do the mating dance For Zingor, Zingor, Zingor" and "Hey, waiter! What's the poop? There's a fly in my soup! Reminds me of ... Zingor."

"Don't Touch Me" is Brak's mockery of M.C. Hammer complete with vocal boombox background. There is even a "Cartoon Planet" rendition of "The Song That Doesn't End."

The unique voices of each of these characters is just enough to keep you laughing without being annoying or getting in the way of the humor.

At a time when clean humor on CD is hard to find, "Space Ghost's Musical Bar-B-Que" delivers a dose of wit and timing that can't be beat.

Woman promises God to feed pigeons

PASADENA, Calif. — A woman whose pigeon-feeding ran afoul of neighbors has agreed to limit where she feeds the birds.

Jacqueline Hagopian, 57, can feed pigeons in public parks and on private property where she has permission, defense attorney William Dailey said Tuesday. That allows her to feed birds in her own front yard but not on the sidewalk or in the street.

A 1964 ordinance forbids feeding pigeons on public streets. The city hasn't dropped its complaint against Hagopian, but the case was put on hold, Dailey said.

Hagopian said last month she promised God she would take care of pigeons.

"I told God, I promise you, I'm going to take care of them as long as I live, and I'm going to keep my promise," she said.

Stolen ambulance crashes into hotel

GLENDALE, Wis. — There are motor inns — and there are motors that unfortunately end up in the inns.

A stolen ambulance crashed through the wall of a vacant first-floor room at the Exel Inn early Monday, then the driver walked in and asked for a room.

Motel manager Sharon Hacker said the clerk called police instead.

The woman at the wheel apparently had been in a fight with a fellow employee of a nearby nursing home, police officer Joel Dhein said. Paramedics were at the home on an unrelated call, and the woman jumped in their unattended vehicle and drove off.

She careened into the motel parking lot and struck three guests' cars before hitting the wall, police and Hacker said. The 37-year-old woman, who was not seriously hurt, was arrested.

Woman charged with animal cruelty for piercing ear of rescued baby deer

HARRISONBURG, Va. — A woman who tried to improve upon nature was ordered to pay the veterinary bill for a fawn whose ears she pierced.

An animal-cruelty charge against Bettie Phillips was suspended Tuesday after she insisted she meant no harm. Phillips, 54, of Hiddenite, N.C., found the 2-month-old deer near a highway in western Virginia on July 3 as she drove to visit her daughter in Harrisonburg.

Later that day, she and her daughter pierced its ears by pushing the posts of two small cross-shaped earrings through the thin flesh of the deer's ears about one-half inch from their tips.

Police found the deer two days later in the back of Phillips' Ford Explorer while the two women were shopping. It was slightly dehydrated and its ears were inflamed and infected, said Ned Gentz, chief veterinarian at the Wildlife Center of Virginia.

The animal was treated with antibiotics and released into the wild on Aug. 20.

"I thought it would be pretty," Phillips said at the time. "You can get a little kid's ears pierced. What's the difference between a person's (ears) and a baby deer's?"

She and her daughter, Gerry Rae Beckner, 33, pleaded guilty Tuesday to transporting wildlife without a valid permit.

Judge William Heatwold ordered Phillips to pay $250 to the Wildlife Center and ordered Beckner to do 20 hours of community service.

Cruelty charges against both will be dismissed if they stay out of trouble for six months.

IRAQ

Primakov invited Albright and the foreign ministers of France and Britain to this traditionally neutral city to detail a plan he worked out with Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz for resolving the latest crisis in the Persian Gulf.

"A certain program has been worked out that allows us, we think, to avoid ... a confrontation, to avoid the use of force and achieve a settlement," he said.

Even as Clinton strengthened American military power in the Gulf, U.S. officials encouraged Russia and France to use their influence with Hussein.

Defense Secretary William Cohen planned to visit the United Nations today and meet with U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan on the Iraq situation.

Earlier this week, National Security Adviser Sandy Berger reiterated that Iraq is permitted by the United Nations to sell some of its oil abroad with the proceeds used to import food and medicine, thereby easing the effect of the sanctions.

Hussein expelled Americans serving on U.N. teams of inspectors seeking to ensure that Iraq was not producing or stockpiling weapons of mass destruction. The United Nations responded by withdrawing all weapons inspectors from the country, leaving only a skeletal staff in place.

Iraq has charged that the American inspectors were spies. It also has threatened to shoot down U.S. planes on surveillance flights, but two flights have been made without incident since the crisis began.

Albright, Primakov, Cook and French Foreign Minister Hubert Vedrine met at the United Nations' European headquarters, the Palais des Nations.

Primakov has conferred by telephone with Chinese Foreign Minister Qian Qichen, and Qian sent a Geneva-based ambassador to represent China, the fifth permanent member of the U.N. Security Council, at the meeting.

Russia all along has sought to avert a military strike on Iraq, much as Primakov tried unsuccessfully to stop the Bush administration in 1991 from attacking Iraq after the occupation of Kuwait.

The British have sided with the Clinton administration, which has reserved all its options, including military ones.

Clinton ordered a second aircraft carrier to the Gulf and strengthened the U.S. air power there.

includes a biofeedback specialist and an alcohol and drug specialist.

Newton said the staff is somewhat special in the counseling world because most members have teaching and research appointments in other areas of the college.

"We do research that's fairly focused towards practical usage," he said.

This kind of practical usage includes learning difficulties, binge drinking, sports psychology, eating disorders and evaluations of the services themselves.

Counseling services also helps with enrollment and retention of students by helping students handle stress, choose study areas and avoid test anxiety.

Newton said he thinks counseling services is set up in a beneficial way for students.

He said the health fee provides a low-cost way to finance the service and still make quality care available.

The fee is about $1 per credit hour, Newton said. He is asking for a 7.5-percent raise in the next two years, which would be less than eight cents.

For that fee, students have a range of services available. Newton said a session with a counselor would cost about $100 for one hour in the public sector. A career assessment would cost about $250, whereas it costs about $20 for the materials at counseling services. Biofeedback costs $25 per semester for use of the equipment and a personal counselor.

"I can't even begin to tell you what that would begin to cost in a hospital," Newton said.

Newton said he looks at the service as an insurance policy. One use during college would pay back students' investment, he said.

"And if you didn't make use of it, it was available for you," he said.

DIRECTOR

aging equipment expected to fail in coming years.

"We have to consider the possibility that we're going to have some failures in major equipment," he said. "That's the way you do budgeting, you fund for perhaps the replacement of capital items."

Zweimiller's second priority is the possible move from Lafene to Mercy Health Center on Sunset Avenue.

He said the opportunity might present itself down the road.

"I do support a relocation if done, given some time to plan it out well," Zweimiller said.

He also said he does not want the students to bear the cost of the move. He said the state and university should provide the primary funding because they are promoting the move more than the students.

Zweimiller's third priority is positioning Lafene for the next step in student health care.

Specifically, he said Lafene needs to prepare to integrate with managed-care programs students might be involved in as their primary health insurance.

"We do need to constantly be testing, surveying the population, listening to our communities, listening to see what their needs are, how they change, and responding to those changes," he said.

Zweimiller said Lafene has a mission to its service.

"I think it's to be sensitive to the students' needs in order to keep them healthy and to educate them on healthy lifestyles — wellness," he said. "I think that prevention is our major role."

BABIES

Alexander said it could be a few days before doctors determine how developed the lungs were. They could not immediately determine whether any of the infants were identical.

"I would ask that all believers across the world join us in praying for Bobbi and for the babies that their health will continue and only improve," Hepworth said.

McCaughey was awake during the birth, and doctors told her the condition of each child.

> As we delivered each baby and saw the size of the babies and how vigorous they were, we were very, very happy.
> • Dr. Paula Mahone, doctor who helped deliver the septuplets

"As we delivered each baby and saw the size of the babies and how vigorous they were, we were very, very happy," Mahone said.

From the delivery room, the babies were taken to an adjacent stabilization room, where their conditions were assessed, and then to the neonatal unit.

Bobbi McCaughey (pronounced McCoy) was in her 31st week of pregnancy, at least three weeks beyond the point doctors consider viable for fetuses. A typical pregnancy lasts 40 weeks.

The decision to proceed with the delivery was made Tuesday night as Bobbi McCaughey, whose due date was in mid-January, was experiencing contractions. She had been confined to a bed since the ninth week of the pregnancy and had been hospitalized since Oct. 15.

"She had had it, so we delivered," Mahone said.

Bobbi McCaughey, who left her tailor job before giving birth to her first child nearly two years ago, had been taking the fertility drug Pergonal. The drug had been prescribed because she and her husband, Kenny, had trouble conceiving daughter Mikayla, who's almost 2 now.

The birth of septuplets is rare and serious complications are common. The only other known set to be born alive was in September in Saudi Arabia. Six of those children died, according to hospital officials there.

The last set of septuplets born in the United States was in May 1985 in Orange, Calif., to Samuel and Patricia Frustaci. In her 28th week of pregnancy, one was stillborn, three died within 19 days of birth and the remaining three had medical and developmental problems.

Multiple births typically do not go the full term, but doctors wanted Bobbi McCaughey's pregnancy to continue for as long as possible.

In the tiny town of Carlisle, about 10 miles southeast of Des Moines, many of the 3,200 residents gathered around televisions to watch the developments Wednesday.

"It's a double-double-double blessing plus one," said Kay Thompson, a next-door neighbor of the McCaugheys.

Bobbi McCaughey and her husband, a billing clerk at an auto dealership, were advised early in the pregnancy that aborting some of the fetuses would increase the chance of survival for the others.

But Kenny McCaughey, 27, said their religious beliefs would not allow any of the fetuses to be aborted.

"God gave us those kids," he said last month. "He wants us to raise them."

EDUCATION

topics they discuss, Wright said.

"We will go speak to anybody to educate them on how to protect themselves. We create an understanding so students will know what to do if they are ever in a situation where someone they know, or they themselves, has HIV," Wright said.

In addition to the SHAPE members going to speak to groups, the Health Education Department has many other community activities throughout the year.

"We put on programs for a safer spring break, in addition to the Great American Smoke-out, AIDS Awareness Week and many more," Currie said. "What we want students to know is that there is no cost for these services. We will come speak to any group, class or organization, and our programs are flexible and suitable for students of all ages," she said.

By the year 2010, all people will either know someone who has HIV or have it themselves, Wright said.

"Some people may feel these presentations are a waste of time and they think they know it all, but they really don't have any idea. Have us come speak to your group, and we'll open your eyes," she said.

FEE

Lafene will have to look at other sources of revenue.

"This year, students can come and have an office visit for free," Zweimiller said. "But if we don't get the 10-percent increase, we will have to look into charging students each time they have an office visit."

The Imagination Workshop

The Imagination Workshop
A production of KANU, the University of Kansas, Lawrence.
Saturday, November 22, 8 p.m.
Public: $18, Seniors: $16, Students: $9

Let your imagination run wild for a night of high-energy laughs from this Lawrence based group. With kooky sound effects and on-the-edge excitement of live radio, the Imagination Workshop transmits more bizarro humor than a Jim Carey festival.

Recent shows have poked fun at the Clinton health care program, the O.J. Simpson trial, the controversy over gays in the military, the 1996 presidential campaign, the fall TV season, and popular films. Enjoy the unique humor of this team of zany Kansans when the Imagination Workshop spins into Manhattan.

Lilya Zilberstein
Sunday, November 23, 3 p.m.
Public: $16 Seniors: $14 Students: $8

Her repertoire ranges from Bach to Shostakovich and the list of conductors and orchestras she has collaborated with reads like a Who's Who of classical music.

Zilberstein, has performed with the Chicago Symphony, the Saint Louis Symphony, Buffalo Philharmonic and London Symphony just to name a few. She adds McCain to her long list of concert hall triumphs in a program featuring Brahms' Paganini Variations and Rachmaninoff's Corelli Variations.

Student dies after long health battle

Jason Christiensen died around 11:30 Wednesday morning of congestive heart failure while en route to the University of Kansas Medical Center.

Christiensen was a 22-year-old junior in kinesiology at K-State when he was diagnosed with primary pulmonary hypertension (PPH) last May. He had been in and out of hospitals for the past week because of complications from his disease and the medicine he was taking. Christiensen had also been receiving oxygen 24 hours a day for several months.

PPH is a rare disorder in which the small and medium pulmonary arteries become smaller. The remaining arteries force the heart to work harder. In turn, the lungs do not receive enough blood supply, and the body receives less oxygen.

There is no known cause for the disease, and the only treatment available for Christiensen was a double-lung transplant. A successful transplant would allow the heart to repair itself.

Christiensen became a familiar face, thanks to friends and family who were attempting to help raise money for his double-lung transplant.

Friends and family had formed a committee to help raise the $234,000 needed for the transplant, which was expected to be done in August 1998. They raised money through donations, fund-raisers and collection jars placed in area businesses, including several in Aggieville.

Since being diagnosed, Christiensen had been living with his family in Abilene, Kan., where he had grown up.

While attending Abilene High School and Cloud County Community College, Christiensen had been active in track. He won state in the triple jump his senior year in high school.

Christiensen's family was unavailable for comment Wednesday, but a spokesman for the family said the family was grateful for all the support and donations they received for Christiensen. He also said there would be a memorial service in the near future, to be announced this weekend or early next week.

Funeral plans will also be announced at a later date.

As K-State administrators, faculty and students consider funding options to sustain the credibility of Hale Library's resources, the KSU Foundation, along with the Kansas Legislature and the student dollar, are in the middle of the talk.

Gary Hellebust, president and CEO of the KSU Foundation, said this is fine with him.

Additional employees who help garner financial support from alumni said expectations of the Foundation are coupled with an understanding of the challenges they face, Hellebust said.

Raising money is difficult, Hellebust said, for an area of the university like the library, which, unlike the College of Engineering, cannot claim any graduates who are willing to give money year after year to the program that helped earn them a degree of financial success after they left K-State.

"It is tough sledding because everybody has loyalty to a certain aspect of the university," he said.

K-State's administration has not made a formal request to the Foundation to initiate a fund-raising project with a specified dollar amount in mind, which must be done before the fund-raising process starts.

President Jon Wefald said he expects a request will be made because maintaining research resources such as journals and serials is a high priority.

"We are just going to make a concerted effort, and we think we can do a very good job of explaining this need to our constituents around the country," Wefald said.

If and when the President's office approves a fund-raising project, it will be submitted to the KSU Foundation Development and Prioritization Committee.

If the committee decides the project is feasible and is approved, it will be submitted to the Foundation Executive Committee for final approval.

A key component of the approval process is deciding whether the administration's request is feasible, something that will attract considerable attention from the Found-ation if a request from the administration is made.

To make that decision, a feasibility study is conducted by the Foundation along with a private-consulting firm. Hellebust said doing a feasibility study usually costs between $30,000 and $50,000 dollars.

The purpose of the study is to get a feel for how much financial support the Foundation can get from donors for a fund-raising project, said Mike Smith, vice president of development for the KSU Foundation. The Foundation provides a list of possible donors to the consulting firm, then the firm sends consultants to the homes of prospective donors throughout the country to interview them. The consultants come

Enhancement should begin by March '98

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

Renovations to the K-State Student Union could begin by March, Union Director Bernard Pitts said at the Student Senate meeting on Thursday.

During open period, Pitts informed student senators of the timetable for the construction project, which is estimated to cost $8.7-million including debt services.

Though construction wouldn't start until March, efforts leading to the beginning of the project would begin in earnest when the spring semester begins, Pitts said.

"We expect to go out on the first of January to sell the bond, and we're looking at about at an $8.7 million bond. The general contractor will be identified in late January, and if everything goes well, we will actually begin the renovation project around March," he said.

The first three months of the project would be dedicated to what Pitts called life-safety improvements, including fire walls, stairwells and other changes that would bring the building up to code.

The Union Food Court would be next on the list, Pitts said and would take approximately 10 months to complete. Pitts said Union Stateroom services should not be interrupted during the project.

"We plan on building a construction wall down in the southern part of the room. The general contractor will begin building a new food court then," he said. "What we want people to do is continue to use our current pattern, come into the Stateroom and get their items, then go back out of the Stateroom and south to some temporary dining facilities that we will create."

Following completion of food court changes, Pitts said the Union Bookstore would be next on the renovation list. The six-month stage of the project would relocate bookstore services, moving textbook areas to the K, S and U Ballrooms and other supplies to other, smaller rooms in the Union.

Pitts said satellite stores would also be established in some campus buildings to sell some bookstore items. The goal,

What else happened at Student Senate?

Resolution 97/98/49 passed 43-6-1.
This resolution, sent to Gov. Bill Graves and President Jon Wefald, among others, requests that Graves include a one-time, $2-million grant for Hale Library periodicals in his next set of budget recommendations.

K-State's budget request for the upcoming fiscal year did not include an increase in funding for Hale Library. Governmental Relations Committee member Elizabeth Gregory said a predicted surplus in next year's budget would allow the governor to consider such a grant.

Arts and Sciences Sen. Mandy Reese, debating in favor of the resolution, said the state should pay for library shortfalls.

"It's time for the state to start picking this up," Reese said. "We keep sticking ourselves with all of these privilege fees, and we're turning into a private institution. It's not our job to pay this."

Resolution 97/98/48 passed 49-1.
This resolution endorsed modifications proposed for north Manhattan Avenue between Bluemont Avenue and Claflin Road. The proposed changes include reducing vehicular traffic lanes from four to three, using the center lane as a left-hand turn lane, creating bicycle lanes on both sides of the street and placing center pedestrian islands in "non-turn" areas to allow for safe pedestrian crossing.

Resolution 97/98/47 passed 51-0.
This resolution stated Senate's endorsement of the City of Manhattan's Bicycle Master Plan project. The plan includes key proposals for the creation of bicycle paths and parking racks in Manhattan. Some money for the bicycle accommodations would come from the City/University Tax Fund, funded by a one-percent sales tax applied on all campus purchases.

Bill 97/98/76 passed 55-1.
This bill reviews the privilege fee for the Office of Student Activities and Services out of its regular cycle to reallocate $18,000 within the OSAS budget to pay for professional auditing services from the K-State Office of Internal Audit. The money would provide for an auditor to examine student privilege fees.

Senate also passed various bills approving financial allocations for several campus groups for special projects, including speakers and traveling expenses. Groups include the Native American Student Body, Chinese Student and Scholar Association, Muslim Student Association, KSU Student Chapter of Project Management Institute, Students for Peace and Justice, KSU Students for the Right to Life, Campus Crusade for Christ, College Republicans and Environmental Professionals.

Lafene Health Center submits 3 budgets for privilege fee committee consideration

STORY BY BRANDI HERTIG

In its presentation to the Privilege Fee Committee, Lafene Health Center presented three possible budgets, at the request of the committee.

Budget level A, which is what Lafene recommends, calls for a 5 to 10 percent increase in the student fee.

The proposal states that it is not an enhancement budget, but the expenditures are required to maintain current operations, replacement of computer hardware in fiscal year 1999 and providing funds for Disabled Student Services.

The 10-percent increase Lafene is asking for would not allow the center to grow, Lannie Zweimiller, Lafene director, said. The rate of inflation figured into the fee is about 3 percent per year.

Budget level B would maintain the current fee level. Zweimiller said in this scenario, Lafene would possibly have to cut one physician position, funding for computer-hardware replacement and funding for Disabled Student Services.

Budget level C is a 5 percent fee reduction. In this case, Zweimiller said two physicians would be cut, and funding for computer hardware and Disabled Student Services would also be cut.

He projects that with this plan, Lafene would not have enough money to get though fiscal year 2000.

Compared with other schools with populations comparable to K-State's, Zweimiller said the student health fee is about the same, not higher or lower.

Lafene is also looking at ways to cut costs on its own, Zweimiller said.

There's a position that has been left unfilled, and the computer system is cost-effective. Zweimiller said Lafene tries to buy equipment through the bidding process and that they try to practice good management.

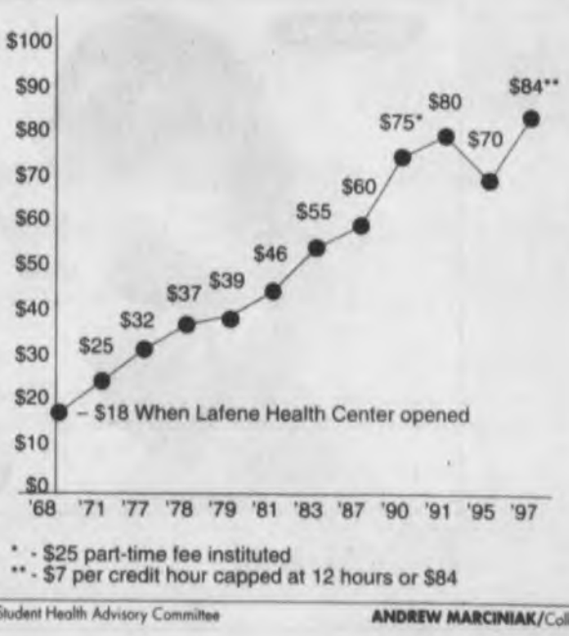
Julie Tarara, chair of the Student Health Advisory Committee, said students might think the fee is costly because they might not realize that it's for a two-year period.

The Student Health fee is reviewed every two years, rather than every year.

The 10-percent increase covers the inflation rate, Tarara said. She said it is not too much to ask because it's for a two-year period.

Tarara said Lafene receives no state funding, so it is run completely on student funds.

"Our service is as good as we make it," she said.



Lafene is now operating at about a 33-percent user fee and 66-percent student health fee, Zweimiller said.

The user fees includes lab work, medical supplies, prescriptions, physical therapy and x-rays.

Costs for those are figured at about half what students could expect to pay in the community for the same services or prescriptions, Zweimiller said.

Inflation prompted increases

Lafene Health Center has had to increase the revenue received through student fees 11 times since its opening in 1968. The increases were largely to help keep up with the continual inflation rate in the health care industry. The amounts shown are per semester.

RCPD A.D. enters innocent plea to 1 misdemeanor count of DUI

MANHATTAN, Kan. — According to court records made public today, the assistant director of the Riley County Police Department has entered a plea of not guilty to one misdemeanor count of driving under the influence.

Larry B. Woodyard, who has been in law enforcement for 25 years, was arrested Nov. 9 for DUI after a non-injury, two-car collision on Tuttle Creek Boulevard near Casement Road.

Alvan Johnson, director of the RCPD, said no action will be taken involving Woodyard's job status until an investigation is complete.

Woodyard has voluntarily entered an evaluation program at Pawnee Mental Health Center to determine whether he has an alcohol problem and will seek treatment if it is advised.

Woodyard has notified the court that he will apply for a diversion, and his case has been continued until 10:30 a.m. Monday.

Pedestrian killed by courier riding bicycle on public sidewalk

NEW YORK — A bicycle courier struck and killed a man on a Manhattan sidewalk, an accident that has leaders calling for stricter laws on the delivery business.

Arthur Kaye, 68, of Fort Lee, N.J., was leaving a restaurant on the Upper West Side when he was knocked off his feet Tuesday night by a bicycle courier for a chicken restaurant, Detective Robert Samuel said.

Kaye's head struck the sidewalk, and he died an hour later at St. Luke's Hospital.

Courier Eduardo Delossantos, 24, was given a summons for not having identification, which carries a fine but no jail time.

Mayor Rudolph Giuliani on Wednesday ordered police to step up enforcement of traffic rules for bicyclists. Councilman Andrew Eristoff said businesses should be held liable for their workers.

Leaders in Boston also are seeking stricter rules for bicycle couriers. A businessman in the city was knocked down by a courier Oct. 30. He spent time in a coma but was upgraded to stable condition this week.

Boy caught with gun at school, charged with attempted murder

OLATHE, Kan. — A 12-year-old boy was charged with attempted murder after he took a gun to school.

The boy, whose name was not released under a court order, had intended to kill a teacher, said Johnson county prosecutor Paul Morrison on Wednesday.

The boy was also charged with threatening two other students to keep them from telling anybody that he had a gun.

The boy is being held under house arrest.

Less serious charges were filed against the boy after he took the gun to school Nov. 3. The boy showed the .22-caliber handgun to other students, and it went off when one of them tried to grab it.

The boy is now charged with attempted first-degree murder, being a juvenile in possession of a handgun, possessing a handgun on school property and two counts of aggravated intimidation of a witness.

AT&T takes cell-phone program nation to increase school safety

TURTLE CREEK, Pa. — No pay telephone was in sight when a group of children started fighting near Kathy Ford's post as a school crossing guard.

Fortunately, she had a cell phone. "I called the police," she said.

The phone and the call were free, part of a school safety program sponsored by AT&T.

The program, which went nationwide Wednesday, puts free cellular telephones and phone service in the hands of school bus drivers, school guards and playground monitors.

The phones are there so the people responsible for students' safety can call police, the school office or each other.

By widening the program, the company brought phone service to 1,000 schools in 21 U.S. cities at a cost to AT&T of $500,000. The schools had to be within range of an AT&T wireless cell and tell the company why they needed to improve communications.

Each school receives 160 minutes of local air time per month from AT&T and two cell phones from Ericsson, a Swedish telecommunications company. AT&T donated more telephones.

How long the program might last isn't known. Similar programs for schools or communities are offered by Sprint PCS, MCI Telecommunications Inc., Bell Atlantic Mobile and Ameritech Corp.

Parking Services
combating use of illegal permits

Students may be purchasing cheaper parking permits illegally through K-State-Salina

KRIS ROBL
staff writer

The use of illegal permits on campus was the topic Thursday at the Council of Parking Operations.

K-State-Salina parking services reported that a few K-State students were going down to the Salina campus and purchasing permits. License plate and permit tags of the students, who are not taking class on the Salina campus, are being used to find out if they are using the passes illegally in Manhattan.

Parking Services allows K-State-Salina students to park on campus if they are currently enrolled in classes in Manhattan and vice-versa, with students who take classes in Salina.

The Salina permit has a different design and costs only $17.

"If a student is taking a bulk of his or her classes in Salina, then they can purchase the permit there. But if they are taking a bulk of their classes here in Manhattan, they will have to buy their permits here," Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services, said.

Abbott said this problem might decrease next year once permit prices at the Salina campus increase to expand the parking services there. But for now, Parking Services will try to keep the permit abuse down.

The council also reviewed a proposal that would make it illegal to have more than one permit displayed in a vehicle.

Abbott said Parking Services can't allow people to display a visitor permit on a vehicle with a faculty/staff or student permit.

"We want people to get use to the idea that displaying more than one permit will not be tolerated," Abbott said. "We feel it's fair now to let everyone know that this will be considered a false or illegal registration."

The permit pricing committee said there was no immediate need to increase the parking permit prices.

John Lambert, director of public safety, said the city is still reviewing the comprehensive traffic study, which will determine the feasibility of a new parking garage.

Lambert said he hoped to use the Council of Parking Operations as a focus group to communicate problems and solutions with the comprehensive traffic study.

Operation Santa accepting toys, donations for underprivileged Fort Riley children

ANGELA BUCCIGROSSI
staff writer

Santa's elves have been busy shopping for toys for this year's Operation Santa Claus at Fort Riley.

Operation Santa Claus provides Christmas toys for Fort Riley's military families, support staff and the surrounding community.

Sponsored by the Directorate of Community Activities and the Noncommissioned Officers' Association, the program collects new toys and donations to purchase new toys for children from infants to 14-year-olds. So far the groups have had two toy shopping sprees.

Around $1,800 worth of toys have been purchased by Santa's elves in Junction City, and around $2,000 worth were purchased Thursday at the Manhattan Town Center, Lillian Brauner, Fort Riley public affairs specialist, said.

Santa's elves are 17 Fort Riley soldiers who have volunteered to do the toy shopping for the project. Stores gather toys by age groups for the elves to pick from.

"The soldiers, who are dressed up, shop for toys. They go up and down the isles and buy, and they're dressed in red ball caps and green shirts that say 'Operation Santa Claus'," Brauner said.

The Operation Santa Claus' official grand-opening ceremonies are today at 4 p.m. at Santa's Workshop at Building 812 at Marshall Field. Volunteers will begin by wrapping the toys donated and purchased, and Santa will arrive by fire truck to greet the children in attendance.

"This is Santa's arrival, and it's also for people who want to bring out toys that day or just see what kind of toys they can give and just see what's all going on," Brauner said.

The entire hangar will be set up for wrapping toys and anyone is welcome to volunteer, she said.

"It's just an ongoing project of soldiers helping soldiers and soldiers' families and the surrounding communities. They really enjoy it, and they're all volunteers," Brauner said.

Christiensen's death should cause all students to reflect, give

K-State lost one of its own Wednesday. Jason Christiensen, a 22-year-old former junior in kinesiology, passed away while waiting for a double-lung transplant.

If you didn't know Jason personally, you probably know someone who did. That's how it is here at K-State.

And that makes this loss, and the others we've suffered this semester, hurt even more.

When the news spread that Jason needed a $234,000 procedure to save his life, K-Staters and many others responded generously because the cost of his lung transplant wasn't covered by his health care provider.

Friends and family members had started a campaign to raise the money themselves.

But a lack of funds wasn't all that kept Jason from two new lungs — it was also the possible cure to the disorder that killed him. There wasn't much money, but there weren't any lungs, either.

The waiting list for a lung transplant can take as long as 12 to 18 months. Jason didn't have that kind of time to spare, and he died as a result. This loss should make us all think twice about signing the back of our drivers' licenses. Be an organ donor. You could save a life.

Organ donation isn't the only way to help save lives. Take a few minutes and give a pint of blood, especially if you have a rare blood type.

Instead of stockpiling your pocket change in a jar, contribute to worthy causes when the opportunities arise. That small amount of money, combined with other people's donations, could be the key to helping someone else in a time of need.

This summer, Jason said the first thing he would do after his lung transplant was "take a big breath of wind."

He didn't get his wish, but his fellow students do.

Every day, thousands cross the K-State campus without even thinking of the pain Jason experienced when he tried to walk from class to class.

Today, stop somewhere along your walk between classes.

Stop and breathe.

Stop, breathe and give.

CLEAN AND MEAN

MOM AND DAD WERE RIGHT. NOW IF ONLY ROOMMATES COULD UNDERSTAND

VIEWPOINT

KELLY FURNAS

KELLY FURNAS is a sophomore in print journalism. You can send e-mail to Kelly at krf5663@ksu.edu.

After living away from my parents for two years, I think I finally realize why they were yelling at me all the time.

I was a filthy kid.

I was just dirty. I never cleaned my room. I left dirty dishes lying everywhere. My laundry was sprawled all over the house. My books were left on the kitchen counter. I tracked in mud on the carpet.

I was the epitome of teen-ager.

In the latter years of high school, they did manage to turn me around — sort of. I managed to contain my messes to my room for the most part. When someone said, "Whose stuff is this on the floor?" I would be quick to jump up and put it away. I slowly got in the habit of cleaning up after myself, at least in areas where other people would notice.

I slipped a little my freshman year while living in the residence halls. Not having the convenience of dishwashers meant dishes piled up. With laundry rooms so far away, my floor became one large hamper. I fell back into my old habits.

But with a new apartment came a new sense of order. Everything around me was new and needed upkeep. The apartment also provided me with the dishwasher and laundry facilities I needed to maintain a clean living environment. With the exception of my own neglected room, the house remained tidy and neat.

And then my roommates moved in.

My roommates are by no means rude or thoughtless. They are, in fact, really great people. But they have a tendency to let entropy be the rule of our apartment.

It's an interesting little cast we have. One of my roommates is, for lack of a better word, a slob. Everything he touches becomes dirty. When he cooks, he leaves the pans on the oven and plates on the counter. As an added bonus, he allows food to dry on the dishes and silverware he has used.

Another roommate is very neat and organized in his own room, but doesn't put much effort into cleaning up his own messes in the living room or in the kitchen. He goes by the motto that if it might look like someone else's fault, then there is no reason to worry about it.

My last roommate is actually much cleaner than I am. His frustration with the rest of us, however, has caused him to give up much of his cleaning efforts in the vain hope that maybe someone else will get the hint.

So, unfortunately, I usually pick up the brunt of the housekeeping duties.

If the blood in my veins wasn't boiling as I cleaned, I might actually find the situation humorous. I try to formulate ways to tell my roommates that dishes don't secretly walk themselves from the sink to the dishwasher.

I try to think of how to tell them that running cold water into a pot of dried tuna casserole does not qualify as "letting it soak." I wonder how to ask them what is so extremely taxing about putting the dishes away in the cupboards.

But the grime is not isolated to the kitchen. What really irks me is their insistence on storing aluminum cans and plastic milk jugs in the laundry room. They try to convince me that it is "recycling," but I don't see the difference whether we store a thousand cans in our laundry room or at a landfill.

True, I usually don't care that much about the environment unless it is convenient for me. Nevertheless, I usually break down and take the cans to the recycling center for them.

I also get frustrated with the fact that, deep down, my roommates really do care. They scurry to clean the apartment if their parents are coming to visit. If they see me cleaning, they usually offer to lend a hand. But it's upsetting for me to ask one of them to take the trash out and have them brush off the task until they see me doing it.

It wasn't too long ago when I was peeling trash off the floor and into trash bags when one of my roommates asked, "Can I help?"

My lip quivered.

I began to say: "Yeah, you can take this trash out a week ago."

Then it hit me. It could not have been three years ago I pshawed my parents for yelling at me to put my dishes away. I, too, felt bad when I saw them cleaning up after me. I, too, would offer to help clean once they used guilt as a request. Now, I was as angry and fed up with the filth as they were back then.

It's a scary thought — to be as anal-retentive as my parents.

And it's a scarier thought that my roommates — who are all a year older than I am — can live the way I lived in high school.

It leaves some room for optimism, however. My parents would argue that if I can clean up, anybody can.

Elderly need love, respect in later years

I will accept absolutely no arguments on this one. My grandma is the best grandma in the whole world. I don't think of her as old, even though some might call her so at 70. Which is why it broke my heart all the more when I was on the phone with her last Saturday.

BRANDI HERTIG

BRANDI HERTIG is a sophomore in print journalism and English/ creative writing. You can send your e-mail comments to Brandi at blh0377@ksu.edu

"Brandi, I don't like being old," she sighed over the 2,000 miles between here and Florida.

Rather than saying, "Oh, Grandma, you're not old," as I usually did when she said she was, I asked why.

"Your great-grandma Betty didn't like being old either," she continued. "When she was in the nursing home, she hated all those old men."

Great-grandma Betty was her mother, whom I only remember as a wheelchair-bound lady with red hair.

"You can't do as much as you used to. You get crankier. You get lonelier," she said.

"I'm sorry you're lonely, Grandma," I said.

"Oh, I like being alone sometimes. Besides, then I can't bore people to death with my stories, like I'm doing to you now," she said.

"You're not boring me, Grandma," I said.

When we hung up, I started wondering about when older people lost their reverence in our society. Older people used to be looked upon for wisdom, for knowledge. After all, they've been around longer than most. Why shouldn't we respect them?

Instead, we show our respect by deeming them an inconvenience to our fast-paced lives. We don't have time for old gramps to recount the times before the war, during the Great Depression. We don't have time to be patient for the older woman as she carefully counts out her change at the grocery store. We have things to do, places to go.

Besides, we'll never be old.

This is not a worldwide epidemic, mind you. It's tradition in Germany for one's parents to live with them once they get older. It's tradition in America to put one's parents in a nursing home once they get older.

I'm not advocating home care for the seriously ill. But how can people put the people who raised them, sat with them in the middle of the night when they were sick, in a home for someone else to take care of? When did that become the standard in aging?

It's ironic to note a common lamentation of people is, "I don't want to be put in a nursing home when I'm old." Are we to believe the basic inner feelings of younger people are different than those of older people, that older people want to be put in a home?

Maybe that whole "do unto others" thing cuts off at 65.

Part of the problem is it's nearly impossible for younger people to put themselves in older people's shoes. It's hard to look at a young face in the mirror and realize it will be old someday. It's hard to imagine not being able to do everything we can physically do today.

One's worth in society today is calibrated on many different scales, with one lesser-known one being age. I say lesser-known because it's more of a subconscious evaluation than anything else. People want to stay young for the duration of their lives. When people fail and become older, they are just not as "worthy" to our society than younger people.

Older people's lives are nearly over — young ones are just beginning. What can they possibly contribute to the world?

The answer, really, is everything.

They know more than we do now, and we'll probably know even less when we're their age. They've been through wars and air-raid drills, depressions and droughts. Their lives were more difficult than ours — and ours are easier for them having come before us.

The holiday season is a good excuse to visit a nursing home and spend time with some of the residents. Lend an ear, keep them company for a while. Listen to their stories — you could learn much.

Or make time to be with an older relative of your own. Show them you appreciate them and want to hear what they have to say.

At the very least, call your grandma or grandpa today, just to say hello.

And reassure them they are never boring.

University depends on leaders to motivate, facilitate change

K-State is filled with leaders.

The world is filled with leaders.

The funny thing is, not all leaders are acknowledged as such. Some go unnoticed, making a difference in life but never reaping benefits or accepting recognition.

The bottom line is that there are significant leaders among us. These individuals and groups give life its zest and flavor while giving us all something to strive for and a desire to improve.

GREG DAVIS

CARLA HUHTANEN

GREG DAVIS and CARLA HUHTANEN are co-directors of Leadership Day at K-State. You can e-mail Greg at gsdavis@ksu.edu and Carla at lilhut@ksu.edu

Many leaders were recognized Tuesday at K-State's annual Leadership Appreciation Day, sponsored by Blue Key Senior Leadership Fraternity.

Blue Key Leadership Fraternity consists of 14 seniors at K-State. These individuals execute the Leadership Day, perform peer consulting sessions to our campus organizations and instruct the class titled Introduction to Leadership Concepts, part of the new leadership studies minor offered by the university.

Blue Key is mentored by three outstanding assets to K-State. Provided with guidance from Pat Bosco, Susan Scott and Jackie McClaskey, these seniors strive to make sure the university provides an environment that is conducive to leadership.

The events at Leadership Day recognized and promoted leadership to all ages. Leadership Day recognized the leaders we have on our campus and promoted leadership to everyone on campus and in the community.

During this day, the advisers of various student organizations on campus were recognized at a formal luncheon. After all, advisers are some of the most efficient leaders we have at K-State. Most of the work they do is voluntary, and most of the time it goes unrecognized.

The student leaders at K-State were recognized with a dessert banquet at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. Student Body Vice President Jennafer Neufeld addressed the audience on the importance of student leadership. With more than 370 student organizations at our institution, leadership is abundant. But is it appreciated? It should be.

Blue Key also brought NFL football player Pellom McDaniels to K-State to speak about leadership. McDaniels, a defensive end for the Kansas City Chiefs, shared his thoughts on the need for leadership in society. In a rare appearance at McCain Auditorium, the Chiefs' star lineman did not focus on just the K-State campus, but addressed leadership at the community level as well. Nobody is born without some potential to lead.

Students, families and instructors from all over the Manhattan area were invited to this event.

Whether you are a student, teacher or community member, it does not matter. Leadership exists, and is needed, in all aspects and ages of life.

Would we still take the time to stop and think about leaders and leadership if there wasn't a Leadership Day at K-State? Probably so, but we more than likely wouldn't appreciate the true meaning of leadership.

Leadership is such a unique and critical talent that we, unfortunately, do not have time to ignore in today's ever-changing society.

Without leaders, and leadership in general, there would be less motivation, less change, and most importantly, less improvement in the way we run our daily lives.

Only leadership can implement a program, challenge a process, build relationships, conquer the good and bad, or facilitate change.

Leaders are among us. Not only should we be seeking them out, but we should be joining them; not just at K-State, but in the world as well.

Becoming leaders ourselves, leading a cause, setting an example, we can not only improve our individual lives, but the lives of others as well.

Leadership should no longer be a term that is intimidating to the ear. Instead, it should be a source of inspiration and passion; a term and talent that lifts the human spirit.

Leadership has stood the test of time. It will continue to exist for as long as there are people with beliefs, dreams, or visions. It is a gift that can either be accepted and used, or ignored and abused.

We can have as many leaders as we want in this life. All they have to do is come to the plate and grab the bat. The desired objective is to get the prospective leaders from the dugout into the batter's box. There is a leader in all of us.

Today's society cries out for leadership. It makes no difference what role you play in life, how old you are or what job you hold. Leadership can be encompassed in all of these.

Although we sometimes do not realize it, the potential leaders of tomorrow are right beneath our noses. It is time for them to lead.

At K-State and everywhere else in the world, the demand for leaders will continue to grow. The billboard sign reads, "Leaders Wanted."

Seminary vows revenge for shooting

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu ordered his security chiefs Thursday to make their top priority finding the attackers of two Jewish seminary students who were shot in an ambush in the Old City's Muslim Quarter.

Authorities suspected Palestinian militants were behind the early-morning shooting, which killed one student and seriously wounded the other Thursday.

"We cannot accept an attack in the Old City, in the heart of the capital of Israel," the prime minister said.

A spokesman for the Jewish seminary that the students attended suggested it would retaliate by pushing Jewish settlement in Arab east Jerusalem.

"The Arabs will pay for the attack for many years to come," Ateret Cohanim spokesman Matti Dan promised.

The students were ambushed shortly after midnight Wednesday as they walked through a narrow alley in the Muslim Quarter on the way to their dormitory.

One or more gunmen crouching behind a low wall in the alley opened fire with Kalashnikov assault rifles, shooting one student in the leg, police said.

The attackers shot 26-year-old Gabriel Hirschberg, a Hungarian immigrant, six more times as he lay on the ground, killing him.

Three more bullets hit the second student, who managed to run hundreds of feet to a group of Israeli border policeman guarding the home of Infrastructure Minister Ariel Sharon.

The student, seriously wounded, was hospitalized.

At one point, police said it appeared there been only one assailant, but said later there may have been more. While there was no claim of responsibility, Netanyahu said the shooters "appear to be professional killers."

After an emergency Cabinet meeting on the attack, Netanyahu ordered a new police post and beefed-up patrols in the Old City.

Police stopped passers-by in the Muslim Quarter to check their identities and detained several residents. Israel's Channel 2 TV said police were also investigating whether members of the Palestinian police were involved.

Ateret Cohanim seminary — partially funded by American millionaire Irving Moskowitz — has been leading a campaign to settle Jews in Arab neighborhoods of east Jerusalem, which Palestinians hope to one day see as the capital of a Palestinian state.

"Our enemies seem committed to carrying out a holy war," Ateret Cohanim executive director Yossi Baumol said Thursday. "If they know every terrorism act will be responded with by expanding the Jewish presence here, maybe they would stop their attacks."

Jerusalem Mayor Ehud Olmert, a senior member of Netanyahu's ruling Likud Party, demanded that Israel respond to the attack by suspending peace talks with the Palestinians, which had resumed only in September after months of crisis.

The Old City, a flashpoint of Israeli-Arab violence, lies in east Jerusalem, which Israel captured from Jordan in the 1967 Mideast War and later annexed.

> "Our enemies seem committed to carrying out a holy war. If they know every terrorism act will be responded with by expanding the Jewish presence here, maybe they would stop their attacks."

The Imagination Workshop

The Imagination Workshop
A production of KANU, the University of Kansas, Lawrence.
Saturday, November 22, 8 p.m.
Public: $18, Seniors: $16, Students: $9

Let your imagination run wild for a night of high-energy laughs from this Lawrence based group. With kooky sound effects and on-the-edge excitement of live radio, the Imagination Workshop transmits more bizarro humor than a Jim Carey festival.

Recent shows have poked fun at the Clinton health care program, the O.J. Simpson trial, the controversy over gays in the military, the 1996 presidential campaign, the fall TV season, and popular films. Enjoy the unique humor of this team of zany Kansans when the Imagination Workshop spins into Manhattan.

Lilya Zilberstein
Sunday, November 23, 3 p.m.
Public: $16 Seniors: $14 Students: $8

Her repertoire ranges from Bach to Shostakovich and the list of conductors and orchestras she has collaborated with reads like a Who's Who of classical music.

Zilberstein, has performed with the Chicago Symphony, the Saint Louis Symphony, Buffalo Philharmonic and London Symphony just to name a few. She adds McCain to her long list of concert hall triumphs in a program featuring Brahms' Paganini Variations and Rachmaninoff's Corelli Variations.

Call McCain at 785-532-6428

You can charge your tickets to VISA, MasterCard, or Discover. Or stop by the box office, noon to 6 p.m. weekdays.

These events are supported by the K-State Fine Arts Fee.

Presented in part by the Kansas Arts Commission, a state agency, and the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency.

Pianist brings vast repertoire, world experience to McCain

JAMI NELSON
staff writer

Pianist Lilya Zilberstein is ready to "Rach" Manhattan as she brings a repertoire of Bach, Brahms and Rachmaninoff to her 3 p.m. performance Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

Born in Moscow, Russia, she began playing the piano as a child and has won several Russian piano competitions. She graduated from the Gnessin Pedagogical Institute and now resides in Homberg, Germany.

Zilberstein is no stranger to traveling and performing internationally. She has debuted with the Chicago Symphony, the St. Louis Symphony, the Buffalo Philharmonic and the London Symphony, in addition to performances in music centers in Europe and Japan.

As she journeys to K-State, she will perform works by Brahms and Rachmaninoff. She will play Brahms' "Three Intermezzi, Op. 117 and Variations on a Theme by Paganini" and Rachmaninoff's "Variations On A Theme by Corelli, Op. 42" and "Six Moments Musicaux, Op. 16."

Critics have described the works as technical and spiritual in nature.

No. 66 epitomized courage, dedication in sport of hockey

On Monday night, it became official.

My favorite athlete ever, former Pittsburgh Penguins' center Mario Lemieux was inducted into the Hockey Hall of Fame.

And I will never see him play a game. That was one of my goals. Before he retired, I was going to see Mario Lemieux play a hockey game in person.

It's partially my fault. I never made the four-hour trip to St. Louis to see him play, even though I know now I should have.

But it's just too soon for him to be in the Hall of Fame. He should still be playing. He's only 32. I figured he'd at least outlast Wayne Gretzky, whom I've also never seen in person, but health problems, success and the "decline of his skills" led to his retirement.

DAN MERKER

DAN MERKER is a senior in computer science. You can send your e-mail comments to Dan at dmerker@ksu.edu.

He played through and came back from back problems so bad he couldn't even tie his own skates but would still put up two goals and an assist. He courageously battled back from Hodgkin's Disease to play the night of his last radiation treatment in Philadelphia. He went on to win the scoring title that year, despite missing about a quarter of the season, dwarfing Pat LaFontaine's otherwise fine scoring marks.

He led his team to two consecutive Stanley Cups, allowing him to retire without regret. Both times the Penguins won, he was named playoff MVP, earning the Conn Smythe Trophy.

Lemieux is the only person who can honestly and humbly say, the year after leading the league in scoring by a wide margin, that he was happy with how he was playing.

He was simply that good. Lemieux, at less than 100 percent, was probably far superior to anyone else who ever played.

At least I still have memories of seeing him play on television. I can remember nights when he dominated games, scoring three or four or five goals in a night. I have seen him feather impossible passes to teammates as helpless goalies could only shake their heads.

I can see in my mind, like it was yesterday, the move he made in the 1991 Stanley Cup Finals. He stickhandled back and forth through a myriad of helpless defensemen and beat goalie Jon Casey in a move that will forever be linked to the one called "Super Mario." I couldn't possibly explain it, but it was a thing of beauty.

I didn't see the game, but Lemieux will be forever noted for his unique five-goal game, which is rare. He scored goals at even-strength, on the power play, shorthanded, on a penalty shot and into an empty net.

Maybe it was best he retired. I, along with everyone else, will remember him as the great player he was, the finest I have ever seen play. He went out on top, winning the Art Ross Trophy for being the league's top scorer.

I don't care if Gretzky has all the records, both regular-season and career, Lemieux is still the best ever. The things Lemieux could do with the puck were unreal. He is a big man, and his physical attributes just add to his greatness, with his great reach and strength, along with skill and touch that one would think a man his size wouldn't have.

But I am still lucky to have seen him play, even if only on television. I will be able to tell my children and grandchildren I saw the greatest ever, but I failed in my efforts to truly experience his play. Hockey's just not the same on television as it is in person.

My dad was lucky enough to see him play, though. It was late in 1992, and Pops was in New York on business, so he figured he'd see a Rangers' game. It ended up he would see a Mario game.

Without the need of teammates, Lemieux tallied four goals in the game, leading the Pens to victory and thrilling my dad.

He has been watching hockey for well over 30 years, and said Lemieux was the most amazing athlete he had ever seen. The infamous Madison Square Garden crowd gave the visiting Lemieux a standing-O with his four-goal game.

Unfortunately, I will never be able to experience his greatness, but I will always pull out the tapes and watch them.

Like his final home game in which he scored a goal in his final minute on the ice at the Igloo, and his farewell lap around the ice to say goodbye to his adoring fans, the same game that had me sobbing like a baby by the end.

I feel privileged to have seen him play at all, and I kick myself every time I hear his name because I never saw him play in person.

But every time I see the number 66 on a road sign, as a score on a test (hopefully not) or on a football player's back (sorry Chris Hess), I will think of Lemieux's greatness.

THE RUSH FOR 10

The Wildcats hope their track record of rushing success against Iowa State leads to a win in Ames — a win that would give K-State its first 10-win regular season since 1910 and keep the team on track for a possible Alliance Bowl bid.

SUN DEE MILLS
sports editor

At the end of every regular season of play, records are set and broken. The Wildcats are looking at breaking several this Saturday at Ames, Iowa, in their game against the Iowa State Cyclones.

Senior running back Mike Lawrence is just 48 yards shy of breaking former Cat J.J. Smith's career rushing record of 2,210 yards. If history holds true, Lawrence should have no problem attaining this record against the Cyclones' No. 105 rushing defense.

During last season's Iowa State game, Lawrence was in a rushing battle with Cyclone running back Troy Davis, who was set to become the first running back in NCAA history to get 2,000 rushing yards in consecutive seasons. Davis met this challenge, running for 225 yards on 48 carries against the Cats.

But Lawrence set a record of his own. Against the Cyclones, Lawrence set the K-State single-game rushing record with 252 yards in 38 attempts. He also ran for three touchdowns, all of which were career-bests for Lawrence.

This season, Lawrence has had to share time with fellow running back Eric Hickson, who was out with a broken leg for the entirety of last season. Regardless, Lawrence is second in team rushing yards, with 503 yards on 109 attempts. He averages 50.3 yards a game, so the record is not out of reach.

The only thing that would have been better, Lawrence said, was to have broken that record at home. Against Colorado last week, Lawrence ran 14 yards for his sixth touchdown of the season, with a total of 70 yards for the game.

"That would've been a good one," Lawrence said of the touchdown run. "But if it was the one that the announcers said, 'Mike Lawrence is now the K-State all-time leading rusher,' it would've been better. But I'll take it."

Coach Bill Snyder said Lawrence's season has been a good one, but Senior Day also played into his good game against Colorado.

"Mike's been playing very well," Snyder said. "The fact that it was also the last game at home comes into it as well."

But none of the Cats' rushing success would be possible without the blocking efforts of the offensive line, the largest and perhaps most talented in school history. Behind the NFL's Jacksonville and Washington offensive lines, the Cats are the third largest.

"The offensive line has made relatively substantial improvement throughout the course of the season," Snyder said.

The Cats are averaging about 78 more yards a game than a year ago. So far, the Cats have 26 rushing touchdowns when the team had 21 for all of last season. The team total 2,138 yards is 306 short of the season record of 2,443 set in 1973.

How feasible is it that the Cats would break this one?

Well, already twice this season — vs. Bowling Green and Missouri — the Cats ran up the rushing numbers, getting 429 yards off Bowling Green and 339 off the Tigers. On a whole, the Cats are averaging 213.8 yards a game.

That, combined with Lawrence's past success against the Cyclones and Iowa State's weakened rushing defense, makes this goal attainable.

Snyder said the youth factor troubles the Iowa State defense.

"Defensively, they've had their trouble, but I know Dan (Iowa State coach McCarney) is playing an awful lot of young guys," Snyder said. "I know one thing with young guys. They get better week in and week out. I'm sure they'll be lined up and ready to play against us."

Team hopes to erase memories of 2 exhibition losses

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

This time, it's for real.

After a pair of exhibition losses, the K-State women's basketball team takes the Bramlage Coliseum court in a game that counts against Illinois State. Tipoff is at 7 tonight, and admission is free with a student ID.

The Wildcats fell in both exhibition games they played. In their debut against the Victoria All-Stars, the Cats allowed the All-Stars to make 12 three-point field goals and lost 60-48. Monday night against Athletes in Action, K-State suffered its second defeat, losing 70-49. The Cats were down 47-44 in the second half, but AIA ended the game on a 23-5 run to put the Cats away. Athletes in Action, led by center Barb Franke's 22 points, dominated the Cats inside.

K-State will have to find a way to defend both the three-pointer and the paint to beat the Redbirds.

"(Monday night) we gave up points in the paint all night long, which was the exact opposite problem from our first game, when we gave up threes," K-State head coach Deb Patterson said. "We need to get a lot better defensively in the paint."

The Cats have been led so far by freshman point guard Kim Woodlee. Patterson said she had planned to move senior shooting guard Brit Jacobson to point so a freshman wouldn't have to play point guard, but Woodlee's play has allowed Jacobson to play at her more natural two-spot. Woodlee averaged 14 points in the exhibition games, including a 17-point effort in Monday's game, in which she made all five three-pointers she attempted.

"I think Kim has really stepped up, obviously, in these two exhibition games and asserted herself," Patterson said. "I feel real confident about where she's at in this point in time in the season."

Patterson said the Cats will have to establish more of a post game than they had against Athletes in Action to be successful. K-State scored 24 of their 49 points against AIA from their forwards and centers, and Patterson said that is not enough.

"We've got to establish a post game," she said. "Our numbers in the post were not real strong. I'm not real satisfied there. We've got to get the ball to our post players earlier."

Another problem for the Cats has been streaky play. K-State went on a 9-0 run Monday night in the second half, only to be answered by a 13-0 AIA run. Patterson said the Cats will have to maintain intensity throughout the whole game.

"We've got to bring the personality to the floor that I believe we played with in both (exhibition) games for about 10-12 minutes," she said. "We have got to take the next step and put together 40 minutes of quality basketball."

Two of the four returning players from last year's NCAA Tournament team — Brit Jacobson and Nicky Ramage — are returning from injuries that caused them to miss early practices, but each player has played in both exhibition games and should play tonight.

Illinois State comes into town with a loss under its belt. Monday night, the Redbirds lost to Big 12 opponent Missouri, by a 69-59 count. The Tigers were picked to finish last in the Big 12 in a preseason coaches' poll.

However, the Redbirds return four starters and seven players from last year's team that tied for second place in the Missouri Valley Conference. They went 17-11 a year ago and are led by two first-team all-MVC players from a year ago — forward Corinne Vossel and guard Jenny Schmidt.

Vossel, Schmidt and guard/forward Kristin Valdez all scored in double figures against the Tigers, accounting for 40 of the Redbirds' 59 points Monday night. The Redbirds might be vulnerable on the boards. They were outrebounded 44-29 by the Tigers.

"WE HAVE GOT TO TAKE THE NEXT STEP AND PUT TOGETHER 40 MINUTES OF QUALITY BASKETBALL."

Concert to benefit Habitat for Humanity

SANDY DAVIS

Deege, Dive, Ruskabank and Sufferbus are the bands performing at a benefit concert sponsored by the K-State chapter of Habitat for Humanity tonight at the Wareham Opera House.

Deege, which has two songs on the "Party of Five" compact disc, is from Kansas City, Kan. Dive, Ruskabank and Sufferbus are all bands from Manhattan.

Jenny Wright, junior in environmental engineering, said the group is expecting 300 to 400 people at the event.

Wright said the benefit is an annual event for the organization.

This year, drinks from Lucky BrewGrille and pizza from Greek's Pizzeria will be sold. In previous years, Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon has served the drinks and provided sound equipment and security.

There will also be drawings for prizes, such as T-shirts, during the concert. Prizes have been donated by area businesses.

Paying for fliers, reserving the space and acquiring sound equipment and security has put the group more than $1,000 in debt so far. Wright said she hopes the concert will make at least $2,000.

"The bands have agreed to play for free," Wright said.

Habitat is a nonprofit organization dedicated to providing housing to people who might not otherwise be able to afford a home of their own. The money raised is for the Manhattan affiliate chapter of the organization, which will break ground on its fourth Habitat house soon.

Since its founding two years ago, the Manhattan chapter has reached its goal of building two houses each year.

Wright said she hopes a lot of people will come to the concert Friday.

"It should be a really great night, and it's a great opportunity to see four great bands," Wright said.

The doors open at 8 p.m., despite fliers that say 8:30.

Imagination Workshop combines comedy, drama in McCain show

JAMI NELSON
staff writer

In the 1940s, families gathered around the radio for the evening's drama. Now they turn on "Saturday Night Live" for entertainment.

Both styles of entertainment meet in the Imagination Workshop at 8 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

"It's 'Saturday Night Live' meets the Golden Age of radio," Darrell Brogdon, producer and principal writer, said.

The cast of eight members and a sound effects crew create an old radio show with a focus on fast-paced comedy. The set includes microphones, sound-effects devices and other broadcasting equipment.

"We don't make much of an effort to hide anything. You get to see all the inner workings of a broadcast," Brogdon said.

The local group from Lawrence, has entertained audiences primarily in the Midwest. It is a production of KANU-FM 91.5, the campus radio station at the University of Kansas. Usually, the group gives 13 performances a year, with most of them in Lawrence, but it has also performed in Kansas City, Mo., and St. Louis.

In addition to the group's proximity to Manhattan, it is close to Manhattan in yet another way. One of the cast members, David Greusel, is a K-State graduate. Although he was an architecture student, he spent some time acting, too. He created the Not Ready for K-State Players comedy group and has performed with the comedian Sinbad.

Since the beginning of the Imagination Workshop in 1985, its performance has changed. Originally, the group focused on traditional radio dramas and later found more success in a comical approach.

"Over time the comedy sketches took over the show," Brogdon said. "We began to emphasize comedy and de-emphasize drama."

In its Manhattan performance, the Imagination Workshop will spoof such personalities as Marv Albert, Janet Reno, Saddam Hussein and President and Hillary Clintons. The performance will feature parodies of infomercials, as well as some visits from personalities created by the Imagination Workshop.

"We do a lot of topical stuff, but we do weird, wacky skits, too," Brogdon said.

In addition to its emphasis on comedy, the production might also have a Yuletide spirit. The performance at McCain is a sample of the Christmas broadcast, which about 100 stations will air next month. One parody included in the performance is "The Bob Dylan Christmas Special," Brogdon said. The group might also perform a "Year in Review" medley to the tunes of Christmas carols.

Brogdon said this form of entertainment is becoming more rare, which makes it so appealing to audiences.

"There aren't many shows like this left. It's unique in that you can't just walk down the street and see a show like this," Brogdon said.

Laughing stock

Have a laugh at the Imagination Workshop

For tickets, call 532-6428. Prices are $18 for the general public, $16 for senior citizens and $9 for students.

The performance will also feature a pre-performance lecture at 7 p.m. in McCain 204 by Ralph Titus, a former KKSU radio personality. He will discuss his experiences as an on-air personality so audience members can better understand the concept of radio performance and how it evolved.

KonzaCon attracts dealers, collectors

JOHN FRANSON
staff writer

If you've seen the recent TV commercials for a local games and comics shop, you might have guessed that the collecting hobby is alive and well in Manhattan.

Whether you're one of those collectors or just a curious observer, you can experience the world of science fiction and fantasy fandom Saturday in the K-State Student Union. KonzaCon, sponsored by the Elements of Fantasy Club, will be from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. in the K, S and U Ballrooms.

Several tournaments and demonstrations of collectible card games (CCGs) will be featured, and dealers will be present to sell games and comics. Tournament winners will receive prizes, and packets that include a comic book and a Magic: The Gathering card will be handed out on a first-come, first-served basis.

KonzaCon is the first such convention in Manhattan in 10 or 11 years, Jim Wilkins, club president, said. The idea for the Con surfaced several years ago when Elements of Fantasy, then called Secret Masters of Fandom, wanted to start a new event to take the place of the previous, long-departed Con. The club's plans finally solidified early this fall when the club's faculty adviser, Pat McDonald, brought up the idea.

"We played around with the idea until we finally got organized," Wilkins said.

The club sent invitations to several local comic book artists, but none agreed to appear at the event.

"Since this is our first convention, a lot of people weren't used to Manhattan having a Con," Wilkins said. However, he expects artists will take interest once the Con becomes more established.

The event is free. There is, however, a small charge to enter a tournament, and cards used in the Magic tournament must be purchased at the event. Other tournaments will include Legend of the Five Rings and Highlander: The Card Game.

Wilkins said the event is of interest to everyone, not just enthusiasts of comics and CCGs.

"We're pretty much open to everybody. If you don't deal with cards, you can come in and find out what it's all about."

Lifters set lofty goals for upcoming season

JACOB JANSONIUS
staff reporter

The K-State Powerlifters took first place in last year's Paola, Kan., competition.

The problem is, nobody on the team is satisfied with taking first place at just that meet.

Joe Hodgson, president of the Powerlifting Club, said it was a great accomplishment to win first at the meet in Paola, but there are much higher goals that can be reached.

"We want to get as many people qualified for Collegiate Nationals as possible," Hodgson said. "We would like to place in the top 10 this year at Collegiate Nationals and still first in all of our other meets."

The Collegiate National powerlifting meet takes place on March 21 in Fort Hood, Texas.

The meet consists of the nation's best powerlifters who have qualified in previous meets this year.

For those unfamiliar with the sport of powerlifting, three basic lifts are judged at a meet: bench press, squats and dead lift.

Each competitor is given three chances to lift as much weight as possible in each exercise. The highest weight achieved from all three exercises is added together to tabulate a grand total.

Competitors are divided into categories according to their body weights.

"That is what is so great. A guy that weighs 110 pounds can do just as well as a guy that weighs 500 pounds," Hodgson said. "Some of our best weightlifters are 148 pounds."

Tom Lechtenberg, sophomore in secondary education and athletic training, is a first-year member of the team. He is looking forward to participating in the first meet on Dec. 20, in Ardmore, Okla.

"This sport is not like football or basketball. It takes six to eight weeks of training to prepare for one meet. The most meets we have in a year is usually three," Lechtenberg said. "It definitely takes a lot of preparation."

This year's powerlifting team will journey to Ardmore with nine men and three women. The team hopes to take first place at the meet and qualify as many people as possible for Collegiate Nationals.

"The more people that qualify, the better chance we have in placing in the top 10 at Collegiate Nationals," Hodgson said.

Those not qualifying for Collegiate Nationals will begin training to defend the team's title in Paola.

Mike Zbreski, sophomore in kinesiology, is another first-year powerlifter and is excited to be competing in Ardmore.

"I don't know if I will be able to qualify for Collegiate Nationals or not. I hope so," Zbreski said. "It is a totally different atmosphere when you go to a meet. The competition pushes you to the next level. Hopefully, that will help me."

Hodgson said the K-State powerlifting team is a good team, but there is even more strength in numbers.

"Men or women that want to join the team now are certainly welcome," Hodgson said. "It's a great way to achieve health through weight training, and the more people we have competing, the better chance the team has to do well."

Pepper spray stops celebration early during Mizzou victory party

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Fans celebrating Missouri's first winning season since 1983 stopped their festivities when University of Missouri police officers showered them with pepper spray.

Fans rushed the field after Missouri's 42-24 victory over Baylor last Saturday. But after the fans snapped off the north goal post, the police officers used pepper spray to get them off the field.

Missouri police Capt. Chuck Isaacson said police decided before the game to use the pepper spray if fans ignored repeated verbal requests.

"I don't think we went beyond the scope of what we needed to do," Isaacson said.

The pepper spray was used to protect the safety of the coaches, players and others gathered around the locker room entrance, Isaacson said.

Athletic director Joe Castiglione said Thursday that he was not involved in any discussions about using pepper spray or force during the post-game celebration.

"I don't feel like we can put people's safety at risk, but there have to be more acceptable tactics," Castiglione said. "We're trying to protect the collegiate atmosphere while protecting people's safety."

About a dozen officers were stationed around the goal post, but only two have filed "use-of-force" reports saying they used their pepper spray after the game, Isaacson said.

Pepper spray does not cause permanent injury, Isaacson said.

"It's a step below using night sticks," he said.

The officers used night sticks as deterrents to on-field vandalism during previous winning seasons, but Isaacson said that is no longer acceptable.

"It's a little frightening for us too, down there," Isaacson said. "We know we're greatly outnumbered, and there's only so much we can do."

At least one officer was incapacitated by the effects of the pepper spray.

No formal complaints have been filed, although Missouri police have received several phone calls about the incident.

CLASSIFIED AD WRITING TIPS
- List items or services first. Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
- Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
- Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Multicultural resource center strives for further improvement

SHEYENE FOSTER
staff writer

The KSU Multicultural Research and Resource Center is working toward further improvements in order to better serve students, MRRC coordinator Molly Royse said.

Royse said the center has undergone changes in the past year to meet the challenges of increased diversity and technological advancement.

"We've made a lot of programs in this past year, but we're definitely still in a time of transition and change," Royse said.

The MRRC was started in the early 1970s by a group of students and faculty from several departments. The purpose for establishing the center was to provide a place for minorities to learn about their own cultures and for other students to learn about various cultures.

Until the Hale Library expansion, the center had been located on the fourth floor of old Farrell Library in the Martin Luther King Jr. Mural Room. However, Royse said student traffic flow was slow on the fourth floor, and many were unaware of the services that MRRC had to offer.

Royse said students have been made more aware of the center, partly because of its new location on the third floor of the Library.

Additionally, in earlier years, the center kept its own collection of books dealing with multicultural issues separate from the rest of the library. Now, much of this information has been placed under the basic library system.

"We want to be really integrated with the rest of library services," Royse said.

Royse said increased emphasis is now on accessibility to materials, rather than a separate physical location of books.

"In recent years the MRRC housed many multicultural resources, but missed some," Royse said. "Also it was physically impossible to house all the material separately, especially in our new location. So, we decided to integrate and devote time as as a staff to helping students access them."

Royse's position as coordinator is another recent change to the MRRC. In years past, the position had been filled by a part-time intern. Royse said having people as consistent staff is also an advantage.

"Now the staffing position is somewhat stabilized," Royse said.

In addition to Royse, two other people are on staff at the center, Pramila Tummala, a library assistant, and Frances Vitali, a graduate intern.

Another significant change is the increased focus on outreach to other campus groups and programs. Royse said the MRRC is now trying to be more proactive in this area.

"We spend a lot of out time trying to establish contacts and network with the various student organizations," Royse said.

Royse said the center works with a variety of programs including Upward Bound and the McNair Scholars Program, as well as variety of multicultural student organizations.

The MRRC has proved to be a valuable resource to these programs, said Lora Boyer, assistant director of the McNair Scholars Program.

"They take an initiative in identifying resources for students that are interested in exploring the multicultural aspects of issues," Boyer said.

Other services available through the MRRC include a service desk, reference collection, magazines and journals, international newspapers, electronic databases and CD-ROMs and an ongoing display of new multicultural titles. The center has displays and exhibits that coordinate with various ethnic celebrations and a new home page on the Internet.

Iraqi officials accept weapons inspectors

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Saddam Hussein proclaimed a day of the people" on Thursday, seeking to portray his decision to end a brewing conflict with U.N. arms inspectors as a victory for Iraq.

Hundreds of Iraqis poured into the streets for anti-U.S. demonstrations. Children as well as adults wrote "Down with America!" on the floors of schools, homes, factories and on streets and public squares.

Iraqis achieved victory over the enemies and the covetous ones, one television commentator proclaimed.

Prodded by his old ally Russia, Saddam Hussein agreed Thursday to allow U.S. arms monitors back into the country, ending a three-week crisis that had raised fears of a military confrontation with the United States.

The government said it reversed its ban on the Americans following Russia's assurance that it will work to lift U.N. economic sanctions on Iraq.

Baghdad's U.N. Ambassador Nizar Hamdoon delivered a letter to the United Nations, formally inviting the inspectors back to Iraq immediately.

"I think the crisis is over," he said, adding that Iraq received a better hearing of its grievances about the inspection program during the crisis. Iraq claims that Americans exert undue influence on the inspection program.

But in comments to reporters in New York, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Bill Richardson, warned that despite the Russian initiative, Iraq will have to play by the old rules.

He said Washington will veto any move to lift the sanctions unless Baghdad complies fully with U.N. orders — as required by Security Council resolutions — to dismantle its missiles as well as its chemical and biological arms. Iraq insists it is in full compliance.

The dismantling, being monitored by the U.N. Special Commission, was halted when Iraq ordered the expulsion of its six American members on Oct. 29. The order was carried out Nov. 13, and the other 68 non-American inspectors were withdrew in protest.

back to the Foundation with a dollar amount they feel can be raised from the people they interviewed.

Smith said it is important to interview a broad cross-section of people, not just those who have given money to the library in the past. Freeman Davis, a constituent development officer for the Foundation, said he agreed.

"We always have to be able to find new donor resources," Davis said. "It's also a matter of getting people to endow money to specific areas."

Davis said many people have a misconception about what the Foundation can do with the money that is donated. It cannot dictate where and how the money is spent. Instead, Davis said, donors usually give money for specific reasons.

"In asking anybody for money, you have to be sensitive to how people want it spent," Davis said. "People have allegiances to certain colleges within the university. We try to nurture a broader perspective, but if people want to go a certain way with their money, then that's the way it will go."

K-State is not alone in its struggle to raise money for areas with a relatively low constituency, like libraries. Although KU's library system is among the top 20 in North America, it tends to get more support from large, single donors.

John Scarffe, the director of communications for the KU Endowment Association, said that getting private money for libraries is an ongoing, difficult process that is aided by a motivated group of alumni and supporters.

"The main thing that we try to stress, and it seems to work, is that our libraries are truly the heart of the university," Scarffe said.

he said, is to keep bookstore services as accessible as possible during the renovation, which is scheduled for early spring of 1999.

"We're trying not to disrupt what's already going on, especially during the beginning of semester and book buyback times," Pitts said.

Changes to the Union's plaza area on the north side of the building would be last on the list, Pitts said. Those improvements are last because the area will be barricaded and used by the general contractor during other stages of the project.

Pitts also said part of the Union's southern parking lot could also be used throughout the construction.

"At this point, we may be using a little bit of the southern parking lot for part of a staging area for the general contractor," he said.

Clinton refuses economic plea for Iraq

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — President Clinton rebuffed an appeal from Russian President Boris Yeltsin on Saturday to ease tough economic sanctions against Iraq. Clinton said he hoped the tense showdown with Iraq was over but said he wasn't sure.

Clinton spoke with Yeltsin for 40 minutes by telephone from the White House before setting out on a day of campaign fund raising expected to reap more than $1 million for Democrats. The president stopped in Denver and Seattle en route to the 18-nation Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation forum in Vancouver, British Columbia.

The summit will focus on the growing crisis in Asia over currency devaluations, bank failures and stock market crashes. One top priority, Clinton said, "will be strengthening and stabilizing Asia's financial markets so that their economies and ours stay on the right track."

Clinton

Reflecting on the crisis with Iraq and other demands, Clinton said simply, "It was a killer of a week." Later, in Seattle, Clinton said, "I hope you have seen in the difficult week we have just had over the weapons inspections in Iraq how important it is for your country to continue to stand up for peace and freedom and security around the world."

With international weapons inspectors back at work in Iraq, Yeltsin called Clinton and argued for an easing of U.N. sanctions mostly on humanitarian grounds, noting the severe effect on the Iraqi people.

Yeltsin also said there should be a gradual easing of inspections as Iraq satisfies U.N. suspicions about illicit nuclear, chemical and biological weapons material.

"There's disagreement between us on the terms under which sanctions ought to be ended, but that's not new," a senior U.S. official traveling with Clinton said of the leaders' discussion. The official said Clinton and Yeltsin agreed that Iraq cannot expel the inspectors.

The president said he was concerned about the welfare of the Iraqi people and said he doesn't want to see them suffer unnecessarily. But chief U.N. inspector Richard Butler had reported there are "still impediments to their work (in Iraq), and he recom-

Donaldson says cable changed TV news market

MATT KREPS
staff writer

Sam Donaldson mixed humor and the challenges of the news media for the 112th Landon Lecture.

After an introduction by President Jon Wefald, Donaldson began with a few jokes pointed at Wefald. He has known Wefald since he covered Hubert Humphrey's campaign while Wefald was secretary of agriculture in Minnesota.

"What have you done wrong recently, Jon?" Donaldson quipped.

Donaldson said there were three reasons why he was pleased to speak in the Landon Lecture Series. First, he said he respected the Landon Lecture Series and its namesake. Second, he enjoyed the opportunity to see Wefald again. Finally, he could choose the topic on which he spoke.

He then began the more serious portion of his speech that lasted about 20 minutes but continued to intersperse humor throughout.

Donaldson said his lecture would be about the state of television news.

He said while most of his counterparts on other networks are denouncing TV news, he does not.

"Well, I think that's a little shortsighted," he said.

He said the real purpose of the news is to make money.

"In the real world, television news is a business," he said.

When Donaldson began his television career, there were only three networks, and people watched whatever was on. He said the news did not have to make money because the networks already earned a lot of money.

When cable channels began, the ratings began to slip from 98 percent in a steady decline to less than 50 percent. When they hit the 75-percent mark, the network executives decided the news needed to make money.

Donaldson said the new challenge was how to draw a larger audience to news shows. He said the key was attracting people from groups who did not watch the news.

He listed three groups. The first already watches the news. The second includes working people who are not looking for serious information after a K-STATE STUDENTS serve a Thanksgiving dinner to elderly Manhattan residents Sunday afternoon in St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center. Students expected to serve dinner to about 200 residents.

St. Isidore's serves Thanksgiving meal

K-State students gave elderly and shut-in Manhattan residents a taste of Thanksgiving on Sunday at the annual Thanksgiving Dinner for the Elderly.

The free dinner is an annual event sponsored by St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center and Peer Coordinators, a Catholic student group that organizes events at the church.

The dinner, served by the students and parishioners of St. Isidore's, was served Sunday in Newman Hall of the student center.

Students' participation included set-up, serving, delivery to shut-ins and cleanup. Entertainment was also provided after the meal, and this year Peer Coordinators planned a sing-along.

Mary Lou Hoss, office manager at St. Isidore's, said the event is a good way for students and the elderly from the community to interact with one another. She said more than 80 people signed up to help with this year's event.

"Sometimes we have more people sign up to help than we need," Hoss said.

Hoss said that in addition to community service, the dinner gives students a chance to visit with elderly people other than their own grandparents while away from home.

"The interest students have with the elderly is great," Hoss said. "It's something the students and the elderly like to do."

Jason Meyers, vice president of Peer Coordinators, said this was his first time to help with the event and that he enjoyed the opportunity to mingle with the elderly.

"It's a great chance to meet older people that have a different perspective on life than we do," Meyers said.

Adrienne Pauly, secretary and treasurer of Peer Coordinators, said it was evident that those attending found the event worthwhile.

"It's nice to see how much they enjoy the dinner and the appreciation the elderly have for us," Pauly said.

Pauly said she enjoyed visiting with the public and that many of the volunteers plan to do it next year.

Rachel Schoenberger, senior in elementary education, said she has volunteered for three years.

"It's actually one of my favorite things at the student center to do," Schoenberger said.

Schoenberger said it's encouraging for the elderly to see students who are involved with their faith help out. She said many times young people get a bad reputation in the community and this service helps dissolve the stereotype.

This year the group planned to serve 200 people, including volunteers.

Traditional Thanksgiving food was served, including turkey, stuffing, potatoes, salads and desserts. The meal was cooked by local parishioners, and some students donated salads and deserts.

The event is funded by the church and through donations from those who attended.

Holiday travel requires planning, precautions

ASHLEY YOULE
staff reporter

It's that time of the year when packing becomes a pain and changing the oil is a must. Traveling safely with the least hassle depends on planning.

The worst time to travel, either by air or by car, is the day right before Thanksgiving and the Sunday after Thanksgiving, David Garvin, manager of Aggieville Creative Travel, said.

"We are predicting that Sunday will be the biggest travel day ever. So if you are flying, show up to the airport two hours before your flight and be prepared for delays," he said.

While waiting for flights, travelers should never leave the airport if there are delays.

"Sometimes, delays change. Stay at the airport, and constantly check to see the status of your flight," Garvin said.

If a flight is canceled for some reason, be sure to re-book it.

"Most times, airlines will put you up for the night if your flight is canceled. You just have to be forceful to be treated right," Garvin said.

When planning for a trip, travelers should be ready for the environment they'll be arriving in.

"Depending on where you are going, check the weather reports," said Bob Pearson, manager of Kansas State Travel Service. "Thanksgiving probably won't be that bad, but it's good to check just in case."

Travelers, regardless of their destinations, should always have a map, flashlight, blanket, food and money.

"If you don't have a cellular phone, your common sense is your best bet," Sgt. Hank Nelson of the Riley County Police Department said.

"Worry about your safety, and get your car checked out. Take time to prepare yourself, because it will save you from having problems along the way," he said.

For those whose cars break down along the highway, the Kansas Highway Patrol are always looking for those in trouble, Nelson said.

When making flight reservations, make them as soon as possible.

"We've been booking Christmas flights since this summer," Pearson said. "You need to call as soon as possible to get the best deals and the best seats."

For those looking for good deals, some airlines are offering special student discounts.

Western Pacific Airlines is offering a student fare program that will allow students to travel at lower costs during the holidays. One-way fares are between $79 and $99, an employee of Western Pacific said.

"Based on availability, we offer these rates to any student age 17 to 28 to fly anywhere we do in the United States," she said.

The fares are valid through May 21, 1998, and no advance purchase is required, but tickets must be purchased within one day of booking.

For more information on airline fares, or if you have any travel questions, you can get in touch with these Manhattan businesses: Aggieville Creative Travel — 539-0531, Kansas State Travel Service — 537-2451, Adventures International — 537-0555, Travelers Express — 539-2284, or AAA Kansas-Manhattan — 776-3131.

NASA to try satellite rescue

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Astronauts aboard the space shuttle Columbia will attempt a daring satellite rescue, the first in more than five years, under a plan approved by NASA on Sunday after considerable study.

More than anything, the space agency wants to avoid a collision. The slowly spinning, 3,000-pound satellite could do serious damage if it struck the shuttle or the two spacewalkers during tonight's salvage effort.

Mission operations representative Bob Castle told reporters the risk of a collision was very small.

"We feel very confident that this is going to work," Castle said at a news conference. "The crew is quite capable of doing this. The flying tasks of bringing the orbiter up close to the tumbling spacecraft, I think, are very doable."

The $10 million reusable science satellite called Spartan has been tumbling out of control since Friday, when Columbia's crew released it, saw it wasn't working and then failed to recover it with the shuttle robot arm.

When the six astronauts last saw it, before the shuttle backed off to a safe distance, Spartan was spinning at a rate of two degrees a second, making a full revolution every three minutes. It's a five-foot cube with the ends of an 11-foot telescope protruding from opposite sides.

Castle said engineers are confident the satellite won't be spinning any faster when astronauts Winston Scott and Takao Doi try to catch it with their gloved hands. If anything, it might be rotating more slowly if a control system kicks in.

The plan is that spacewalkers will be positioned on opposite ends of a platform that spans the shuttle cargo bay, their feet secured by straps. They'll lean all the way back as Columbia creeps up to the satellite, their backpacks brushing against the cargo bay sills.

"It's going to take a considerable amount of patience," said Mike Hess, NASA's lead spacewalk officer. "They may just have to sit and wait until it rotates into a position in which they

FBI uses Nichols' family to help with investigation

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — The FBI used emotional taped messages from Terry Nichols' ex-wife and son to persuade him to cooperate with their investigation of the Oklahoma City bombing.

"Hi, Dad. I love you," his son Josh said, his voice broken by sobs, in a message played Friday for the jury. "Cooperate the best you can. The FBI is being nice and ... protecting us from the media. ... Grandma says she loves you and believes in you. I love you, Dad. Bye."

The tape also included pleas from his ex-wife, Lana Padilla, who told Nichols, "It's really necessary that everyone needs to know that the family wasn't involved in this ... any information you can share with us to help us understand would be appreciated."

Nichols' bowed his head and his face grew red when he heard his son's voice. At least one juror cried.

The tape was played for Nichols during more than nine hours of questioning after he turned himself in to authorities in Herington, Kan., on hearing his name mentioned as a possible suspect in the bombing on the radio.

Also during the interview, Nichols

Judge uses inventive sentencing to teach teen dangers of alcohol

HOUSTON — A teen-ager who killed two people while driving drunk has been sentenced to carry pictures of the victims in his wallet for the next 10 years.

Judge Ted Poe, known for his creative punishments, gave Michael Hubacek 10 years' probation with strict conditions that include carrying pictures of the victims in his wallet and watching an autopsy.

Hubacek, 19, slammed into a van Nov. 28, 1996. The crash killed Richard Davis, 45, a father of two, and Magdelana Belan, 28, nanny of Davis' two children. Davis' wife was in the van, but she survived.

Hubacek pleaded no contest to intoxicated manslaughter charges and was sentenced to shock probation last spring, said Pam Cavazos, a probation officer. He served six months in jail and received the probation conditions Friday.

Although probation is unusual in such a case, Cavazos said Davis agreed to the judge's conditions because she wants Hubacek to teach others about the dangers of drunken driving.

Among the terms of Hubacek's probation:

- Refrain from driving for 10 years.
- Attend boot camp.
- Erect a cross and a Star of David at the accident site and maintain the area around them.
- Carry for five days outside a bar a sign that reads, "I killed two people while driving drunk."
- Carry pictures of the victims in his wallet for 10 years.
- Observe an autopsy of a person killed in a drunken driving accident.
- Place flowers on the victims' graves on their birthdays for 10 years.

Other creative sentences handed down by Poe have included ordering a man convicted of assaulting his wife to apologize to her from the steps of City Hall through a loudspeaker.

Reverse-discrimination case ends, saving affirmative action's future

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — Heading off what could have been a fatal blow to affirmative action from the U.S. Supreme Court, civil rights groups put up the money to settle a reverse-discrimination suit brought by a white teacher who was laid off so a black colleague could keep her job.

The nation's high court, which has grown increasingly hostile to race-based policies in recent years, had already agreed to hear Sharon Taxman's case, and it was expected to yield a significant ruling on affirmative action.

But the Piscataway school board voted 5-3 late Thursday to settle with Taxman for $433,500 after the Black Leadership Forum, an alliance of civil rights groups, came forward to say it would pay 70 percent.

"This settlement demonstrates the panic within the civil rights establishment," said Clint Bolick of the conservative Institute for Justice in Washington. "This could have been a knockout blow for racial preferences."

Taxman's attorney, Steven Klausner, said, "It's obvious to me that they were afraid that affirmative action might be very badly damaged."

California county plans to be first to ship out government-issued pot

SAN FRANCISCO — From the evidence room to the living room.

That's how officials in one northern California county envision a government-run program to distribute confiscated marijuana to the sick.

In response to Proposition 215, the medical marijuana initiative California voters approved last year, San Mateo County's first-of-its-kind program would give pot seized in criminal cases to the sick — under tightly controlled conditions.

The marijuana first would be photographed and cataloged for use in trials. Then it would be shipped to public health clinics, where it would be tested for freshness and contamination.

If the pot meets quality standards, it would be doled out at clinics to patients or others authorized to pick it up. Users would need a prescription and would have to register with the sheriff's department.

"We're trying to make it available to those who need it most and be sensitive to the people's intent in the spirit of Proposition 215," said San Mateo County Supervisor Mike Nevin, the former San Francisco police detective who suggested the idea.

The county has as much as $200,000 worth of marijuana in its evidence rooms on any given day, and between 500 and 1,500 people who could be eligible to use it, Nevin said. Right now, the pot ends up being destroyed.

SAM DONALDSON of ABC News speaks Friday afternoon as part of the Landon Lecture Series in McCain Auditorium. Donaldson was the 112th speaker in the Landon Lecture Series.

LECTURE

day of work.

"He comes home after work and sits on the sofa and he wants to be entertained," Donaldson said.

The final group is not interested in what network news was offering, he said.

"These are people who believe there are three-headed cows," Donaldson said.

In order to attract the important second group of people, networks need to increase viewership by making news programs interesting.

In order to do so, making the news important to people was necessary. Until the '90s, he said, it was easy to get viewers because of significant world events involving other nations.

Now there is no Cold War, news includes issues such as a hole in the ozone layer and national politics.

"What we have to do is say, 'These are things that will interest you,'" Donaldson said.

The new challenge is to entertain, but in an informative and accurate manner.

Donaldson said the news begins with the human side that will attract interest, but factual information is inserted during the rest of the story.

Along those lines, Donaldson said he once asked former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher what she thought of Tonya Harding after an interview about international policy.

"My memory is that she looked at me as if I'd taken leave of my senses," he said.

At that time, he said, it was the story people wanted to hear. Thatcher just did not want to talk about it.

Planning can ease world travel

SARA BURDETTE
staff reporter

Pack your bags, you're outta here.

But not so fast. When preparing for an international trip, students need to be aware of the extra work required before leaving and make some important preparations before departure.

Jerrilynn Romano, coordinator for study abroad programs, said there is a lot of preparation that needs to be done long before getting on the plane.

"The first thing I would tell students is to get a good guide book," Romano said. She also suggested searching the World Wide Web to learn about the weather and other cultural differences.

Romano also stressed taking more than just traveler's checks for money. American Express offers a variety of services to students traveling with an American Express card. Also, it is good to take an ATM card.

Rosella Ogg, assistant art professor who is leading a group to Scotland, said the exchange rate is good when using an ATM card.

Ogg also stressed that students need to travel light, as did Romano.

"I recommend something that students can carry on their back. Anything with wheels isn't good because not all roads are paved," Romano said.

Another important thing to consider is insurance. Ogg said students need to find out whether their current policies cover international trips. If not, they need to get short-term coverage.

Romano said students can find more information about insurance policies for international trips in the Office of International Programs. The office usually works with two companies, one of which uses a daily rate. The other uses a weekly rate. When choosing between the two plans, students need to consider how long they will be traveling.

In addition, Romano strongly suggested getting an international student identification card. Students can get one at the K-State Student Union from the Union Program Council office by filling out an application and paying $20. The card allows students to receive discounts, offers limited insurance and identifies the student as an international student.

Romano said there are a lot of additional things students can do to prepare for a trip abroad, from buying a voltage adapter to researching the culture through the Internet or guide books.

Students learn cultures abroad

SARA BURDETTE
staff reporter

Imagine walking through the hills of Edinburgh, sleeping in an old castle in Scotland or touring the finest museums of London and Paris.

The Office of International Programs allows students to have these experiences through summer, spring and winter break trips, and semester exchange programs.

"There isn't a better way to learn about a culture's art and history than to travel all over the world," Anna Holcombe, associate professor of art, said.

Costs of trips will vary depending on exchange rates, air fare, meals and other added extras a trip might have, said Jerrilynn Romano, coordinator for study abroad programs.

Many trips, with destinations from Africa to Germany, are planned for the summer and spring breaks. This summer, the Office of International Programming, with the help of the art department, has coordinated trips to Faenza, Italy, and Hospitalfield, Scotland.

Holcombe is leading the Italy trip. Students can earn three hours of undergraduate credit for the three-week trip, as well as learn about the culture of another country. Holcombe said the expense of the trip is still undetermined although ballpark figures range from $2,800 to $3,000.

Holcombe, like Romano, said it is too early to get exact air fares and because the exchange rate could change. The trip to Italy will concentrate on ceramics, and students who wish to go must have taken Ceramics I.

Because this is Holcombe's fifth trip abroad, the planning has gotten easier.

"I work with a liaison from Italy very closely, and it has also gotten easier because I know what to expect now," she said.

The Scotland trip, which will focus on drawing, is also offered for three hours of undergraduate credit. Students must have at least Drawing I before the trip.

Teresa Schmidt and Rosella Ogg, assistant professors of art, will be leading the three-week trip. Ogg said she joined Schmidt in leading the trip simply because it is exactly what she would want to be doing if she wasn't teaching.

"I went to Europe for six weeks in 1983 and again in 1985, and met so many young people. I was so impressed that I promised myself if I could help students have the opportunity to study abroad, I would," Ogg said.

The Scotland trip will allow students to stay in Hospitalfield, where they will stay in an old castle that has been renovated for students. In addition, the students will take day trips, listen to speakers and spend a great deal of time drawing.

This is Ogg's first time taking students abroad, although she is no stranger to overseas travel. She said she is a little apprehensive about having a congenial group.

"Even though you may get a hurdle in your path, it always seems to work out," Ogg said.

With both trips, students will have time set aside to explore and take in the culture of the country.

Thanksgiving a time to help others who are less fortunate

Thanksgiving is here again. In all the bustle to get ready for the holidays, now is the perfect time to remember those who don't have as much or will be alone this holiday. Here are a few things to do for others that keep in the true spirit of Thanksgiving.

Give to others. There are several organizations around town that are ready to accept your donation of food or time. Dillons has a program that lets you add a dollar to your grocery bill. The extra money goes to the Flint Hills Breadbasket to buy dinners for needy families in the area. Just ask the cashier to scan a turkey for you.

Many groups start collecting canned foods this time of year. When you're buying your holiday dinner fixings, throw a few extra cans in the cart.

Go to a homeless shelter and help serve dinner on Thursday. Sometimes, looking into the eyes of someone who's getting the best meal they've had in a while is all it takes to make you grateful for what you have.

Remember those who have enough to eat but no one to share it with. If you know someone who can't get home for the holiday, invite them in. Spend the day together. Family doesn't always have to be related.

Thanksgiving is a time to think about the other person. Let this be the beginning of a year-round tradition of giving and sharing.

If you are going home, remember those in need in your own towns. Perhaps this would be a good time for your family to make a tradition of giving to others.

Please remember that there are lots of people on the road with children this time of year. Drive carefully and buckle up. There are more highway accidents the days after holidays than at any other times of the year. With bad weather possible any day now, it's just one more reason to be cautious when traveling.

With that said, have a wonderful holiday, enjoy your friends and family, be safe and come back rested up and ready to tackle the final two weeks of the semester.

Turkey time equals burstin' bellies

VIEWPOINT

MARY RENEE SMITH

MARY RENEE SMITH is a sophomore in speech. You can send e-mail to Mary at mojo@ksu.edu

Most of us are headed somewhere for Thanksgiving. Come Thursday morning, the smell of turkey and stuffing will fill our home or the home of our parents or other loved ones.

Most of us will not have a Martha Stewart Thanksgiving with fine china and crystal wine glasses on pristine white linen table cloths. Thank the gods.

If your family is anything like mine, it will be a typical, middle-class American holiday.

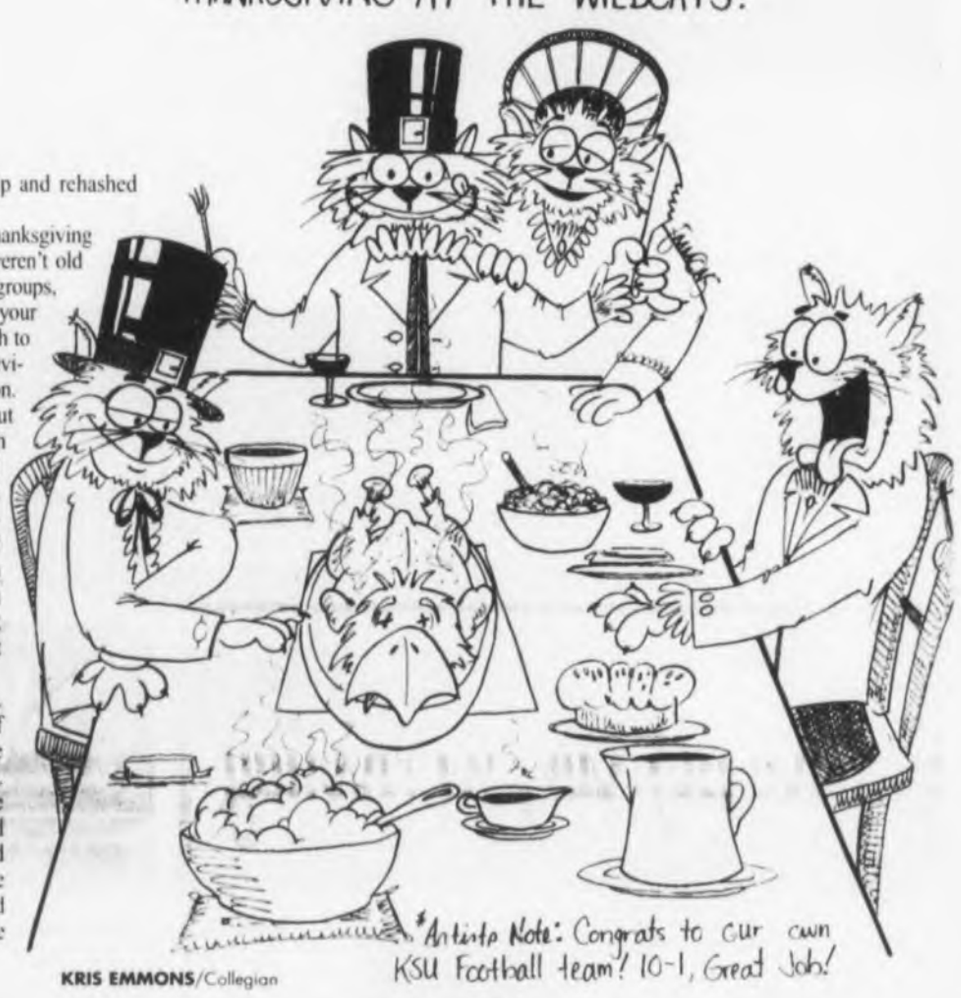
The day will start early with somebody rubbing the turkey in very unerotic ways with seasoning and then stuffing the poor bird with a special mixture of bread and other secret stuff you'd rather not know about. At my house there is a strange step between the rubbing and the stuffing — the dancing of the bird.

My mother has a strange relationship with the turkey each year. Mom talks to the bird while she pulls out its innards for gravy. She holds the bird by the wings and makes it dance across the counter. Every year, she names the bird, you guessed it, Tom Turkey.

Each year, there is a strange collection of trashy hors d'oeuvres on the faux silver tray. Celery filled with peanut butter or cream cheese. Green olives with pimentos. Black olives — you know it's not Thanksgiving until you stick black olives on the ends of your fingers. My mom always has those little sweet pickles we never have any other time of the year.

Sweet potatoes are an interesting experiment. Yams, stuck in a crock pot, covered in brown sugar and molasses, topped with tiny marshmallows. When I was a kid, I wondered why my mother didn't make potatoes like that all the time.

Perhaps the biggest mystery surrounding most dinner tables that fateful afternoon is what the hell are those onion-flavored things on top of the green-bean casserole? The concoction of mushroom soup and French-style green beans (I don't really think they are French) is always topped with those onion things. You never see them any other time of year. Are they ever used on anything else? What are they really made out of? Why are they there?



The best part of Thanksgiving is after the meal. After everyone has eaten until they feel they are going to burst and then have helped themselves to a couple pieces of pie comes the greatest time of all — the second pickings. The time when you can go into the kitchen and have a big helping of whatever your favorite food is. For me, I like to tear off pieces of the turkey and dip them in the weird juice left at the bottom of the roasting pan. I know it's gross, but the taste is heaven.

Gender roles and family position play a big part in Thanksgiving. In my family, the men went into the living room after the big feast, watched football and fell asleep. The women retired to the kitchen to clean up and proceeded to drink Irish creme liqueur in coffee until they were giddy, spread the latest gossip and rehashed old family secrets.

When you were a teenager, Thanksgiving was the longest day on earth. You weren't old enough to fit into any of the adult groups, you couldn't go hang out with your friends and, if you were lucky enough to be in a house with more than one television, there still wasn't a damn thing on.

Thanksgiving is all about Americans' bizarre relationship with food. While I lived in Germany, I tried to explain Thanksgiving to a German friend. After a long explanation about Pilgrims, Indians and American tradition, she said, "So you make all this food you know you can't eat in one day and then eat it for a week. Then, whatever is left you throw away."

Yep, that is pretty much it. Thanksgiving is the celebration of being wasteful gluttons and the wasteful gluttony of our forefathers. (Oh yeah, and the celebration of the white men who came to this land and stole it from the people who had been here for centuries. Then the systematic destruction of the land and the herding of the people like cattle unto reservations.)

Ken, Barbie create unrealistic, flawed image

SHANE FOSBURG/Collegian

Barbie's getting a boob job.

That is, they're getting smaller. She's also getting a larger waist and less prominent hips. So long, 38-18-34, hello ... well, normality.

Mattel is giving Barbie her first big makeover ever. The 1998 Barbie will look drastically different, "more realistic," as Mattel puts it.

This move to normalize the doll has already begun to garner cheers from parents, feminists and child advocates alike.

Finally, Mattel has heard their complaints that Barbie was creating a false image of beauty that American children were holding as gospel. These declarations can end now.

Before we turn Barbie's new designer into a hero and the savior of our self-esteem-lacking youth, we need to realize that complaints had nothing to do with the change.

That's right. By their own admittance, Mattel is not changing Barbie to help create a more positive image for children. Rather, they created the new doll as a response to children's wants, and children want more realism. So, Barbie has been reduced in chest size in a toy-maker's effort to gain more market share.

Is anyone still cheering?

Once again, the greed-driven capitalists have shrouded their ulterior motives in a blanket of sincerity. How nice.

While the move will certainly make Barbie into a better role model, she is still far from reality. After all, this is a doll who drives a Corvette, lives in a mansion, owns two or three RVs, is married to a stud and will still have a not-to shabby figure.

Not totally unrealistic (certainly describes my upbringing), but far from your average family. A truly realistic aspiration would entail a Barbie-drives-a-1983-Nissan-Sentra-wagon-hatchback-with-an-AM-radio,-three-different-colors-of-paint,-a-luggage-rack,-torn-vinyl-seats,-a-cracked-windshield,-one-hubcap-and-no-proof-of-insurance doll.

Or a Barbie-stands-in-the-unemployment-line-because,-as-an-unskilled-worker,-she-has-trouble-finding-a-job-and-is-now-part-of-the-13.7-percent-of-Americans-who-fall-under-the-poverty-line doll. Not big sellers and not necessarily great role models, but closer to the average citizen than the voluptuous millionaire now being hawked in bright pink boxes.

VIEWPOINT

CHRISTOPHER McLEMORE

CHRIS McLEMORE is a sophomore in political science and speech. You can send e-mail to Chris at clm1182@ksu.edu

A happy medium would be nice. A real role model for the younguns. Of course, we shouldn't hold our breath. It seems that Barbie will continue to live the lavish lifestyle, and other toy companies have dolls that follow suit. My year working for Toys 'R' Us showed me that not only has the Barbie figure infiltrated aisle 3A, but that dozens of off-brands have done their best to create shirt-filling dolls themselves.

The sad part is, children love it, and we allow it.

The image we have created for our children to mimic is clearly unrealistic and flawed. Girls must grow up to be "Barbies" with great hair, a great smile and an unattainable figure. Boys must be "Kens" with toned muscles, perfect hair and no genitalia.

Serious problems exist in these scenarios. However, if we want to eliminate these stigmas, we must stop applauding companies like Mattel for looking out for themselves and start putting pressure on these companies to make real change. Barbie will probably always drive a Corvette — after all, it's a fantasy situation — but changes need to be made in our thinking for the sake of our youth.

Obviously, we can't ensure that our children never see a busty vixen strutting across the television, but we try to ensure that they are instilled with a value system that does not idolize this type of lifestyle. Indeed, making youth obtain understanding reduces stereotypes.

Girls don't have to have 38-inch busts. Boys don't have to be bodybuilders. By providing awareness of these false images and providing good role models, we will not be misdirecting the adults of tomorrow.

Extreme steps of activism include turning off "Baywatch," ordering Sports Illustrated magazine without the swimsuit edition and going to Auntie Mae's Parlor during the Beauty on the Beach competition. Long shots, I know.

More likely steps might be talking to children (relatives, siblings, etc.) about the Barbie myth and the refusal to support companies such as Mattel. While you probably won't get Mattel to stop making the doll, you send out an important message, and you can guarantee that you are not perpetuating the doll's influence.

As it is now, the average American girl owns eight Barbies. Do us both a favor. Get your siblings a Pound Puppy this Christmas. Sure, Barbie's less-busty figure might be a step in the right direction, even if Mattel has something to gain from it.

However, the steps should not stop there. An active stance against the Barbie mindset is the best thing for our children's self-esteem and fulfillment. Even if it does involve sacrificing 38 inches of bust line.

Football supporter says ticket holders should pay

Editor,

First, I would like to be the first to say thank you to everyone who voted in the recent stadium-expansion referendum. The turnout was great, and I hope it continues for many years to come.

Second, I would like to express some concern for comments made by Athletic Director Max Urick in the Nov. 19 Collegian article.

I do not believe students are happy with just 7,500 seats, and that can be seen in the number of student tickets sold every year. But what a majority of those students voting said is that we do not feel it is fair to tax the entire student body for something that does not enhance our educational experience at K-State.

I am a huge supporter of the football program, and I would like to see the stadium expanded so that it encloses the entire field with screaming Wildcat fans. As a consumer of this venue of entertainment, I believe I should pay for it. Taxing everyone for a service that is not essential or vital seems incredibly unfair to me.

When I read quotes like those in the Nov. 19 Collegian, I get the impression the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is going to take its trucks and go play somewhere else. I would like to offer some advice.

First, there is no place else for you to go, and to alienate students would only do harm to everyone. Second, the students who voted on this referendum will someday be alumni. Those alumni will be the very people who will purchase more expensive seats, fill KSU Stadium and cheer our team five, 10 and 20 years from now.

When the issue comes up about the amount of student seating allowed, please keep in mind that the student excitement in today's football program will result in good memories and strong alumni support in the future. When you send the message that student seating will be restricted because we refused to place a tax on everyone, many of those good memories could be tainted.

While I hope we always remain a top 25 team, when such threats are made, and if the football team experiences less successful times, you might find that you alienated the very alumni you should have invested in today. In the short run, you might not have gotten what you wanted, but in the long run, the football program, athletic department and K-State can prosper as long as we all respect each other's voice.

Sharing, goodwill always true purpose of holiday

Editor,

Most of us are preparing for the trip home for Thanksgiving break, which is why I would like to dispel a common misconception about the holiday.

We were all taught in grade school about the first Thanksgiving, where the American Indians came together with the Pilgrims and feasted to give thanks for their safe voyage. But this Thanksgiving was far from the first.

Many facts about this event have been severely skewed by Euro-centricly minded historians. Primarily because the true story doesn't make the Pilgrims look as virtuous.

Upon landing on our continent, the Pilgrims were starving and lost in a new and unfamiliar land. Before long they found a fall harvest store, which belonged to the native tribe living nearby. Instead of stopping to consider who might own this food, the Pilgrims stole the food and thanked God for "providing" for them.

Luckily for the Pilgrims, the American Indians had a very different view of ownership than the Europeans. They considered their harvest for the common good. So when the Pilgrims stole their food, they weren't thinking of revenge for the theft. Instead, they were thinking those people must be very hungry.

American Indians, particularly those along the East Coast who were primarily farmers and hunter gatherers, had celebrated "Thanksgiving" for centuries.

In the late fall after the harvests, the tribes would have a feast and celebration to thank the Great Spirit for providing for them throughout the year. The "holiday" took place in the late fall, as that was when the harvests were just completed and there was plenty of food.

They also knew the hard winter was soon to come, and it was one last celebration before breaking for winter camps. In that fateful fall when the Pilgrims arrived, the American Indians decided that because the Pilgrims had moved some of their harvest to their village, they would move their feast there as well so they could share the festivities with the newcomers and welcome them to share the land.

This spirit of sharing and goodwill was always the true purpose of the holiday and has been for centuries.

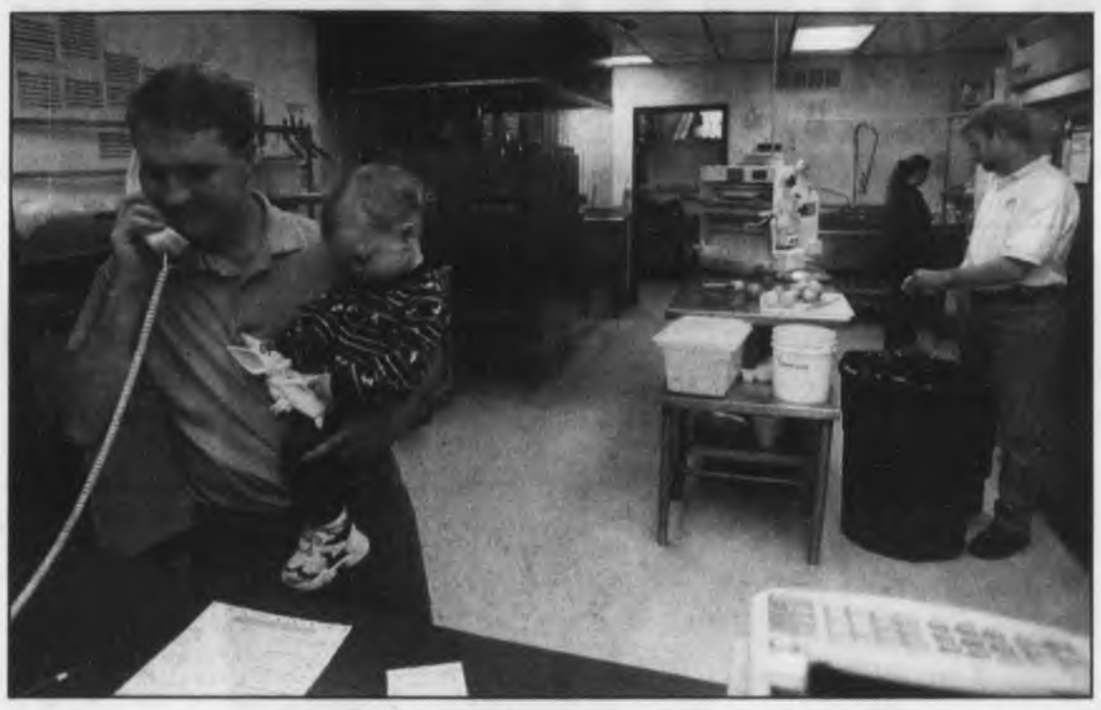
GTA orientation program would help, student says

Editor,

There are no university-wide requirements for graduate students to be able to teach a college-level course here at K-State.

The decision as to whether a graduate student is a capable instructor is left up to individual department's discretion. To compound that problem, there is a large variance as to what extent each department supports and monitors those graduate students that do teach.



I know this method is not entirely effective, because I have had a couple of graduate students teach my classes who were not really ready to teach. It was not that they were incapable teachers by any means, but rather, they had not yet crossed the bridge from learning in the classroom to teaching in the classroom.

A solution is to organize a campus-wide orientation program before school starts in the fall that would be mandatory for new graduate students in each department they will be teaching.

A mentor program in which a faculty member is named to oversee the graduate teacher's progress and development should also be included to help the graduate student improve as an instructor.

Regardless of the solution, something needs to be done so everyone here at K-State can receive a quality education expected from the best available teachers.

Students balance classes, local business

MATT KREPS
staff writer

The oven's roar assaults customers as they walk in the door of Gambino's Pizza at 2708 Anderson Ave. There is enough red, green and white in the store to herald the holiday season any day of the year.

The woman behind the counter greets customers with a smile. She isn't an employee. She's the owner and a K-State student.

"It's hard. You're always busy," Leah Suellentrop, junior in agriculture economics, said. "You have to have a strong work ethic."

Leah, her husband, Paul, her brother-in-law, Brian Suellentrop, and sister-in-law, Sarah Suellentrop, own the pizza carry-out and delivery business. All besides Paul are K-State students.

"Everybody has their thing, and this is ours," Sarah Suellentrop, sophomore in music education, said.

Brian said he likes the business because it is a better alternative than a regular eight-to-five job, allowing him to spend more time with his family and his son.

"I feel like I see him a lot more now than if I was doing something like that," he said.

The business came about because Paul was having trouble finding a job in the field of human resources. So while Leah went to school, Paul worked at a local pizza place.

"Unless you own your own business or work for the university, then it's hard to find a job," Leah said.

They decided opening their own business was the best choice.

Gambino's was a logical choice for the family because they believed in the product, Leah said. Paul's and Brian's uncle is the president of the chain.

Leah said many K-State students have Gambino's franchises in their hometowns, so they knew it would do well in Manhattan. The hardest part was finding the right place, she said.

"It took a long time to find a location in Manhattan," she said. "Locations are hard to come by, especially good ones."

The location they eventually found was an old office. They completed the remodeling themselves to save money.

The storefront design was a new one, and it wasn't a part of the Gambino's franchise. It caught on and now appears on the front of stores that have opened since. The chain opened more than 20 new stores last year.

Leah also said the business gives them a good reason to do well in school.

"Why work for all this and then get lousy grades?" she asked.

The family operates more as a team than as a business with specific jobs. Paul handles most of the general management because he is finished with school. Brian takes care of most of the finances because he is in the College of Business Administration.

The two couples take turns giving each other weekends off to get away. They also cover for each other if someone has a test or project for class.

"It's tough, but the thing that makes it easy for us is we have each other," Leah said.

They also bounce ideas off each other to make the business stand out from other pizza places in town and attract customers.

"All of us see different things that are going on around us," Brian said.

One of those ideas was the "beat-the-clock special." On Monday nights after 6:30, large pizzas cost whatever time it is. There are a lot of calls right away, they said.

In the end, the business provides a way of living for the families and fits well with school. It also keeps them in control of their own destiny.

"Everyone dreams of being their own boss. We're living that dream," she said.

Comedians parody politicians while recording radio program

JAMI NELSON
staff reporter

"Saturday Night Live" fans started off their evening of watching comedy a little early Saturday night, thanks to the Imagination Workshop. But this time they weren't watching the humor as much as listening to it.

The comedy was not on their television sets, but rather on the stage of McCain Auditorium in the form of a radio show. The Imagination Workshop provided modern comedy skits with a splash of holiday cheer. It entertained the McCain audience while recording the broadcast for its Christmas radio special to be sent to 100 National Public Radio stations next month.

Art Review

The cast of three women and five men created skits intertwined with commercials and songs. Some skits addressed political issues and parodied political figures like President Clinton and the first lady, Bob Dole, Ross Perot and Janet Reno.

In one parody, Saddam Hussein's son borrowed the family car without knowing his father had stored his nuclear weapons in the back seat. Not knowing what the objects were, the son confessed he sold the weapons to Kuwait.

The skits also focused on entertainers and recording artists. In one commercial, the group parodied the chants of the Gregorian monks with the Franciscan Brothers' chants of Latin-sounding product names. Long slurs of Latin-sounding automobile names brought laughs to the audience members.

Although many of the skits spoofed real-life personalities, some skits involved personalities created by the Imagination Workshop. One such skit featured the Buck Naked Frontier Scout. His trademark was being naked because the other cowboys had taken all the existing trademarks. This skit used Albert and Costello's "Who's on First" approach to comedy.

In addition to the unusual nature of this performance, the stage was set differently, too. The set-up was informal, and the cast members attempted to hide few of the props they used. Chairs lined the back of the stage, which performers sat in while awaiting their next skits. Pages of scripts, as well as cups and bottles of water, were scattered beneath their chairs.

A large carpet square lay between the chairs and the two microphones that stood at stage front. This muffled performers' footsteps as they approached the microphone, which helped to make a clearer recording.

As the performers gathered around the microphones, they became the personalities of their characters solely using their voices. The only props used to visually enhance the performance were hats. Otherwise, the distinct voices of the characters carried their personalities.

Another aspect of the performance was the use of music and sound effects. Little clips of music filled the air between skits and provided background music for commercials. In one instance, the instrumentalist performed Christmas carols and Mozart pieces using the bongo drums as "Bongo Bob" advertised his Christmas albums.

Opening and closing doors, ringing telephones, breaking glass and galloping horses complemented the music. A sound-effects person created the sounds to make the voices have more of a location, rather than just being part of a conversation. As people entered or left a conversation, a small box with a hinged door and doorknob opened and closed, adding a realism to the actions of the voices.

The Imagination Workshop accomplished several feats Saturday night. It entertained audience members by probing their imaginations, and it gave an inside look into the waning industry of radio dramas.

K-State women down Redbirds with strong 2nd-half play

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

After a pair of exhibition losses, the K-State women's basketball team rebounded for its regular-season opener, beating Illinois State 66-55 in front of 1,951 fans at Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State coach Deb Patterson said she was more comfortable with the team coming into Friday night's game.

"I felt like we had had a great week of practice," Patterson said. "Our intensity level was up, our consistency at practice was up. I went into this game with far more confidence than the other two (exhibition) games."

K-State started slowly, trailing 13-5 before forward Brandy Harris made a pair of field goals to cut the Redbirds' lead to four points. The Redbirds again went on a run, taking a 24-13 lead on a three-pointer by guard Jenny Schmidt.

But guard Brit Jacobson answered with a three of her own for the Wildcats. After a fadeaway jumper from Illinois State forward Corinne Vossel extended the Redbirds' lead to 26-16, K-State went on an 8-1 run to end the second half. The teams headed to the break with the Redbirds leading 27-24.

> "At the end of the first half, we finally started to click. We finally started to get a little bit of timing and a little bit of understanding and confidence."

> head coach

With eight-tenths of a second left in the first half, K-State center Angie Finkes went to the basket strong, forcing Redbird forward Valarie Trame to commit her third foul. Finkes couldn't convert on the free throws, but that proved to be a key play in the game.

With 18:46 left in the game, Trame picked up her fourth foul and was out of the game for more than 10 minutes. Trame started all 28 games for the Redbirds a year ago and was their third-leading scorer with 11.2 points per game.

"I think they had to play a more careful game at that point in time, and I think it was a factor," Patterson said.

K-State started the second half the way it finished the first — on a roll. The Cats outscored Illinois State 16-5 in the first 10 minutes of the half, jumping out to a 40-32 lead. When Vossel scored with 9:48 left in the second half, that was the first Redbird field goal in 14 minutes, 41 seconds, going back to the first half. During that stretch, the Cats outscored the Redbirds 24-8.

"At the end of the first half, we finally started to click," Patterson said. "We finally started to get a little bit of timing and a little bit of understanding and confidence."

Finkes said the defensive stand led to better offensive play for the Cats.

"Defense makes your offense," Finkes said. "I thought we played really good, aggressive defense, and that always helps your offense."

K-State would lead by as many as 17 points in the second half and cruised from there to take the contest with a 66-55 win.

The Cats shot 52 percent from the field in the second half and 44.2 percent for the game. Finkes led the way with 18 points, 14 of those in the second half, and she pulled down seven rebounds.

"I was real pleased with the change in Angie's (Finkes) first and second halves," Patterson said. "She wanted the basketball, and she took good shots."

Jacobson had 12 points, and Harris and guard Kim Woodlee each scored nine for the Cats. Forward Jenny Coalson led the squad with 8 rebounds and six assists.

"I think winning tonight was big, very big, for our freshmen and our newcomers, and our returners," Patterson said. "It reinforced that this last week of change in the gym really made a difference."

The Cats return to the court tomorrow night, facing Drake at Bramlage Coliseum. The Bulldogs return four starters from the defending Missouri Valley Conference championship squad that went 23-7 last year. The game starts at 7 p.m. Admission is free with a valid K-State student ID.

▸ CATS WHIP IOWA STATE 28-3 to record best record since 1910.

SAM FELSENFELD
staff writer

AMES, Iowa — The night before every game, the Wildcat football team watches a motivational videotape. Music highlights the video, especially the song "Right Now" by Van Halen.

Right now, it's all tomorrow.
Right now, come on, it's everything.
Right now, catch that magic moment.
Do it right here and now, it means everything.

Last Saturday, the tape worked.

The Wildcats could have easily overlooked Iowa State. After all, the Cyclones entered the game 1-9 and coming off a 77-14 loss to Nebraska. The Cats had just beaten Colorado for the first time in 13 years, and K-State's players were well aware of the hype surrounding their postseason possibilities. K-State could be headed to the Fiesta Bowl, which would be the first Alliance Bowl appearance in school history, or a repeat performance in the Cotton Bowl, a New Year's Day game.

But K-State beat the Cyclones 28-3 to finish with a 10-win regular season for the first time since 1910.

"I told them I was proud of them. They're a 10-1 football team," Coach Bill Snyder said. "'I'm really happy for our seniors."

The Cats defense played another solid game, holding the opponents to seven or fewer points for the fifth time this season.

The K-State defense limited the Cyclones to zero rushing yards on 36 attempts. Iowa State running back Darren Davis, brother of the New Orleans Saints' Troy Davis, rushed the ball 23 times for 66 yards, but Cyclone quarterback Todd Bandhauer was sacked eight times for minus-66 yards. Davis' 66 yards gave him 1,005 for the season.

Davis reached the milestone twice in the game. He passed in the second half but dropped back triple digits after the Cats stopped him for a series of negative gains.

"Kansas State has a very good team, and it was difficult to execute against their defense today," Davis said.

While the Cat defense had no problem stopping the run,

Bowl reps would love K-State for Fiesta

SUN DEE MILLS

AMES, Iowa — As the Wildcats scored their four touchdowns against Iowa State, K-State fans sent tortillas flying into the end zone as a hint to the powers-that-be about the fans' bowl preference. And perhaps unbeknownst to the fans, the big tortillas were watching.

The Fiesta Bowl representatives in attendance at the Iowa State game Saturday weren't just any representatives, either. Charlie Thompson, Fiesta Bowl president and John Junker, executive director of the Fiesta Bowl, were in Ames, Iowa, to watch the Cats in action for the second time in two weeks.

"You should read a lot into this," Thompson said of their presence at the game. "We could be at any number of important games this weekend, and we chose to be here."

Coach Bill Snyder said he told the players about the representatives' presence before the game.

"I told them that it should not go unnoticed that the Fiesta Bowl CEO and president have been here to watch us two weeks in a row," Snyder said.

But junior linebacker Travis Ochs said the Fiesta Bowl's presence was not a factor on the field.

"It didn't really make me nervous to know that," Ochs said. "They're gonna do what they're gonna do, and we can't do anything about it."

The Fiesta Bowl takes the fourth and sixth pick of the three Alliance Bowls, after the Orange Bowl and the Sugar Bowl. Although Big East team Virginia Tech didn't make the poll this week, Thompson said one of the bowls must take that team because it is likely the Big East champion by virtue of beating No. 16 Syracuse. And the Fiesta Bowl might end up being that bowl.

"Everyone thinks that will happen," Thompson said. "But remember when Texas beat Nebraska in the Big 12 championship game? Everyone said it would be BYU and Penn State, but it wasn't. There's still a lot of football to be played."

K-State's 10-1 record puts them in the same department with No. 5 Florida State, No. 8 North Carolina and No. 10 Washington State, all three of which came in above No. 11 K-State in the Associated Press poll this weekend. But polls aren't important to the selection committee, Thompson said.

"It doesn't matter," Thompson said. "K-State has great fans, and a great deal of revenue came out of the Cotton Bowl."

If Tennessee wins at Vanderbilt and Nebraska prevails at Colorado this weekend, they will most likely meet up in the national championship Orange Bowl. The Sugar Bowl could take any of the remaining top-12 teams, with the immediate exception of No. 6 UCLA, Washington State and No. 12 Arizona State.

Because Arizona State beat Washington State — Washington State's only loss — and UCLA lost to Washington State and Tennessee, things are still up for grabs in the Pac-10. The three teams' fates still lie with the outcome of this weekend's intrastate rival game between Arizona and ASU.

The Pac-10 champion will meet Michigan in the Rose Bowl.

Sun Devil Stadium is ASU's home field, so the Sun Devils are a legitimate contender for the at-large bid, Thompson said. The two teams in the same game in Arizona would be a dream come true, he added.

"An Arizona State-Kansas State match-up would be heaven on earth," Thompson said. "I could see a 52-48 football game. It would be two great schools and two great programs together."

The Fiesta Bowl sponsors 52 events that surround the game, including the Fiesta Bowl parade that attracts 400,000 people to see it

K-State gets 100th win in Bramlage in 39-point blowout over 49ers

JOEL WHITE
staff writer

The Wildcats' 100th win in Bramlage Coliseum came in the form of a 39-point blowout of the Long Beach State 49ers.

With the 89-50 drubbing, the Cats increased their all-time record in Bramlage to 100-38.

"I liked our first five or 10 minutes, but I'm not sure about much past that," Coach Tom Asbury said. "We came out almost textbook at the start."

The Cats' first five field goals were three-pointers. Cat sophomore Josh Reid hit K-State's first two three-point shots of the game.

"After the first two, the bucket looked a little bit bigger," Reid said. "I was looking for the shot because we worked against that zone all week. I knew what shot I was going to get."

Reid made his first two three-point shots from the wing and his third from the corner against the 49ers' 1-3-1 zone.

Sophomore guard Duane Davis hit the next two Cat three-pointers.

Freshman guard Adam Lopez banked in the Cats' fifth three-point shot in three minutes to make the score 15-2.

The Cats made a total of eight three-pointers in the first half.

Cat forward Pero Vasiljevic made the most of his first appearance of this season with career highs in points (six) and rebounds (five). His performance was highlighted by a thundering dunk off an assist from Reid with 8:23 to go in the first half. Vasiljevic's slam made the score 31-6.

After missing their first 18 shots from the field, the 49ers' first field goal came with 6:56 left in the first half as forward Antrone Lee hit a jump shot in the lane. His shot made the score 31-10.

Lee scored nine of the 49ers' 17 points in the first half.

The Cats held the 49ers to shooting four of 23 for 17.4 percent in the first half. That set a record for the lowest field-goal percentage in a half by an opponent. The previous record was 22.2 percent set by Northwest Missouri State on Dec. 8, 1990.

The 49ers' 17 first-half points set a Bramlage Coliseum record for the fewest points allowed in a half. The previous record was held by NWMSU with 18.

"I give our defense some credit," Asbury said. "You have to sustain your defense reasonably well for that amount of time because you would think they would slop into one somewhere along the line."

Volleyball team drops games to No. 10 Longhorns, No. 17Aggies; losing skid hits 5

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

A pair of losses this weekend pushed the K-State volleyball team's losing streak to five matches, and hopes of going to the NCAA Tournament for the second-consecutive year might be fading.

Losses to No. 10 Texas and No. 17 Texas A&M sent K-State's record to 18-12 and evened the Wildcats' conference mark to 9-9.

Friday night, the Cats went into Austin, Texas, for a match against the Longhorns, trying to end a three-match losing streak and prevent the Horns from clinching a portion of the Big 12 title. Texas came into the match with a 15-1 conference record and won by a 3-0 count, with game scores of 15-6, 15-10 and 15-7.

K-State hurt itself with errors. The Cats committed 27 hitting errors, their third-highest total of the season, along with 12 service errors. Those errors led to the Cats hitting under .200 in every game and .136 for the match, while the Horns hit at a .319 clip.

"I thought they played very well tonight," K-State head coach Jim McLaughlin said. "They played steady and conservative. I thought we played aggressive at times, but we just missed too many serves. They just put so much pressure on you, and we were too hot and cold tonight."

The Cats looked to recover from their third-straight 3-0 loss by beating Texas A&M. When the Aggies played K-State in Manhattan on Oct. 24, the Cats handed the Aggies their worst loss in seven years, 15-6, 15-2, 15-2. Texas A&M is the only nationally ranked team K-State has beaten all year.

But the Aggies recovered from that performance, winning 3-1. Texas A&M has now won eight of nine matches.

K-State fell behind in the first game 9-5, but the Cats scored seven consecutive points to take a 12-9 lead. The Aggies made a late charge to withstand two K-State game points, but a block by setter Devon Ryning and middle blocker Val Wieck on the Aggies' Stacy Sykora gave the Cats the game one victory, 15-13.

But A&M charged back for games two and three. The Aggies hit .550 and .489 in games two and three, respectively, while holding K-State to -.080 and .137. As a result, K-State suffered its worst two-game stretch of the season, losing 15-0 and 15-2.

K-State was more competitive in game four but fell again. The Cats went down 8-1 but battled back to within 10-9. The Aggies took five of the final six points, though, and closed out the match with a 15-10 win.

The Cats had a season-high 30 hitting errors in the match and lost for only the second time this season in 19 matches when winning the first game.

"I thought one of the positives to come out of this match was the way we played after games two and three," McLaughlin said. "I thought we played decent and played hard and showed a lot of character. Now we just need to get to work and take care of our next two matches and hope that's good enough to get us to the NCAA Tournament."

The next two matches are the last two for the Cats. Missouri comes into Ahearn Field House on Friday night, and Iowa State visits Saturday night. The teams have a combined four conference wins, and K-State beat each of them 3-0 in its first meetings this year.

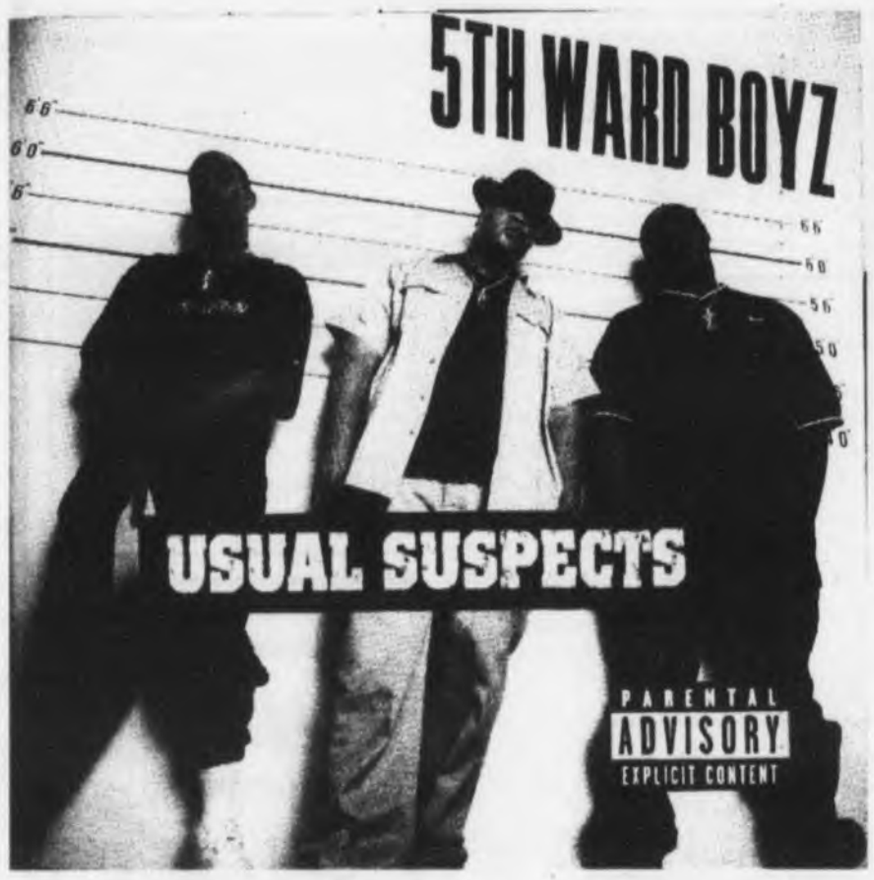
LOOKINGback

1871 – The National Rifle Association was incorporated on this day. Remember, "Guns don't kill. People do." Hey, watch where you're pointing that person!



1964 – For the first time since 1800, residents of the District of Columbia were permitted to vote in a presidential election.

1986 – The American Eagle silver dollar, like its gold counterpart, became all the rage on this, its first day of issue, by selling out. An additional 250,000 coins were also ordered this day by coin dealers.

5TH WARD BOYZ

Release preaches about gangsta life

REVIEW BY JEREMY KELLEY

With its third release since 1993, the 5th Ward Boyz come back with their most recent release, titled "Usual Suspects." Rappers Lo-life, E-rock and 007 have that originally West Coast rap sound.

Review Music

The record label, Rap-A-Lot/Noo Trybe Records, has produced such big names as L.L. Cool J, Kris Cross and Shaquille O'Neal.

Produced by "J" Prince and Dewey Forker, this album is consistent with the West Coast rap sound. In fact, "Usual Suspects" reiterates the gangster themes made popular by big names such as Tupac and Snoop Doggy Dogg.

On its first track, "Gangsta St," which features Spice 1, the 5th Ward Boyz address the problem of being a gangster on the West Coast. This track is creepy, like freaky Halloween theme music. In Snoop Dogg's album "Doggystyle," he continually repeats the phrase "the 187" — the penal code for homicide for the Los Angeles Police Department. This same theme is rehashed in this song.

Also on this track, 007 warns all those "bustas" to stay clear of him and his boys. It is rather noticeable in the line: "I got you boys looking at my crack spot, and I am going to have to turn it up a notch."

Another song that emphasizes this theme throughout the album is "Heat." It's rather reminiscent of Tupac's themes that bellow throughout his albums. "We bring heat upon your ass" is a stern warning for all those that interact with these boys.

In the track "Got II be down II die," the 5th Ward Boyz stage a robbery where they rob someone and then take their "g's." At first, I thought they were advocating this sort of activity, but throughout the song, they talk about the "hella-tight surprises" the street offers for those who choose to rob the corner liquor store.

The 5th Ward Boyz offer warnings for those who pursue this kind of lifestyle but stress it is important for one "to be down" if he pursues a life like this: "Money is the root of all evil" and every man alive will live and die for this.

It's a great story and a real message, especially in the line: "Go and grab the chrome so, tell 'em that you ain't afraid to die, squeeze the trigger ask me why I'm so dangerous."

Not only do the 5th Ward Boyz continually preach about its gangster life, it also speaks a lot about the struggle to try and sell anything from crack to compact discs, while being willing to go to jail just to get that money. The theme blares throughout the chorus in the lines of the song "Fk strugglin'" with "I'm tired of being broke, tired of looking like a joke."

Another popular track for the 5th Ward Boyz is the song "P.W.A.," featuring Wille D and Devin of the Odd Squad. P.W.A. stands for "women," weed and alcohol — the three things that "seem to satisfy us all, plus that cash go with it."

The 5th Ward Boys talk about the laid-back life of finding women, smoking marijuana and drinking alcohol because that's a "playa' rule."

All they want is money, cars and women and then go on to say they will do anything to accommodate their woman as long as they are sexually active. After that, all they want to do with those items is "show 'em off to my dogs."

If you like rap, especially that West Coast style, I recommend picking this album up. It's not worth waiting until this CD slips into the used section at Streetside.

Gaming groups gather for fantasy convention

JOHN FRANSON
staff writer

Manhattan was the scene of fearsome battles and ancient magic Saturday night in the K-State Student Union.

KonzaCon, organized by the Elements of Fantasy club, brought together collectors, gamers and vendors for a day of collectible card game tournaments, table-top warfare and comic-book buying.

Pat McDonald, faculty adviser for the club, said turnout was better than he expected.

"I was pleased. I think almost all of our vendors were real happy, and the turnout was pretty good, I thought, for a first con."

Stacey Davis, owner of GateKeeper Hobbies, said he agreed.

"I think it can only get bigger from here," he said. "For a first-year con, this was great. We've been to a lot of first-year cons, and we've seen some pretty small ones."

KonzaCon was the first convention of its kind in Manhattan in a decade, the previous one being 1987's ImagiCon, sponsored by the now-defunct Star Writers club.

"It was a good deal," Steve Elder, owner of The Gamer comics shop, said of ImagiCon. "Then interest kind of faded as far as the campus group went, but I think the group (Elements of Fantasy) actually got together and did a good job this year."

The true measure of an event's success always lies with what its participants think, and John Diesel, K-State graduate in business, said he thought KonzaCon was great. Diesel beat 20 other players to win the Magic: The Gathering tournament. It was the first such tournament he's ever won. His prize was a box of Magic playing cards, valued at more than $100.

"I think they should do (KonzaCon) every, maybe, couple of months, you know. Or once a month would be cool with me," he said while tearing open the pack of his newly won cards. "I really enjoy playing with lots of people, and sometimes, especially with this game, it's hard to find people to play with."

Diesel started playing Magic three years ago and now plays once or twice a week.

Elder said now was a good time for KonzaCon. He said the popularity of fantasy gaming has increased by leaps and bounds, and the comic-book industry is coming out of a prolonged slump.

Elder credits Image and other upstart companies like DC's Vertigo line, as well as independents, with resuscitating the industry.

Davis said people are excited about next year's KonzaCon.

"People are already talking about the next one," he said. "If we can advertise it a little bit more, we ought to be able to make this one pretty big, which would be cool. I would like to see this be a 500-, 600-person Con."

McDonald and Jim Wilkins, Elements of Fantasy president, are already making plans to see that happen. They hope to advertise more and include more game tables and the presence of a comic artist to do autograph signings. However, circumstances are not completely favorable for next year's Con — the Union will be remodeling during that time.

"I went so far as to ask for dates in September," Wilkins said. "Since they're doing construction, they can't say what they can and cannot offer. So we'll wait until our next meeting to start discussing when we want to do it again."

With any luck, though, KonzaCon will live on.

"People are always talking about wishing there was some kind of convention," Davis said.

Elder echoed Davis' sentiments.

"Manhattan has needed something like this for a long time."

BirdHouse holiday concert loses intimacy, gains variety

SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
staff writer

Call it "Christmas in November."

Playing to a packed house last Friday at the Manhattan Center for the Arts, local musician Ann Zimmerman and the Plaid Family jump-started the audience of more than 130 for the upcoming holiday season. As the fourth installment on the Fall BirdHouse Acoustic Music Series, this concert not only boasted the strongest theme, that of Christmas, but also the most performers on stage between Zimmerman and the three Plaids.

Review Music

Plaid Family members' included Princess Harris on the hammer dulcimer, Kelly Werts alternating between the guitar, pennywhistle and fiddle and his wife, Diana Werts, on the accordion to begin the show. With their six songs, the Plaids moved from old English and German music to "Rye Whiskey" in a sort of saloon-hall style.

More than half the tunes were in a sort of Christmas style, but the setting itself could switch from something akin to Dickens' London to the 1800s prairie within 10 minutes. If one could get past the sudden 180-degree turns, though, it was impressive to see the three in action together with Kelly Werts constantly changing instruments to the balance between the soft, drawn notes of Diana Werts' accordion and the short, sharp ones of Harris' dulcimer.

Once done, the Plaids rested up while Zimmerman took the stage. During her seven songs, Zimmerman not only switched between the guitar and keyboard (a piano that night for all practical purposes). She also showed her range from the almost eerie "Huron Carol," the story of Christmas told in terms of the Huron Indians, to "Absolute Zero," a story of soured love told in such an overzealously happy manner that it adds a biting wit far beyond the simple lyrics.

After a number with Kelly Werts on fiddle about Christmas in the trenches of World War I, Zimmerman ended her personal segment with a take on the old song "The Farmer Is the Man Who Feeds Us All." However, being from a plumbing family instead of a farming one, Zimmerman altered it to "The Plumber Is the Man Who Saves Us All," performed with the same razor wit of "Absolute Zero" and a theme of freezing pipes that tied in nicely with the upcoming winter.

After a brief break, all four musicians hopped to the stage together for a full round of just Christmas carols. The final nine numbers were divided almost evenly between lesser-known songs such as "The Cherry Tree Carol" and more mainstream carols like "Jingle Bells" and "Silent Night." The four worked without a hitch, and by the time they had the audience jingling their own key rings as makeshift bells, in addition to Christmas lights on the dulcimer stand, the mood had one a little disappointed not to see snow on the ground on the way out.

Although certainly equal to past BirdHouse performances, there were tradeoffs depending on what you were looking for in the fourth concert. While it was a treat to watch all four musicians, the increased numbers made it tougher to maintain the audience-performer rapport possible between just one or two musicians and the house. However, the four also provided for much more variety than the standard one- or two-artist concert. Definitely a tradeoff, but certainly an equal one.

CYCLONES

it had trouble shutting down the Cyclones' passing game.

Bandhauer only completed 15 of 40 passes, but he picked the K-State secondary apart for 265 yards.

"Our secondary just didn't come out to play today," free safety Lamar Chapman said. "I don't think we were ready to play."

Still, Iowa State couldn't manage more than three points. For the fifth-consecutive game, the Cats forced a turnover in the red zone.

On third-and-goal from the K-State six-yard line with 6:35 left in the fourth quarter, Cat cornerback Dyshod Carter intercepted a Bandhauer pass in the end zone to end Iowa State's final scoring threat.

"I have to give the Kansas State defense a lot of credit," Iowa State receiver Tyrone Watley said. "They stopped us many times today in the red zone."

While the defense struggled at times but still played well enough to win easily, the offense played the same way.

The Cats took the lead for good with less than four minutes into the game and ran up some big offensive numbers — 416 yards of total offense, including 284 on the ground. However, it wasn't good enough.

"Our offense struggled a little bit today," Cat quarterback Michael Bishop said. "We relaxed a little bit after getting out to an early lead. We can't do that. We just have to keep playing hard like we have been all year."

The Cats turned the ball over three times, failed on a fourth-down conversion and dropped several passes, but the team still played well enough to win by 25.

Also, some Cats achieved individual milestones.

Bishop rushed for two touchdowns, giving him nine on the season and breaking former Cat Matt Miller's school record of eight rushing touchdowns by a quarterback set in 1995.

Cat running back Mike Lawrence also set a school record by gaining 102 yards on the ground, giving him 2,264 in his Wildcat career. That mark surpassed the 2,210 yards J.J. Smith gained from 1991 to 1994.

The record-breaking run came on a 38-yard scamper up the left side to the Iowa State five-yard line, setting up Bishop's record-tying run.

"It feels great to establish a record," Lawrence said. "I just wish I could have done it at home. I owe it all to my offensive line."

BLOWOUT

The Cats were leading 45-17 at halftime. Cat center Joe Leonard dominated the 49ers in the paint. He made four of four from the field with three dunks and one offensive rebound. He finished with nine points, five rebounds and two blocked shots.

"I'm starting to feel more comfortable," Leonard said. "My job is to rebound and score when I get close to the basket, and I did that tonight."

Senior guard Aaron Swartzendruber scored 13 points, grabbed five rebounds and had four assists.

"Probably the two guys I was most pleased with were Leonard and Swartzendruber," Asbury said. "I thought Joe was awfully good for what his skill level is at this point of time."

The Cats shot just above 53 percent from the field, which makes it their second time in as many games to shoot above 50 percent. They shot just under 55 percent from the field against Western Carolina.

Reid led the Cats in scoring with 14 points, followed by Swartzendruber with 13 and forward Shawn Rhodes with 10. Lopez and forwards Manny Dies and Marcus McCollough each scored eight points.

The 49ers were held to 15 of 52 from the field for 29 percent shooting in the game. They had five assists and 18 turnovers.

Two 49ers scored in double figures. Freshman David Egans scored 17 points while Lee scored 16 points. Guard Quincy Nuckles scored eight points, but no other 49er scored more than three points.

The Cats out-rebounded the 49ers 45-25.

live.

"We want to treat whoever comes like kings," Thompson said. "We try to make it just as much fun for the fans as we do for the players."

The representatives admitted to innocent ulterior motives when choosing a team for the Fiesta Bowl.

"We'd like for the K-State fans who are coming from the cold to enjoy the 75 degrees and the temperate weather and say, 'Maybe we ought to set up a branch office in Phoenix,'" Thompson said.

Tostitos, the bowl's corporate sponsor, figures into the mix as well.

"Our corporate sponsors buy a lot of Kansas corn," Junker said.

And did the men notice the Kansas corn flying around the stadium Saturday?

"Oh yes, we are very interested in that," Thompson said. "The selection committee will so note that, as well."

It's Christmas eve -- and a young girl dreams of a frightening Mouse King, her heroic Nutcracker, a kindly Sugar Plum Fairy, and a kingdom of delicious sweets. Tchaikovsky set this ETA Hoffmann tale to a memorable score in 1892 -- and his ballet has been delighting audiences ever since.
You may have seen it before, but when performed as an ice ballet, Nutcracker sparkles with a special grace and beauty.
Don't miss the troupe the Manhattan Mercury praised for its staging and athleticism: "The show may not have been ballet, but it was the best damned ice dancing show I'm ever likely to see."

-mends a more robust inspection regime. That is what we need to focus on," Clinton said.

"What I emphasized to President Yeltsin is we have come a long way by working together and we have to continue to work together," Clinton said. He talked with reporters at the Denver International Airport.

Decisions about the inspections should be based on the evidence, the facts and the professional judgment of the inspectors, Clinton said.

"Neither the political inclinations of the United States nor of our allies should control those decisions," he said.

The president said he thanked Yeltsin for Russia's role in ending the crisis over Saddam Hussein's expulsion of American inspectors.

"I understand President Yeltsin's position, and I thank him for the work they did to end the crisis, at least temporarily," the president said. "We hope it's ended permanently, but we're not sure."

On the political front, Clinton visited Denver to attend two fund-raising luncheons for the Democratic National Committee, mired in $14 million of debt. With the president's approval, the party in the last couple days lifted its self-imposed $100,000 ceiling on donations.

In contrast to the fanfare that accompanied the imposition of the cap last January, the $100,000 ceiling was revoked quietly.

"To the Democrats, self-righteousness is something to be affected when you're under investigation, but when the heat is off, piety folds up like a $2 suitcase," said Republican National Committee chairman Jim Nicholson.

White House officials said they had to keep pace with Republicans, who outraised Democrats nearly two to one in the first six months of the year.

"Nobody believes the Democratic Party can continue to put itself at a disadvantage and have a chance to compete financially in the 1998 elections," White House deputy press secretary Barry Toiv said.

The president spoke about a rash of hate crimes in Denver that have raised fears about a surge in racial tension.

"We must not, and I know the people of Denver will not, tolerate acts of violence that are fed by hate against people of another color," the president said. "We have to do more to combat acts like this and to prevent them by removing the poison that breeds them from all our hearts."

Clinton was expected to raise between $400,000 and $500,000 for the DNC at two events in Denver. Later, he was expected to bring in $650,000 in Seattle at fund-raisers for the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee and Sen. Patty Murray's re-election campaign.

NICHOLS

said he and Timothy McVeigh spent hours debating the best way to build a bomb.

Nichols initially said he didn't know about bomb construction, but later acknowledged that he and McVeigh "had a curiosity about if they could build a bomb," FBI agent Scott Crabtree testified.

The two men pored over bombing literature at gun shows, trying to decide which devices would work best for particular situations, added FBI agent Stephen Smith.

Nichols, 42, could get the death penalty if convicted. McVeigh, 29, has appealed his conviction and death sentence after a trial on identical charges earlier this year.

During the interview with authorities, Nichols also described his nine-year friendship with McVeigh, saying, "I feel I cannot trust anyone any more than Tim," Smith said.

Nichols said he believed in the Constitution, refused to pay federal income taxes and stopped using his Social Security card, Smith said.

He admitted he was in Oklahoma City with McVeigh three days before the bombing and loaned McVeigh his pick-up the day before, when prosecutors say the bomb was constructed.

But prosecutors sought to show that Nichols left out crucial information.

For example, Nichols made a diagram of weapons and ammunition in his home and garage, but did not indicate an area above the ceiling in the garage where additional weapons were found, Smith said.

Nichols also gave the agents two aliases he used, but didn't say anything about the name "Mike Havens," the alias prosecutors say he used to buy the ammonium nitrate fertilizer used in the bombing.

can grab it.'

Once the Spartan satellite is between the two men at head level and the 20-inch-diameter telescope tube is pointed their way, they'll reach out and grab the ends of the tube at the same instant. Then they'll gently lower the satellite into the cargo bay.

"We don't expect it to be too particularly difficult, although they're going to have to be careful," Hess said.

The other option that was considered — having Scott grab the satellite by himself while standing on the end of Columbia's 50-foot robot arm — was deemed to be more difficult and dangerous.

Hess estimates it will take two hours for Scott and Doi to capture Spartan, leaving four hours for them to test an extendible crane intended for NASA's future space station.

The spacewalkers were supposed to test more station equipment, but the tasks were canceled to save the satellite. One of the biggest casualties is a free-flying robotic camera that would have hovered behind the astronauts and observed their work out in the cargo bay.

"That's unfortunate," Hess said. "Perhaps we'll fly it on another mission."

If Spartan is rescued and its malfunction can be corrected by computer commands, and if the shuttle has enough fuel, NASA might consider sending the craft back out for the two days of solar observations it missed, Castle said.

But that's another worry for another day.

"Right now, we're just concentrating on retrieving the spacecraft," Castle said.

Bowl hopes improve; advance tickets available today

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

The Wildcats helped improve K-State's Fiesta Bowl hopes on Friday.

The Arizona Wildcats, that is. Although K-State doesn't know yet which bowl it will go to, Arizona State's loss to Arizona on Friday likely eliminated the Sun Devils from Bowl Alliance contention. This made K-State a likely Fiesta Bowl pick and set up Manhattan for a possible big Fiesta on Sunday, when Alliance Bowl announcements are made.

▶ The polls
K-State went to No. 10 in the AP poll. Find out about the coaches' poll and where other teams finished on Page 7.

Whether it's the Fiesta Bowl, the Cotton Bowl or some other unlikely bowl, starting today, K-State football fans who want to order bowl tickets can do so through the K-State athletic ticket office.

"Last year, we had more than 9,000 ticket orders in hand before the Cotton Bowl invitation," Max Urick, director of intercollegiate athletics, said. "That was an impressive message to send to the bowl committee."

Fans can place an order with a credit card either by phone or in person at the ticket office in Bramlage Coliseum. Ticket prices for the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz., on Dec. 31 are $65, and tickets for the Jan. 1 Southwestern Bell Cotton Bowl in Dallas are $55. No orders will be processed until the official bowl announcement.

The announcement for the Alliance Bowls — the Orange Bowl, the Sugar Bowl and the Fiesta Bowl — will be made on Sunday, and other announcements will follow.

It's time to go bowling

- The KSU Alumni Association is arranging travel packages. For more information call (888) 256-9756 from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday.
- Curious about tickets? Call the Athletic Ticket Office at (800) 221-CATS or 532-7606 from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday.
- Want more coverage? The Collegian will have continuous coverage as the bowl picture clears up, including a special section on Dec. 10.

Tickets can be purchased by calling (800) 221-CATS or 532-7606. The Athletic Ticket Office is open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The KSU Alumni Association is arranging Land and Air travel packages in partnership with Dodds Athletic Tours and several travel agencies.

For information about the travel packages, contact the K-State Bowl Hotline toll free at (888) 256-9756. The hotline will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday.

For pregame party information only, call (800) 600-2586 or 532-6260. Features include a game ticket, pregame party ticket, information desk, special souvenirs and bus transfers to pep rally, pregame party and the game.

Amy Button Renz, president of the Alumni Association, said it is important to order the bowl tickets through the school, regardless of other plans. She said if that is done, the school gets credit for selling its tickets. Each school is allotted a certain number of tickets as a minimum and can get more if necessary.

The Bowl Alliance is made up of three bowls, and six teams will play in them. Four of the spots are guaranteed for conference champions. The Atlantic Coast Conference champion, No. 4 Florida State, and the Big East champion, No. 15 Syracuse, are already going to be in the Alliance, as will the Big 12 and the Southeastern Conference champions. No. 14 Texas A&M and No. 2 Nebraska will play Saturday in the Big 12 Championship game, and No. 3 Tennessee and No. 11 Auburn will battle for the Southeastern Conference Championship, also on Saturday. No. 1 Michigan, the Big 10 Champion, and No. 8 Washington State, the Pacific-10 champion, will play in the Rose Bowl and cannot be a part of the Alliance. Along with the four conference champions, the Alliance picks two at-large teams to play in the bowls.

This year, the Orange Bowl gets the No. 1 and 2 picks among the alliance teams, the Sugar Bowl gets the No. 3 and 5 picks, and the Fiesta Bowl gets the No. 4 and 6 picks.

State office cuts regents' budget request

▶ PROPOSAL TO GO TO governor's desk for more revisions.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

With an unexpected $200 million in state coffers, the office of the Kansas Division of Budget still found reason to cut the Kansas Board of Regents budget request to the state Legislature.

In its annual recommendations to Gov. Bill Graves, the budget office cut K-State's program enhancements, technology initiative and fringe-benefits increase. The budget office's recommendations are largely seen by regents officials as conservative. When Graves makes his budget proposal to the Legislature in January, he traditionally reinstates many regents budget-request items.

> "A lot of people will want to spend the money, a lot of people will want to give it back in tax cuts and a lot of people will want to do both. That will be the tussle in the next legislature"
> — Sue Peterson, assistant to the president for governmental relations

K-State administrators, as is customary, appealed to the budget office to reinstate the non-recommended budget items in a Nov. 17 letter. The budget office made its recommendations based on data from a state consensus estimating group that did not include the $200 million windfall.

John Struve, director of the K-State budget office, said the state budget office's recommendations are generally the worst of the cycle.

"You get some sense of what the governor will propose," Struve said. "The governor almost always improves on these recommendations."

As for the $200 million not previously taken into account, Struve said the state budget office is required to use the most current data for its recommendations. Therefore, its data does not reflect the extra funds.

"The normal process has been that the governor would address any changes in revenue in his recommendations," Struve said.

University officials predict Graves' budget recommendations, which will be released on Jan. 12 for the first day of the legislative session, will improve upon those of the state budget office.

Sue Peterson, assistant to the president for governmental relations, said the state's robust economy has provided the unexpected funds the Legislature can use for reinvestment in its programs or give back in tax cuts.

"A lot of people will want to spend the money, a lot of people will want to give it back in tax cuts and a lot will want to do both," Peterson said. "That will be the tussle in the next Legislature."

The fact that 1998 is an election year complicates the picture, as both Graves and members of the House of Representatives face election campaigns filled with constituent demands.

Peterson said the House leadership has always pushed for tax cuts, but the governor has maintained a cautionary stance on the issue.

She said the one-time windfall of state money, particularly the $66 million tax payment by Western Resources for its merger deal, could prove beneficial to K-State's request for technology and other program enhancements. She said the windfall

KU student newspaper editor terminated

news editor

College newspaper editors received an official warning last week — they will be held accountable.

Spencer Duncan, editor in chief of the University Daily Kansan, was fired last Monday by the paper's governing board for "a pattern of behavior that seemed to board members to reduce the student newspaper's reputation and goodwill," according to a news release from the board.

Should the editor have been fired? Find out why the editorial board supports the decision.
See Page 4.

Duncan was the first editor in the Daily Kansan's history to be fired.

Although the news release did not include examples of what offensive material led to Duncan's termination, some of the questionable headlines were "Blow me" for a feature about a campus steam whistle that signals the end of each class period, "Masturbator leaves his mark," and "Nice melons" for photo of a woman holding watermelons.

Also singled out was a photo of KU facility workers putting up a statue with a caption that read, "How many F&O employees does it take ...".

Before serving as editor for the fall semester, Duncan had three years of experience on the Daily Kansan and had served as Student Senate reporter, sports writer and sports editor. He is also the sports correspondent for The Topeka Capital-Journal.

The board had given Duncan the option of resigning instead of being fired, but in the newspaper Tuesday he defended his decision not to step down.

"I refused to resign, because that would have been acknowledging that I was a bad editor," he said. "That is not true."

Although Duncan, senior in journalism, only had two weeks left as editor, the board's decision took effect immediately. Lindsey Henry, a managing editor for the fall semester and the appointed editor in chief for the spring, was promoted to editor for the remaining eight papers.

"In the news release, John Ginn (chairman of the board) said he was afraid Spencer would do something radical since it was the end of the semester," Henry said. "In my opinion, I don't know why they would think that. Spencer loves the Kansan."

Henry said many members of the Daily Kansan have written the board to Fort Riley group to portray 1860s Christmas

SHEYENE FOSTER
staff writer

Residents of Fort Riley and the surrounding communities will be given a chance from 1 to 4 p.m. on Sunday to see how 19th-century soldiers celebrated Christmas.

A Prairie Christmas, the annual celebration that focuses on changing Christmas traditions of the Army and Fort Riley from the 1860s to today, will take place at the Custer House on Sheridan Avenue in Fort Riley. Its events are free and open to the public.

A Prairie Christmas was started in the 1970s by the Fort Riley Historical and Archeological Society. However, in recent years, the program had lost some of its momentum.

Kathy Edwards, programs chairwoman for the society, said this year public demand pushed them to expand the celebration and include more events.

"We had such a great public response to some of our other events this year, such as Apple Days and the ghost tour," Edwards said. "Now, we want to do more."

Edwards said 300 to 500 people are expected at A Prairie Christmas.

Events planned throughout the day include a walking tour of the main post, a brief history of the post and its traditions and tours of the Custer House Museum.

"A family dressed in period clothing will be in the house as well, taking part in Christmas traditions from the 1860s," Edwards said.

Karen Kryschtal, adviser to the historical society, said exploring the Christmas traditions of the time periods was one of the most interesting aspects in preparation for A Prairie Christmas.

"It's been really interesting to research what they would have been decorating with," Kryschtal said. "They may not have used cedars for Christmas trees, but reeds from willows or even from redbuds or sumac."

Kryschtal said people in the late 1800s also decorated the house with prairie grasses, pine cones and strings of popcorn. She said brass buttons from old uniforms were used as ornaments, hung from the Christmas tree by ribbons.

Also that day, the Kansas Regimental Band will perform, as well as the Madrigal Singers from Junction City High School.

A Make It and Take It craft class will be offered, illustrating how to make Victorian fan Christmas ornaments. There will also be refreshments.

Additional events planned include a performance by the commanding general's mounted color guard and will be accompanied by a prairie Santa Cluas. The prairie Santa Claus will don a costume that is a combination of the traditional Santa suit and a calvary uniform. He will be handing out candy and talking to the children.

"Having the prairie Santa Claus is important, especially for the little kids," Kryschtal

Police charged with negligence for terrorist attack in Egypt

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO, Egypt — Egypt plans to prosecute Luxor's top police officials for negligence in the massacre of 58 tourists by Islamic extremists, the official news agency reported Saturday.

Maj. Gen. Medhat el-Shanawany and Maj. Gen. Abul Atta Yousef, chief and deputy chief, respectively, at the time of the attack, will be tried in a police disciplinary court on Dec. 21, the Middle East News Agency said.

The men, who face dereliction of duty charges, were demoted during a security shake-up after the Nov. 17 attack on visitors to the ancient Temple of Hatshepsut.

Interior Minister Habib el-Adly said in a statement Saturday that the Luxor attack "requires that we deal severely with any security negligence."

The attack outside the southern city of Luxor was the deadliest in a five-year Islamic insurgency to topple the secular government of President Hosni Mubarak and install a religious rule.

Besides 58 foreign tourists, the dead included four Egyptians.

Six gunmen were killed in a shootout with police.

El-Adly also said that, beginning Sunday, he would deploy 280 extra police officers at the tourist sites in the southern cities of Luxor and Aswan, as well as the Red Sea tourist resorts of Hurghada and Sharm el-Sheikh.

In the southern city of Assiut, meanwhile, police have arrested 97 former prisoners convicted of crimes connected to the Islamic insurgency.

More than 1,100 people, mostly police and militants, have died since the extremists began the campaign to replace the secular government with strict Islamic rule.

Lawrence woman arrested for DUI after Amtrak train strikes car

LAWRENCE — More than 100 passengers aboard a Los Angeles-bound Amtrak train were delayed after the train hit an abandoned vehicle stuck on the tracks, officials said.

No one was injured in the wreck, which occurred at about 2:30 a.m. Friday on the eastern edge of the city. The train, which was going between 50 and 60 mph, destroyed the 1991 Geo Metro in the collision.

Passengers waited nearly two hours as wrecker crews removed the car from the train.

The car's driver was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol. Wendy Lee Grove, 23, told police it was raining heavily when she turned onto the train tracks, thinking she was on a gravel road, officials said. The car became stuck.

Police said Grove and a passenger in the car went to get help from a nearby resident. But as they returned to the tracks, the train plowed into the car.

None of the 114 passengers on board were hurt, and no crew members were injured, Amtrak spokesman Marc Maglieri said. The train had minor damage, but not enough to require immediate repairs, he said.

Grove was released on $500 bail from the Douglas County Jail several hours after the accident. She is scheduled to appear in Lawrence Municipal Traffic Court on Dec. 10.

2nd KPL worker dies from injuries from electrical circuit explosion

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — A second Kansas Power and Light employee has died from injuries sustained in an electrical explosion at the Lawrence Energy Center.

Ron Guy, 57, of Lawrence, died Saturday at the University of Kansas Medical Center, where he had been hospitalized in the burn unit since the explosion Nov. 24.

Duane Tenpenny, 48, was also killed in the blast at the coal-fired plant, which is operated by Kansas Power and Light.

Charles Price, 35, of North Kansas City, Mo., remained hospitalized in critical condition Saturday night. A fourth worker, Danny Bolden, 37, of Lawrence, suffered smoke inhalation and was released after treatment at Lawrence Memorial Hospital.

Guy, a maintenance coordinator, had worked for KPL for 36 years. Tenpenny was an electrician who had been with Kansas Power and Light for five years. Bolden is an auxiliary equipment operator with 11 years of service. Price works for a contractor, ABB Services Co.

Operations manager Steve Johnson said the explosion happened about 4:45 p.m. while maintenance work was being done on a 4,160-volt breaker.

19-year-old hunter shot, killed while hunting quail with friends

HUTCHINSON, Kan. — A 19-year-old Hutchinson man was killed after a shotgun belonging to another member of his hunting party fired, hitting him in the back, authorities said.

Jason Thomas Smith was shot Friday morning south of Arlington, Kan., in Reno County. He died later at a hospital.

"It appears they were road-hunting," Reno County Sheriff's Sgt. Steve Lutz said. "They saw some quail flying over, and they were getting out of their van to see if they could get one.

"As they were exiting the van, the one in the rear passenger seat was getting out with his shotgun. The barrel was still inside the van when the shotgun went off."

Smith was hit just below the right shoulder blade.

Three of the men then got back in the van and drove to an Arlington cafe, where they asked a passerby to call 911. Crews responded and took Smith to a Hutchinson hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

14-year-old dies in car accident caused by a falling Christmas tree

JACKSON, Miss. — A Christmas tree fell off a vehicle on a crowded interstate, sending drivers swerving to avoid it and causing a crash that killed a 14-year-old boy.

George Cole, of Pelahatchie, Miss., died in the crash Friday, police said.

The boy was riding in the back of a Ford Explorer on Interstate 55 near downtown Jackson. The driver had cut sharply to avoid hitting a tractor-trailer that also was dodging the tumbling tree. The Explorer flipped several times, throwing the boy from the vehicle and pinning him underneath.

The Explorer's driver, 26-year-old Walter Hudson, also was thrown from the vehicle. He was in serious condition at the University of Mississippi Medical Center, where he was being treated for a broken leg and other injuries.

Assistant professor wins awards for dedicated service to minorities

SHEYENE FOSTER
staff writer

When students tell David Griffin his course in multicultural education scares them, he knows he has done his job.

His course is part of the reason he has been chosen as this year's Commerce Bank Presidential Faculty Award winner for Distinguished Service to Minority Students.

Griffin, assistant professor of secondary education, serves as social studies coordinator for the department and supervises student teachers.

He also teaches several classes, including the College of Education's required course in multiculturalism, Teaching in a Multicultural Society.

"My heart bleeds and cries each time I teach it," Griffin said. "But I'm rejuvenated when a student tells me, 'I'm scared now because now I know I needed this course.' Multicultural education is a powerful tool for bringing about understanding of students and who they are."

Griffin said those who realize the importance of multicultural education will make the best teachers because they understand teachers can't reach students until you understand them.

"Students will not care how much you know until they know how much you care," he said.

That philosophy, as well as Griffin's work with students through his courses and involvement in several campus multicultural organizations and activities, is among the reasons he has been selected to be the recipient of this year's award.

Griffin will be honored in January as part of K-State's observance activities in honor of Martin Luther King Jr. Week. He will also receive a $1,000 cash award and a plaque.

Members of the selection committee said Griffin was an excellent candidate for this award.

"The committee knows David is a champion for diversity on this campus, and especially for students in the classroom," said Reginland McGowan, chair of the award's selection committee.

While Griffin's experience as an instructor at the college level has been relatively brief — he joined the K-State faculty in 1994 — he had taught in elementary and secondary schools since 1968. He was a teacher and administrator with the Kansas City, Mo., school district.

Additionally, Griffin was the first minority principal of a predominantly white Kansas City high school and helped the school district implement a court-ordered desegregation plan.

In 1991, Griffin resigned from the school district to work on his doctorate in educational administration at K-State. He was recruited by Michael Holen, who was associate dean of the College of Education at that time.

Griffin said he has found his niche at the college level at K-State.

"After I taught my first class, I knew I was home," Griffin said.

He said that's why winning this award was so special.

"I am doing what I want to do — work with people," he said.

Griffin said that means not only being a role model for students of color, but also for all students.

"I try to be a role model for everyone … those who look like I do and those who don't look like I do," Griffin said.

"But it is nice to be recognized for efforts to help students of color, who need someone they can relate to. It does help them to know someone who has walked in their shoes."

Clinton to focus trip on race relations

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AKRON, Ohio — President Clinton is visiting this week to lead a town hall meeting on racial harmony in a city where residents admit black-white relations are far from perfect.

Despite progress, mixing between whites and blacks in Akron, an industrial city of 220,000, is somewhat limited and people speak of lingering stereotypes.

"We can work together," said Fannie Brown, executive director of Coming Together, the backbone of Akron's anti-racism effort. "Hearts are changed one at a time."

Clinton will go to the University of Akron on Wednesday to lead a 90-minute meeting on young people's attitudes toward race.

Why Akron?

In part, the city was chosen for its Midwestern values and programs to promote racial harmony. The blue-collar town, where the rubber industry served as a draw for Southern blacks and eastern European whites, is 73-percent white and 24.5-percent black.

It's also friendly political turf. Sixty percent of voters in this labor union stronghold went for Clinton in 1996.

The White House also was impressed by Coming Together, which gets more than 5,000 people involved each year in activities that promote tolerance.

"It's not so much touchy-feely" as encouraging contact and understanding among people of different backgrounds, Brown said. Participants spend time together at daylong workshops, joint church dinners and other events.

Members of the black Mount Zion Baptist Church and the suburban white Bath United Church of Christ have a joint garden club, have attended gospel music festivals together and have occasional potluck dinners.

"I've been able to deal with my racist attitudes — we all have racist attitudes, whether we're black or white," said the Rev. Luther Charles Cooper, pastor of Mount Zion.

Coming Together grew out of a yearlong series of articles the Akron Beacon Journal produced on race.

The paper won the Pulitzer Prize for public service in 1994 for its coverage of local racial attitudes, which found evidence of lingering racism.

The series culminated in a special section listing more than 22,000 residents and about 140 community groups who pledged to work to improve race relations.

The paper's continuing interest in the issue has created a foundation for keeping race relations before the public, Brown said.

Bob Paynter, who directed the newspaper's series, said the upcoming meeting gave the newspaper the opportunity to revisit the race issue, including updated public opinion surveys on racism.

"We're finding a lot of circumstances have, in fact, changed for some people and a lot hasn't, so it's a mixed bag," he said. "There's still plenty of racist attitudes that black people encounter fairly regularly and, on the other hand, there have been some people who said they experienced some personal change."

AIDS Awareness Week begins today

ASHLEY YOULE
staff reporter

World AIDS Day is recognized today, kicking off AIDS Awareness Week. Throughout this week, the community will have opportunities to help recognize and celebrate AIDS Awareness Week.

From 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday at the K-State Student Union, people can donate money for nutritional supplements for people with HIV, said Reita Currie, assistant director of the health education department at Lafene Health Center.

"We will have a table at the Union, or anyone is welcome to come purchase supplements at room 1 at Lafene," she said. "There will be a raffle for two K-State jackets at the Union tables as well."

Not only will the community be able to help out in this way, but also Manhattan residents will have an opportunity to recognize World AIDS Day during a candle-lighting ceremony at 7 tonight at the First Presbyterian Church 801 Leavenworth St.

"This year's theme is 'Children Living in a World of Hope,'" Victor Force, associate pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, said. "I'm using youth because when I think of children, I think of hope."

The ceremony will begin with the youth bell choir playing in a sanctuary full of candles lighted in the name of hope, Force said.

"This is a service of love, support and hope. It's a place of safety where people can come and think of those living with HIV and remember those who died," he said.

Even though Manhattan has had ceremonies like this in years past, this will be the first time it will take place at the First Presbyterian Church.

"This is one way to let the community know our congregation cares about those living with AIDS," Force said.

There is also hope that this ceremony will draw attention to the Regional AIDS Project, a local nonprofit organization that helps provide educational, social, legal and medical services to AIDS patients and their families, Force said.

In addition to the church service today, there will be a presentation on AIDS on Wednesday.

"Kathy Slawson, from the Bureau of Disease Control and Prevention at the Kansas State Department of Health and Environment, will be speaking. Slawson also works with the Ryan White Foundation in Topeka," Currie said. "We will also be having a very special guest speaker, Monica McDaniel Collins, a young woman surviving HIV."

The presentation will be from 7 to 9 p.m. Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

NASA decides not to send satellite back into orbit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Space shuttle Columbia's astronauts will not set loose a science satellite they rescued in a spacewalk last week, NASA decided Sunday after considerable debate.

Mission managers reviewed a variety of options but finally concluded — a day earlier than expected — that it was not feasible to release the Spartan satellite a second time and attempt to salvage its sun-studying mission.

The shuttle simply does not have enough fuel to support another satellite retrieval, said mission operations director Lee Briscoe.

"If you were deploying a brand new, fresh spacecraft, you wouldn't do it under those circumstances," Briscoe explained at a hastily arranged news conference.

"So here's a case where we have the Spartan in the bay. We have it. It's a healthy spacecraft. We can bring it back. If you were to deploy it under these kinds of propellant margins, you could stand a 40- or 50-percent chance of not bringing it back" if you ran into any kind of trouble, he said.

NASA had hoped to release the $10 million Spartan satellite for 18 hours, less than half the time it was supposed to fly free of Columbia and observe the sun's charged outer atmosphere.

Spartan turned out to be nothing but trouble for the astronauts, quite possibly through their own fault.

Unknown to anyone at the time, the satellite failed to receive a crucial computer command before it was set loose on Nov. 21 because of either a software problem or crew error, Briscoe said. When astronaut Kalpana Chawla tried to grab the satellite with the shuttle robot arm, she inadvertently sent it into a slow spin. To scientists' dismay, no solar observations could be made.

Three days after its botched release, astronauts Winston Scott and Takao Doi caught the 3,000-pound satellite with their gloved hands during a 6 1/2-hour spacewalk.

"Spartan, we believe, is in good shape. We'll bring it back, see if there's anything we can learn from it," Briscoe said.

NASA has no definite plans, as of yet, to send Spartan back up on another shuttle mission.

Since last Monday's spacewalk, Columbia's American, Ukrainian and Japanese crew has conducted a variety of science experiments and tended to soybean and mustard plants, as well as moss. The 16-day mission is scheduled to end Friday.

Newspaper board made good decision to fire KU editor

When an editor in chief is selected each semester, that editor wields a great deal of power. With the power comes a great deal of responsibility.

At the University of Kansas, the student newspaper's governing board voted to fire Spencer Duncan, the newspaper's editor in chief.

The governing board, in response to readers' concerns, reviewed Duncan's performance and found numerous headlines with tasteless double meanings and other things the board deemed offensive.

The Collegian supports the board's decision.

Duncan failed to uphold his end of the deal when he was hired. Ultimately, Duncan was responsible for the newspaper's content and the hiring and firing practices of the newspaper. The decisions rested with Duncan.

When poor headlines crept into the newspaper, Duncan could have put a stop to the practice.

Because the headlines and other offensive material continued to appear, the board called Duncan on it. Duncan, being the only person hired by the board, was the only person it could hold responsible.

The board offered him a chance to resign. Duncan refused, saying resigning would send the message that he was a bad editor. Duncan said he wasn't a bad editor.

The board made an example of him. It fired him and appointed a managing editor to the spot.

This issue isn't about content control. It's about professional standards that an editor in chief must instill in the staff. It's about maintaining a good relationship with the readers.

In the case at KU, the students could not tolerate the double meanings and the graphic material. They complained.

The board, seeing no action being taken, did its job. It wouldn't have had to if Duncan had done his.

Privilege fees, taxes help attain financial instability

VIEWPOINT

Privilege fees.

That's probably all I had to say, and you are now either in the process of rolling your eyes, getting interested in this column or throwing down your copy of the Collegian and cussing at it.

If you happen to be doing the latter, please avoid grabbing any projectile weapons and going to visit the Collegian office in Kedzie 116. We had way too many radical anti-privilege fee attacks last week, and we're still trying to repair our computers from the shotgun incident. The staff thanks you.

Actually, what I want to do today is share with you why I love privilege fees.

Interesting how the issue keeps popping up, isn't it? First the stadium, then Hale Library and now Lafene Health Center. What's next? A privilege fee to use the K-State Student Union bathrooms? Maybe the students should foot the bill for the Anderson Avenue expansion?

Well, frankly, I think that would be terrific!

You see, I just don't like my money. I hate financial security because I am one of those daring young Gen-Xers you see on Mountain Dew commercials. I live my life on the edge, never certain whether I will be capable of achieving my goals because of my financial instability.

Radical, dude!

Leave it to me to choose an inexpensive college. I have been regretting that decision ever since I made it, because I simply don't like money. I can never waste enough of it. I pay taxes and that still isn't enough.

Last year, I owed the state of Kansas $180, and that helped me get rid of my money quickly. Thank God they aren't using it on education. That would be tragic. I hate to see money spent on such wasteful things as building the leaders of the future.

I hate to see our state have a competitive public education system on all fronts. If we did, all the other states might be left behind, and perhaps people would come to this state for education, bringing money which would create jobs, which would create more money.

So many people! That would be bad.

Plus, I can't abide by one state accumulating money or reinvesting it to spur progress. Planning ahead is bad.

I love the fact that the state isn't paying for any social services, either. I'm glad my money is going to the bureaucracy, because I know that in the government's hands, it will be used for a good purpose, like contributions to the Christian Coalition. It's this sort of transfer of funds which keeps the economy moving.

That's good, because when the economy stops, we get nuclear war. It's proven.

I'm happy to help prevent nuclear war by giving out money, especially when I'm giving out money for things which should be a concern of the state. We all need to do our part.

I'm especially pleased that the state is not going to use their surplus this year for anything relating to social service. I'm glad that they're going to give everything back to the hard-working conservatives who supplied the greatest percentage of tax money — the rich. Good for them. Let the rich take the responsibility for all the money — I don't want it, and you shouldn't either.

A recent report in the New Anglande Journal of Medicine and Tobacco Products revealed that using money wisely and saving for the future actually increased the risk of age in retirees. It seemed that 90 percent of elderly people with money saved exhibited signs of wrinkled skin, cataracts, high blood pressure, osteoporosis, arthritis, tooth loss, hair loss and hearing loss. Old people who have saved money often experience a loss of energy, diminished motor skills and a decreased sex drive.

Well. I'm certainly not going to let any of that dirty old money get near me. Give it to the rich. Give it to the government. They know how to dispose of it properly. That way, we could be young for ever.

Not to mention that government's giving money to the poor or redistributing wealth would be ... communism.

You see, our state government is smart. In Kansas, we have 31 public institutions of higher education. That ranks us 18th in the nation, tied with Mississippi.

By the same token, our population is ranked 32nd, which means we have a smaller tax base, so we have less money to spend on more institutions. These guys are so smart, because now Kansans are offered a mediocre education from a wide variety of locations, rather than a superb education at just a few locations.

Why not be less competitive? Iowa State University already gets over twice as much as we do from their state, while the University of Iowa gets nearly four times as much as we. The University of Nebraska at Lincoln receives over a hundred million more from Nebraska than we get from Kansas, which puts them above the University of Kansas monetarily but below them in enrollment. Missouri gets well over twice what K-State gets, even though their attendance is only 10 percent greater.

I say good show, Kansas Legislature. We'll beat those Commie punks, yet.

Children can bring extra spirit to holiday rituals

VIEWPOINT
MARY RENEE SMITH

MARY RENEE SMITH is a sophomore in speech. You can send e-mail to Mary at mojo@ksu.edu

If you don't have a child, I highly recommend you get one. Borrow one if you have to. The holiday season is a whole new ball game when there are children in your house.

Sure there is the scamper of little feet trying to sneak a peek on Christmas Eve. There is the wonder in a child's eyes the first time you plug the Christmas tree in. There is the magic of Santa Claus and flood of your own childhood memories brought on by the spirit of the holidays. But there are some other more material benefits your parents, grandparents and the parents of today enjoy.

The most obvious payoff during the holidays is the toys. There is a two-part toy benefit, the giving and the getting. The giving of toys to the little ones involves shopping for toys. It is so liberating to be able to play with every toy in every store in the mall, and there are some very cool toys out now.

We got a Sony PlayStation this year. There is no way I would have laid out the 150 bucks for the contraption, but the father of my children did. The kids live with me, so it is mine by association. The benefit of toy getting when you have children. A word from the wise, just because an 8-year-old can master a particular video game does not mean an adult will be as successful.

In addition to the myriad of video games, there are water guns that can shoot for hundreds of feet, Batman vehicles that can transform from plane to car to boat and kids sized pool tables. I am lucky enough to have boys, so I am spared the pain of Barbie mansions and baby dolls that can perform bodily functions better left to humans.

As parents, it is our job to test each toy in the store to make a good selection. Once the toys is home, it is our duty to take it out of its packaging, put it together, install the batteries and make sure it performs like the store model. It is a tough job.

A less obvious payoff is how much you can learn about your children if you pay attention. It all starts in my house months before Halloween with the arrival of the JCPenny Christmas Catalog. Each child sits down with the book full of glossy photos and starts to dream. There are no limits, no price too high, no toy too large or dangerous.

Within a few days "America's Largest Gift Catalog" is worse for the wear. Throughout the weeks that follow they trim the list through their own judgment. Their desires, dreams, their hopes for the future — if you look closely at their wish lists, it is all there.

Thomas wants an indoor basketball hoop with a countdown clock and crowd sounds — future international sports figure. Ethan wants computer programs and a kit you can built miniature steel trucks out of — future computer engineer.

You don't even have to celebrate Christmas to benefit from the holidays. I have a friend whose family were Jehovah's Witnesses. They obviously didn't get Christmas presents, but his family went shopping after Christmas and took advantage of the post holiday bargain hunting. He said it was better than any holiday they could have ever had.

Grandparents understand the value of children during the holidays. They also know the power. There is an exact science to it all.

The maximum volume of a toy given to a grandchild is in proportion to the proximity of the child to the home of the grandparents. In other words, distance makes the toy grow louder. No grandparents in their right mind give a drum set or fire truck with sirens to the grandchild who lives next door, but the child who lives a few states away and doesn't visit often is fair game. Favorite grandparent gifts for the holiday season include Hungry, Hungry Hippos, Operation and anything musical.

Your parents will inevitably give cooler toys to your children than they ever gave to you. It is a fact of life. It doesn't mean they didn't love you as a child. Some of it goes back to the noise issue.

You don't have to have children to enjoy the spirit of the season but it does help. Find a child to share the holidays with. Purchase a toy for one of the charitable organizations in town. It's a good excuse to play in the stores and a good way to make the dreams of another child come true.

Safety official says thanks for help with mercury spill

Editor,

The faculty, staff and students at K-State were terribly inconvenienced by a spill of elemental mercury behind Seaton Hall on Nov. 17. From the time the call came in at 8 a.m. that day to the final transport of the contaminated debris to storage at 6 p.m. the following Thursday, our interests were in protecting people and the environment.

The spill was reported to local, state and federal authorities as required by law. Trained personnel, both K-State and private contractors, were involved in the cleanup. I wish to publicly thank all those people who helped with the process.

This includes the employees of the K-State Police Department and the Department of Environmental Health and Safety, who did a great job of keeping people safe during the operation. The university received excellent assistance from Haz Mat Response, the spill cleanup contractor. We also received excellent service from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment and Phillips Lighting, Salina. Vern Silvers of Phillips Lighting provided additional mercury vacuum cleaners and a Jerome Instrument mercury detector. In fact, Silvers came up Nov. 20 and spent the afternoon helping.

I want to thank all the people who understood the need to keep traffic out of the area during the cleanup. I especially want to thank all of the people who were inconvenienced but supportive when they lost their parking spaces for the week.

This was just one more time when K-Staters pulled together in the face of adversity. Thanks for everyone's help.

Group seeks volunteers to work with children

Editor,

It takes a whole village to raise a child. The "villagers" of Manhattan need to take a bigger part in the lives of their children. Even if you're only a college student, you can still do your part. Right now, Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan needs your support.

Male volunteers are needed to give the 40 boys on the waiting list positive male role models. Not only does the act of volunteering as a big brother benefit the child, it benefits the volunteer as well. You'll get the opportunity to participate in the rewarding experience of making a difference in a young boy's life. Being a big brother also serves as a great résumé builder. I'm challenging all you men out there to volunteer only three hours a week as a big brother.

The program also welcomes any women wanting to be a big sister for the program.

The phone number for Big Brothers and Big Sisters is 776-9575. The office is at 2316 Anderson Ave., Suite 100.

El Niño calms hurricane season in Atlantic Ocean

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — The Atlantic hurricane season was a lot less windier than usual, and El Niño is the reason.

Three hurricanes blew in from the Atlantic during the storm season that ended Sunday. The average is six.

"It was quite a blessing," said Ellen Mayeron, manager of the waterfront Mucky Duck restaurant on Captiva Island off southwest Florida's Gulf Coast. "We sighed a big breath of relief."

El Niño, the periodic warming of the eastern Pacific, gave rise to furious storms off the coast of Mexico such as Hurricane Pauline. That storm struck the southern Mexico coast in October, causing flash floods and mudslides that killed 230 people and left 300,000 homeless.

But El Niño had the opposite effect in the Atlantic, where it sent strong easterly winds into the upper atmosphere. The winds helped dampen conditions for the forming and movement of hurricanes.

The National Hurricane Center chased only seven named storms in the Atlantic while watching a hefty 17 in the eastern Pacific.

Still, the Atlantic season, which runs from June through November, was not noiseless.

Hurricane Danny, which stalled over the Alabama coast in July, killed at least nine people and flooded parts of the Carolinas, causing $100 million in damage.

Hurricane Bill, which formed over the eastern Bahamas earlier that same month, did little damage. Hurricane Erika killed two in Puerto Rico in September before turning north and dying out.

show support for Duncan and disapproval of the board's decision, although because there are only seven papers left, they do not expect to see Duncan reinstated.

Duncan will also be kept on staff as a copy editor and a columnist.

"The staff as a whole is shocked," Henry said. "No one believed he was a bad editor."

Henry said the paper's governing board said the paper was being run in an immature fashion, but Duncan had not meant to offend people.

"It was written for a college community," Henry said. "Spencer is not an idiot. He wouldn't do that for a general public audience."

Lung Huang, junior in business administration and advertising, said many of the complaints had been legitimate and had offended many people on campus. Huang said the main complaints were factual errors and frequent misquoting.

"There have been slip-ups in the past, but this was happening very frequently. You just saw it so often it was sickening," he said. "The Kansan's credibility was being hurt."

As vice president of public relations for KU's Intra-Fraternity Council, Huang said he had tried to contact Duncan to complain about many mistakes that were offensive to both the greek community and the university as a whole.

"We tried to contact and work with him, but our calls were not answered," Huang said. "We have already sat down with the new editor, Lindsey Henry. It's nice for someone to be that cooperative, and I'm looking forward to next semester."

Henry said she was not as excited about next semester, however. Although she said she thought the board's decision was just meant to send a message, she also said she worried it would set a precedent.

"It's one of my main concerns, now. Do I need to constantly look over my shoulder?" she said. "What if I make a mistake? Will the ax start swinging in my direction?"

BUDGET

could be used for some significant budget increases.

"That's a great way to make an investment in technology purchases," Peterson said. "Technology has a lot of possibilities as a one-time expenditure."

Although the economic outlook in the state is positive, the issue of tax cuts looms on the legislative horizon.

Peterson said if no one was talking tax cuts, higher education could ask for more money. She cautions the economy is cyclical and goes through cuts, flat budgets and occasional raises.

"When you've got money, everyone wants to give it back in tax cuts. The climate changes," she said.

The past four years of the Graves administration has seen unprecedented tax cuts, something the governor will surely boast in his re-election campaign.

Mike Matson, Graves' press secretary, said the governor sees the state fund surplus as a direct result of hard work by Kansans.

"It's a challenge when you are dealing with a revenue picture that is this flush," he said. "It is more difficult to craft a budget with more money than with no money."

Matson said Graves' priority going into the budget season is tax cuts. He said the governor will present a comprehensive tax cut package at his State of the State address to the Legislature on Jan. 12.

As for K-State's technology initiative, Matson said the governor recognizes there is a need that has not gone away. Graves supported the regents' request for fiscal year 1998 technology enhancements, but that proposal was significantly downsized by the Legislature.

"The governor is looking at taking one-time money and applying that to technology equipment purchases," Matson said, referring to the Western Resources tax payment. "The governor is cautioning lawmakers from applying that to something that is ongoing."

Kryschtal said the fact that most of the people at Fort Riley are away from their homes and families can weigh heavily around the holidays.

This provides a common bond between them and Army families from other eras.

"Really, we're not that different from the people of the 1800s, trying to carry on family traditions while away from your family," Kryschtal said. "We try to celebrate in those ways, just to make it a bit more like home."

MIDDLE BLOCKER VAL WIECK returns a hit in a game against Iowa State over the weekend. Wieck assisted on five blocks and helped force the Cyclones into 10 hitting errors.

CLEAN SWEEP

K-State ends regular season with 2 wins

STORY BY DAN MERKER • PHOTO BY IVAN KOZAR

Saturday night was the final regular-season match for the volleyball team's two seniors, defensive specialist Val Phillips and setter Devon Ryning.

Phillips and Ryning were recognized in an on-court ceremony before the match, where they were accompanied by their parents and presented with scrapbooks and jerseys by the coaching staff.

Ryning rewrote the record books for K-State setters. She has the three top single-season assist totals and is the career leader by nearly 2,000 more than second-place Renee Whitney. She is only the third player in the Big 12 to record more than 5,000 career assists.

K-State head coach Jim McLaughlin said Ryning will be hard to replace, but that Linsey Luther is ready to step in.

"(Ryning was) one of the best setters ever in Big 12 play," McLaughlin said. "That will take time to replace her. The good programs replace good people. Our No. 1 one priority is to replace her. More than anything, we'll miss her leadership. She makes everybody better."

Ryning said the numbers don't mean as much to her as her teammates do.

"The memories are about the people," Ryning said. "I'm very attached to them."

With both seniors starting, the Wildcats jumped out and annihilated the Cyclones, who finished the season last in the Big 12 with a 1-19 conference record. The Cats finished at 20-12 and 11-9 in Big 12 play.

Iowa State served to start the match, and the Cats immediately got a sideout. Before the Cyclones would serve again, K-State had a 6-0 lead. Iowa State scored two points on its service, but K-State scored eight consecutive points on swing hitter Kim Zschau's serve to take a 14-2 lead. Iowa State scored two more points before Zschau sent one to the floor to take game one 15-4.

K-State's defense led to the domination of the first game. The Cats had five blocks, all five assisted by middle blocker Val Wieck, and forced the Cyclones to make 10 hitting errors. K-State kept Iowa State to a negative .250 attack percentage in the game, while the Cats hit .300.

> "We gained some confidence this weekend. We were kind of saying, 'Hey, we have to have confidence or we're going nowhere.'"
> • Val Wieck

"When you block a team like we did, it takes them out of their element. It takes them out of their game plan," Ryning said. "It's very frustrating."

Game two was just as lopsided. The Cats led 6-3 to begin the game, and that was all the scoring Iowa State would do. K-State scored the final nine points of the game to win 15-3. The Cats had five more blocks, and hit a blistering .545 for the game, while keeping Iowa State to .000.

Using their momentum, the Cats jumped out to an 11-1 lead in game three. Iowa State scored seven consecutive points to make the game competitive at 11-8, but K-State finished the Cyclones with four points on setter Luther's serve. The Cats again kept Iowa State to .000 for the game, while hitting .350.

For the match, the Cats hit .403 and kept Iowa State to negative .083. Iowa State made more attack errors in game one — 10 — than K-State did for the entire match — nine. The Cats also dominated defensively, with 12 blocks to the Cyclones' four.

On Friday night, K-State ended its five-match losing streak with a 3-0 win over Missouri.

The Tigers played the Cats close during most of game one, but K-State took advantage of hot hitting (.353) and nine Tiger service errors to take the first game 15-8.

In the second game, K-State shut down the Mizzou offense. After recording 22 kills in game one, the Cats kept the Tigers to seven in game two, resulting in a negative .100 Tiger attack percentage. That defensive effort allowed the Cats to win the game by a 15-6 count.

Game three was similar to game two. The Cats blocked Mizzou four times and hit .353, while the Tigers hit .033. The result was another 15-6 win for the Cats.

The Cats ended up with 10 blocks, and McLaughlin said blocking was the key to the match.

"I thought we had a great night blocking the ball," McLaughlin said. "We blocked more than three balls a game tonight. Kim (Zschau) was blocking really well, and Val (Wieck) was great."

The Cats said playing well this weekend was important coming off of five consecutive losses. They wanted to make an impression on the NCAA Tournament Committee, as well as play well for their own sake.

"We gained some confidence this weekend," Wieck said. "We were kind of saying, 'Hey, we have to have confidence or we're going nowhere.'"

Volleyball team gets 2nd-consecutive invitation to NCAA Tournament

McLaughlin

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

Losing five consecutive matches down the stretch of the season left the Wildcats worrying, but K-State was selected by the NCAA to play in the championship tournament.

K-State finished the season 20-12 with a weekend sweep over Missouri and Iowa State. The wins left the Cats with an 11-9 conference record, good for sixth place.

That record was good enough to qualify the Cats for the tournament, though barely. The Cats were the lowest-rated Big 12 team to qualify, and will play No. 22 San Diego in the first round of the tournament on Friday in Los Angeles. If the Cats win, they will play the winner of the match between No. 8 USC and Morgan State on Saturday.

This match is a homecoming of sorts for K-State coach Jim McLaughlin. He was the coach of the men's volleyball team at USC from 1990 to 1996, where he won a national championship in his first season.

"It's kind of ironic that we're going to USC," McLaughlin said. "It was such a great place, and the people were so awesome."

San Diego is the champion of the West Coast Conference and received an automatic bid to the tournament. The Toreros went 25-3 this season and, like K-State, reached the tournament last season, but have never won an NCAA Tournament game.

Last season, the Cats earned their first-ever NCAA Tournament bid and beat Cal State-Northridge in a first-round game at Ahearn Field House before losing to Washington State in the second round.

The Big 12 was prevalent in the mind of the selection committee. Six conference teams — Texas, Texas A&M, Colorado, Nebraska, Oklahoma and K-State — made the tournament, and four of the teams are host sites for the first two rounds of the tournament.

McLaughlin said the quality of the conference was part of the reason K-State was accepted. All nine of the Cats' conference losses were to a team that made the tournament.

"The committee felt that the Big 12 was such a strong conference that they could take six teams," McLaughlin said.

McLaughlin said that he doesn't know too much about the Toreros yet, but he does know they're hot.

"I think they lost two of their first three matches, and then won 24 of 25, so they're playing really well," McLaughlin said. "They're a pretty hot team right now."

But McLaughlin is confident of the Cats' ability to beat San Diego.

"I think that we're a better blocking team than they are," he said.

The Cats showed that dominant blocking this weekend, recording 10 blocks in holding Missouri to a .103 attack percentage and tallying 12 blocks against Iowa State, forcing

Cats come out on fire, thump Mercer Bears 89-60

SUN DEE MILLS
sports editor

From opening tip-off to the game's final seconds, the Wildcats never let the Mercer Bears threaten the Cats' three-game winning streak. The Cats ran away with game four, 89-60.

The Cats came out hot off the bench, running up a 13-0 streak three minutes into the game.

"It was a tremendous confidence booster for the team," forward Josh Reid said. "We jumped out on them pretty quick. They started getting into the flow of the game after that."

Two key three-pointers by the Bears' Mark Johnson put Mercer on the board and in the game. Combined with the shooting of the Bears' Mark Adamson, Mercer reached 13 points with seven minutes left in the first half. But as Mercer's score approached the Cats, turnovers put the ball back in the Cats' hands.

The Bears walked twice in less than a minute. After the first walk, Cat guard Marcus McCollough swiped the ball from a Bear and got it to forward Pero Vasiljevic, who dunked it, giving the Cats an eight-point lead.

Mercer called a time-out to regroup, but the Cats responded by taking a 10-point lead with a bucket by center Joe Leonard. Going into the half at that point, the Cats never led by less than eight.

Up by 11 at the half, the Cats were killing the Bears on the boards, with 27 to the Bears' 15. The Cats also had only five turnovers and stole five balls, with point guard Duane Davis grabbing two of the five.

But in the second half, the Cats' defense suffered a setback, allowing the Bears to creep a little closer, mainly with three-point shooting by Johnson and Korey McCray. Coach Tom Asbury said he was disappointed in the defensive efforts, especially on three-point shooting.

"Initially, that was the poorest of our first three games, the defense in part," Asbury said. "Our dribble penetration and contesting threes bothered us a little bit."

Throughout the second half, Cats rotated in and out of the game. By the game's end, the entire Cat roster, with the exception of the injured Charles Dinkins, had seen the floor. Asbury said the team's newly acquired depth is key in games like these.

"Last year, a game like that would have gone down to the wire," Asbury said. "With more depth, we can keep fresher troops on the floor."

Forward Shawn Rhodes had an excuse to not be fresh, putting in a team-high 25 minutes. But Rhodes came out with team highs in points and boards. Rhodes scored 22 points, including three-of-four from the three-point arc, and he pulled down 12 rebounds.

"I don't have to do it (shoot threes) as much this year," Rhodes said. "We've got better shooters this year. But when I need to do it, I will."

Asbury said Rhodes had one of his better career games against the Bears.

"I've been waiting for that game from Shawn," Asbury said. "He's turned into a smart defender."

McCollough put up 12 points and forward Manny Dies added 11, including five-of-seven from the charity stripe. With five minutes to go in the game, Dies went down with an undetermined injury to his left ankle and did not return to the game.

Junior forward Ayome May contributed seven points and three

Women's basketball defeats Drake, Yale, falls to DePaul

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

With most of the student body home for the holiday, the K-State women's basketball team spent Thanksgiving in Chicago.

After disposing of the Drake Bulldogs 82-76 Tuesday night at Bramlage Coliseum, the Wildcats departed for the DePaul Tournament, playing Saturday and Sunday.

The Cats beat their second Missouri Valley Conference opponent in as many games Tuesday night, beating defending conference champion Drake in a mistake-filled game. Each team had 28 turnovers as a result of attacking defense from both teams.

K-State jumped out to a 9-2 lead, but Drake stormed back to tie the game at 12. The Cats would not fall behind, taking a 34-27 lead into halftime. Forward Ewa Laskowska led the Cats with four-of-six shooting, including two-of-three from three-point range, to score 12 points in the first half.

"I think tonight I took one step to the next level," Laskowska said. "I have to become more of a shooter."

The Cats stormed out in the second half and took a 57-36 lead. K-State maintained its 21-point lead, and led 70-49 with less than six minutes left. At that time, three Drake players had fouled out. The Bulldogs outscored K-State 27-10 to pull to 80-76 with 11.9 seconds left, but Brit Jacobson made two free throws down the stretch to secure the 82-76 win.

K-State head coach Deb Patterson said she wasn't happy with how the team played for the last eight minutes of the game, but that she was happy to get the win anyway.

"This was a good experience for us and something we've got to get better at," Patterson said.

Jacobson led three Cats in double figures, scoring 26 points, including 14-of-18 from the free-throw line. Laskowska added 20, while Kim Woodlee had 10 points.

"That was a great win for this team," Patterson said. "I think we made Drake, for a good part of the game, less than the team that they are."

K-State took its 2-0 record into the DePaul Tournament, where they faced the host Blue Demons, who came in at 1-0.

The Cats were down 35-28 at halftime, and Patterson said the Cats had trouble scoring after that.

"It seemed like we got stuck on 28," Patterson said. "We stopped executing and became very tentative. We weren't rebounding well. They would take a shot, and then we weren't getting any good boards."

The Cats recovered to shoot well in the second half, making 56 percent of their shots in the second frame. The Cats managed to take a 57-56 lead with 4:52 left, but they weren't able to keep the lead and lost 75-68.

That loss sent the Cats into the consolation game Sunday against Yale.

K-State dominated the game, winning 75-47. All 11 players on K-State's roster scored at least two points, led by Jacobson and Woodlee with 15, and Laskowska with 16. The Cats shot more than 50 percent from the field and outrebounded Yale 41-25 for the game. Yale shot only 31.4 percent from the field and turned the ball over 20 times.

The Cats took a 39-18 lead into halftime and were able to play their reserves for much of the game. No Wildcat played more than 27 minutes, and every player was on the court for at least eight minutes. This was in contrast to Saturday's game, where four Wildcats played at least 30 minutes.

The win improved K-State's record to 3-1. The Cats play host to Grambling State on Wednesday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

Robinson leaves behind list of admirers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — The winningest college football coach in history has retired — losing his last game but not disappointing his fans.

Eddie Robinson was saluted Saturday by the famous — when President Clinton called — and the not-so-famous, as fans chanted his name and wept when the 78-year-old coach broke down in sobs.

"You can't imagine the impact Coach Rob had," said Roosevelt Taylor, one of many former players on hand for Robinson's finale. "He was the ultimate role model."

Robinson, who started coaching at Grambling State in 1941, finished with a record of 408-165-15. His teams have won all or part of 17 Southwestern Athletic Conference titles and eight black-college national championships.

He built a nationally known program at a tiny school tucked away in the piney hills of north Louisiana and opened doors for his players in both sports and professional fields.

Taylor, who played in the National Football League for 14 years, was one of 210 players Robinson sent to the pros. They include four members of the NFL Hall of Fame and a former Super Bowl quarterback.

When Robinson began at Grambling, civil rights were but a dream and opportunity was limited for even the most gifted black athletes.

"Opportunities have grown tremendously since I played," said James Harris, a Grambling quarterback in the late 1960s, now an executive with the Baltimore Ravens. "When I played, I could not have gone to other schools in the state. Now, black athletes are at every school in the country."

Robinson's final three seasons were all losing years. And on Saturday, Grambling lost, 30-7, to Southern University and finished the year 3-8.

"Eddie never has to apologize for anything," said Hall of Famer and former player Willie Davis. "His record speaks for itself."

As important as winning was to Robinson, it was never his only goal. He never lost sight of Grambling's main mission.

"He never stopped preaching education," said Virgil Robinson, president and CEO of Dryades Savings in New Orleans. "I remember we had 28 seniors on the 1970 team that went 9-2. Of the 28, 21 graduated, and among the 21, you wound up with doctors, lawyers and educators. It may sound corny, but Coach made sure you left school realizing football could be used as a lesson in life."

Robinson's wife, Doris, would like for them to travel now that he is free of the long days of working with his team.

Robinson is only sure he wants to avoid the long list of chores he fears his wife has waiting for him.

"She's not going to put me in an apron," he promised.

rebounds, but piled up four fouls guarding the Bears' physical three players. Asbury said this was something May needed to get used to, and his point contribution would suffer for it.

"Paco is going to have to guard good guys in the Big 12 like (Texas Tech guard Cory) Carr and (Kansas guard Paul) Pierce," Asbury said. "It's a give-and-take process."

May said tough defense is mandatory, especially when guarding the opponent's best offensive player.

And though his shooting sometimes goes neglected, May said he'd rather Asbury not find someone else to do the job.

"It's like that sometimes," May said. "If that's what I have to do, it's fine with me."

Even though the final score of 89-60 looked bad, Davis said the game was still a challenge, and the team heard about it from its coach.

"That's one thing I love about Coach Asbury," Davis said. "He doesn't do it to put you down. He does it to get his point across."

And the point was well-taken, according to the Cats.

"We pulled it off," Davis said. "It's just our third game. We've got nowhere to go but up."

the Cyclones to hit -.083 for the match.

Middle blocker Val Wieck said the Cats are working on their game for the tournament.

"We're trying to go to the middle. Kelle (Branting) and I both, we can go at them better," Wieck said. "That's going to be one of our strategies when we get into the tournament."

Friday, McLaughlin will try to repeat the feat he accomplished in 1990, beginning a run to the national championship in Southern California. This time, however, he will be leading the Wildcats into action instead of the Trojans.

BOWL

The consensus was that Arizona State would go to the Fiesta Bowl and play in its home stadium if it beat Arizona on Friday, and that K-State would go to the Cotton Bowl for the second-consecutive year. The Sun Devils lost 28-16 to Arizona, though, leaving the door open for K-State, which Fiesta Bowl officials have been watching closely.

Another team that was likely to go to an alliance bowl, Penn State, lost to Michigan State by a 49-14 score, making it unlikely that the Nittany Lions will be in the Alliance for the second-consecutive year.

Assuming the favorites, Nebraska and Tennessee, win, the at-large Alliance bids would likely be two of the following: No. 5 UCLA (9-2), No. 6 Florida (9-2), No. 7 North Carolina (10-1), No. 9 Ohio State (10-2) and No. 10 K-State (10-1).

The Cotton Bowl matches up the No. 2 team in the Big 12 with either the No. 2 Pacific-10 team (UCLA) or the Western Athletic Conference Champion, which will be either No. 20 Colorado State or New Mexico. It is likely that K-State will go to the Cotton Bowl if it is not picked for an Alliance Bowl, and that the Cats would face UCLA, or if the Bruins are chosen for the Alliance, Arizona State.

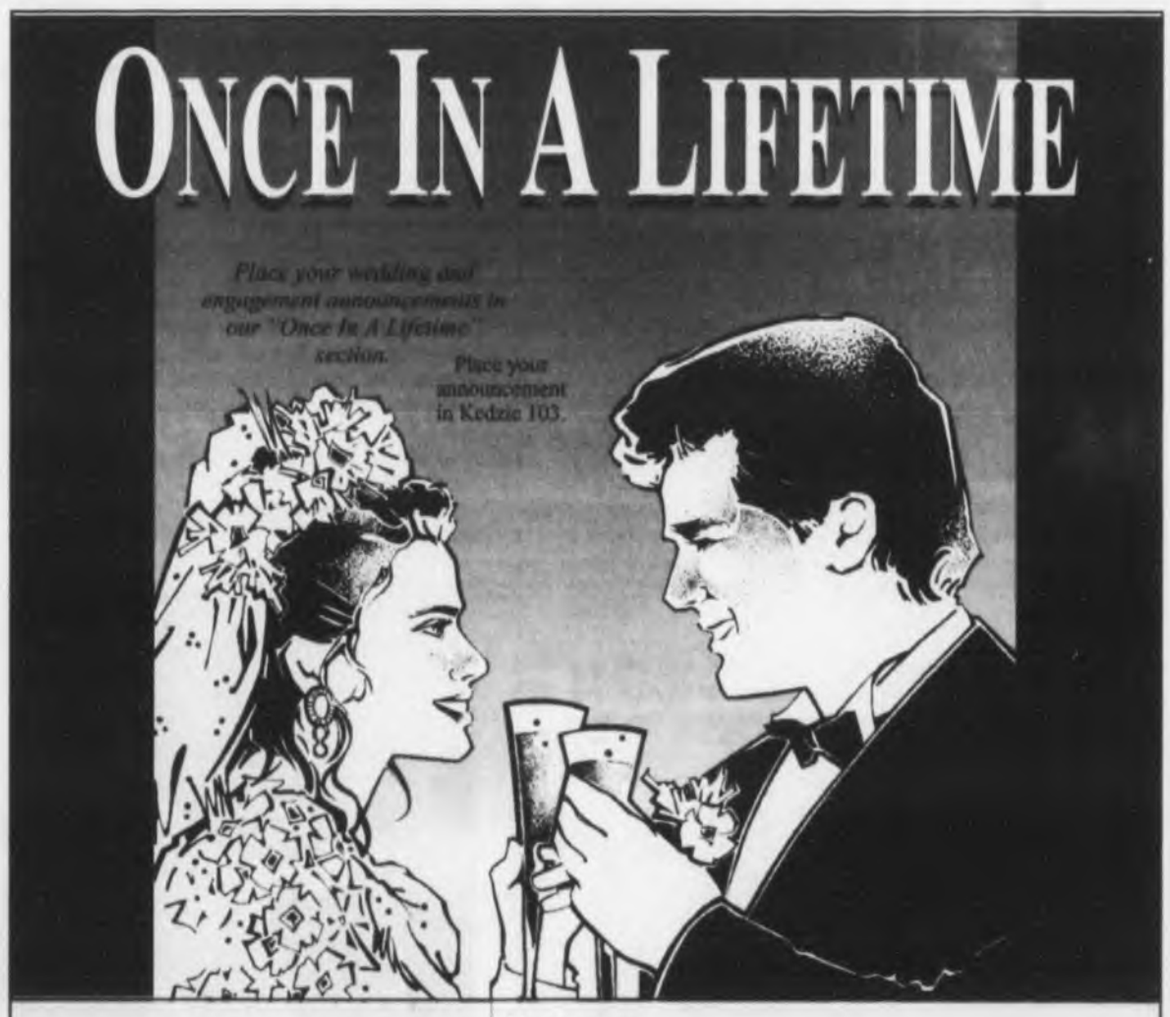
It's Christmas eve -- and a young girl dreams of a frightening Mouse King, her heroic Nutcracker, a kindly Sugar Plum Fairy, and a kingdom of delicious sweets. Tchaikovsky set this ETA Hoffmann tale to a memorable score in 1892 -- and his ballet has been delighting audiences ever since.



You may have seen it before, but when performed as an ice ballet, Nutcracker sparkles with a special grace and beauty.

Don't miss the troupe the Manhattan Mercury praised for its staging and athleticism: "The show may not have been ballet, but it was the best damned ice dancing show I'm ever likely to see."

Give the gift of the Nutcracker ice show performance for Christmas and purchase a McCain gift certificate. Great for people of any age!

Encounter with India

Poverty leads to oppression, corruption

REVIEW BY KEVYN JACOBS

Oh. My. Gods.

I wasn't prepared for India. I don't think any of us were.

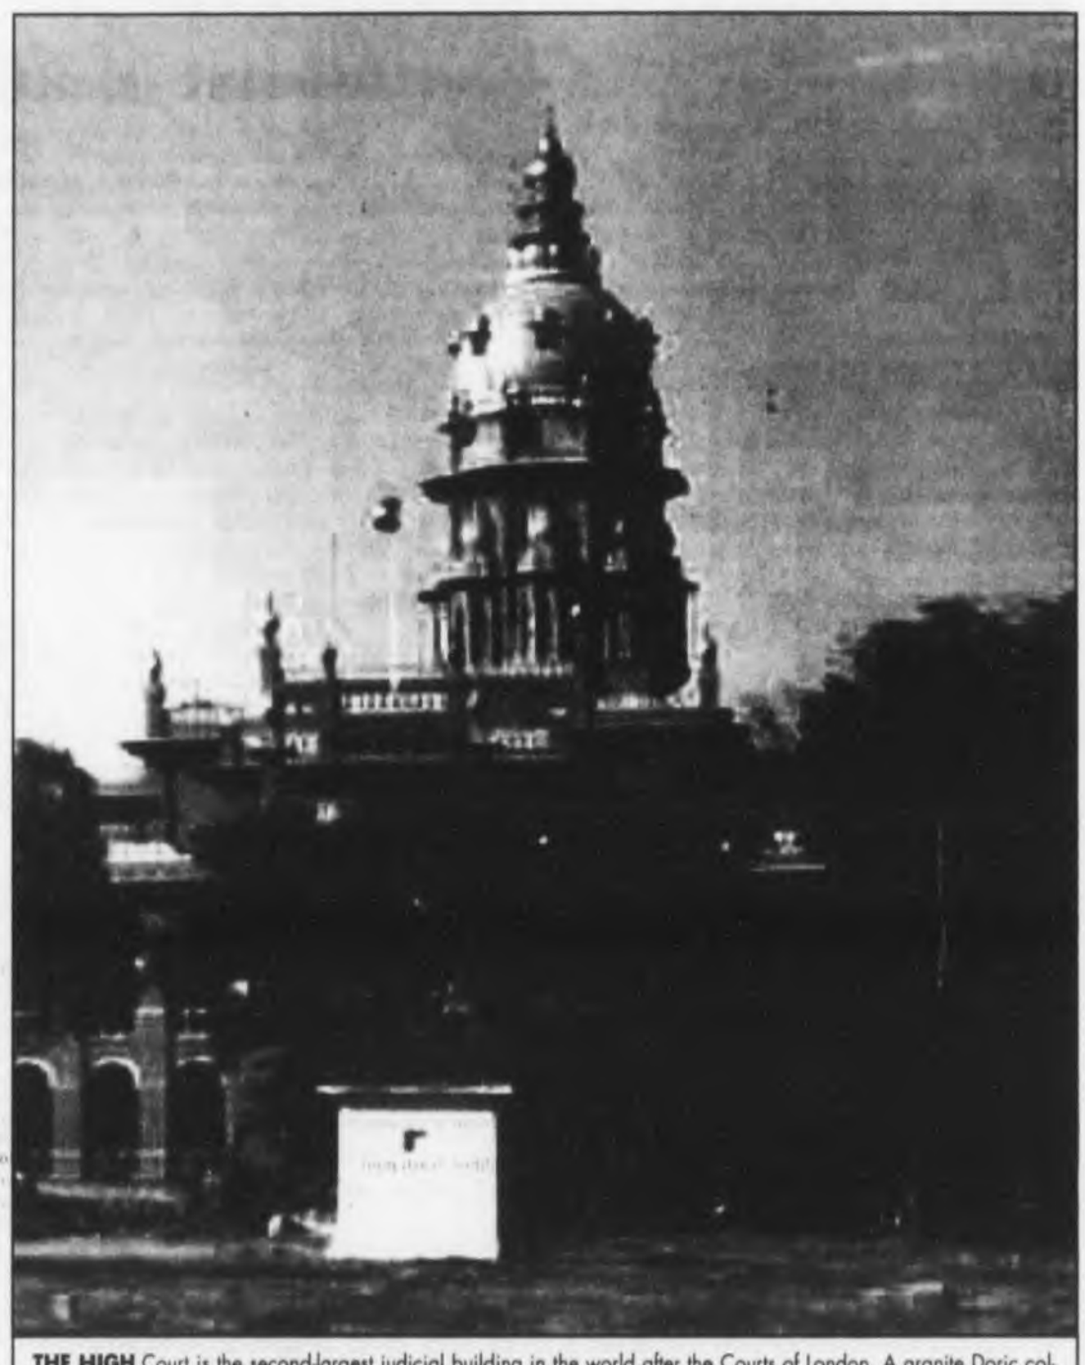
We knew it was going to be poor, but knowing and experiencing are two completely different things. I'd seen poverty before, in most of the countries I've visited this semester. I saw homeless people sleeping on the streets of Tokyo and Hong Kong. I saw families in Shanghai who lived in tiny, cramped and dingy ghettos. I saw children in Vietnam who were forced by poverty to hock postcards on the streets of Ho Chi Minh City.

Travelogue

But nothing I'd seen up to that point — nothing — could compare with the widespread squalor I saw in India. India was a mind-blower, an overwhelmingly depressing place.

We arrived in Chennai, India's fourth-largest city, on the morning of Oct. 6, after six days at sea. Chennai, formerly known as Madras, has to be the least pleasant, and my least favorite, of all the cities we've visited this semester. Chennai is, in short, a hell-hole of a city.

With all due respect to any Indians who might be reading this, and I apologize if I offend, Chennai is an oppressive, stinking, polluted, overcrowded, impoverished, racist and corrupt city that, frankly, I hated. I'm sure India has many fine places in it, and I'm also sure Chennai has its defenders. But as for me, I couldn't get out of India fast enough to protect my sanity, my health and my wallet.



It's unfortunate my entire impression of India as a country was formed by Chennai. I am sure if I had had the opportunity to get out of the Chennai area, I might have felt different. But because of my limited finances, I was forced to stay in a place I felt drained by, instead of enriched by.

The first thing that hits you about Chennai is the stench. The smell of stale urine, waste, rot and exhaust fumes fill the air. The whole city is one big, open sewer, where people openly urinate, and sometimes even defecate, on sidewalks. Many people don't have indoor plumbing, and public toilets that are available cost money. Of course, for someone with no money, this is a problem. And there are a lot of people without money in Chennai.

Chennai is also incredibly and oppressively crowded. Shanghai never felt this packed. Maybe it was just the atrocious conditions that made it feel so to me. India's population is fast approaching 1 billion (some say it has already reached it), and it is second only to China in population size. In another couple of decades, India's population is expected to be larger than China's.

This can only mean conditions in India will get worse. Hunger is extremely widespread, and when you put that many impoverished, malnourished people together in squalid conditions, disease is inevitable. India is a plague of massive proportions waiting to happen.

Chennai itself has so many people that there just aren't enough homes to go around. Huge slums of shanties are everywhere, and walking down any Chennai street you can see whole families living under tarps. The conditions of these dwellings are atrocious, and it was heart-wrenching to see people forced to live like that.

THE HIGH Court is the second-largest judicial building in the world after the Courts of London. A granite Doric column of 49 meters, it was built in 1841 as the second lighthouse.

I hate what poverty does to people, too. I hated being looked at like a big walking dollar sign, a financial piece of meat just ripe for the picking. I never felt as if the Indians ever saw me as a person, but as a meal ticket. Any time anyone was friendly to me, it was almost inevitable that they wanted something from me - food, money or to sell me some piece of tourist kitsch. I just didn't find the average Indian friendly at all, in that respect.

There was a high level of racism in the midst of all this. Because of my white face, prices were sure to automatically inflate whenever I went to buy something. I found this out when a Canadian acquaintance of mine from the ship, who happens to be of Indian ancestry, would go out with his European-descended classmates.

Corruption is also rampant in India, and the country seems to have made inefficient bureaucracy an art form. "Baksheesh," or bribes, are the grease that move the wheels of India. You have to pay baksheesh to get almost anything done. Semester-at-Sea students encountered this first-hand in Chennai, where gate guards at the port wouldn't let us back in to board the ship without first paying baksheesh.

Despite my general dissatisfaction with my visit to India, I do want to mention a couple of positive experiences I had.

The first was being invited to a Diwali celebration on the second day of my visit. Diwali, which is the Hindu "Festival of Lights," is one of the most festive of Hindu holidays, and it luckily fell during our visit. Diwali is as important to India as Christmas is to the West and can be described as a cross between Christmas, the Chinese New Year and a birthday celebration. It celebrates the return of Lord Rama to Ayodha after 14 years of exile and is marked by fireworks, family dinners, gift-giving and elaborate ceremonies.

On Diwali, I was among a group of students invited to go to a private home to share in the celebration. I got to watch an elaborate ritual of making offerings to the Lakshimi, the Hindu goddess of prosperity, after which was a nice dinner, including traditional silver-leaf covered confections. I don't think I've ever eaten a precious metal before. Then we adjourned to the street to set off fireworks.

The second bright spot of my India stay came on the only day I was able to get out of Chennai. A few of us rented a car and driver for the day and drove down the Tamil Nadu coast to Mahabalipuram, a historic site of Hindu temples and shrines that date back more than 1,200 years. There I saw wild monkeys climbing on the ancient statues of elephants, a breathtaking view from a 19th-century lighthouse, and even a snake charmer with live cobras and a mongoose he would goad into fighting the snakes for the benefit of tourists.

On the car ride back from Mahabalipuram, we were nearly in several accidents, thanks each time to the ubiquitous cows in India.

Hindus revere cows as sacred and never harm or eat them. They are allowed to roam where they please, in both the country and in the city. Indian cows are the most implacable of animals, wandering fearlessly through traffic without batting an eye.

One of the most vivid memories I will carry with me from India is of a cow standing calmly in the middle of a busy downtown Chennai intersection while traffic sped around it. On Indian streets, cows have the supreme right of way.

I spent the last day of my stay entirely on board the ship. I just couldn't bring myself to go out into that place again. I was too drained, too depressed by the whole Chennai experience to have any desire to go back out into it again. Perhaps this makes me an ethnocentric, insensitive and comfort-obsessed American. After all, those people out there don't have the luxury of retreating to a safe, air-conditioned ship, with plumbing and all the food you could possibly want, as I do. But it was just too much for me, and I knew I couldn't handle another day in India.

As I watched the lights of Chennai disappear over the horizon that night, I couldn't help but think how lucky I was to be able to leave that horrible place behind me, and how most of the people I saw there had no such escape. I truly am privileged, even wealthy when compared with many people in the world. If there is one lesson from India I will be taking with me, it is this: No matter how bad things might seem at home, there's always someplace where people have it much worse.

Next stop: Egypt.

A BREATHTAKING sculpture of a lion sits in Mahabalipuram.

REC REPORT

This is a Paid Advertisement

Tune in to our full page ad on the 1st day of each month for program information and monthly calendar of Recreational Services Events!

Who's Who at the Rec

Jade Murphy is working toward a degree in electrical and biomedical engineering as a pre med major. She also works as a lifeguard and water aerobics instructor for Recreational Services. "I work almost everyday," she said. "The people I work with are wonderful." Jade said she swam competitively when she was younger and is glad she has had the opportunity to continue her involvement with swimming. "I feel like some of the regulars are a part of my extended family," Jade said. "They tell me about their kids and what is going on in their lives." Jade has worked for Recreational Services for four years.

Chad Terry, a lead lifeguard for Recreational Services, has worked at the natatorium since January 1994. He checks identification cards and watches over the patrons. "I've really enjoyed all my years working for the Rec," he said. "They are very flexible when it comes to working around class schedules." Chad also comes to the Rec Complex for a free weight and cardiovascular workout. "I've been here long enough to see the changes," he said. "The facility has definitely improved." Chad graduates this month in hotel and restaurant management with a minor in business and plans to work for Walt Disney World in Florida

Facility FOCUS

As the weather outside gets colder and the chance of snow and ice is near, please think about carrying your workout shoes with you to the Rec Complex. The snow, sand and ice that melt on the bottom of shoes will make the courts dirty and slick, as well as getting into the cardiovascular machines. Help us keep your facility safe and clean!

My Favorite Workout

Jason McMahon, a junior in milling science, makes it to the Recreation Complex at least five days a week. He starts his workout with a mile run or five mile bike ride. Jason then continues with free weights. "I try to mix up my workout," he said. I separate my lifting by days, that way I can work the different muscle groups." Jason says he likes the Rec not only for the equipment, but also for the social atmosphere. "I definitely think this is a great place to go," he said. "You always see someone you know and there is always someone here to lift with." Along with lifting, Jason says he also enjoys playing racquetball.

Working It Out.

Don't sweat the studying! Join us Fri., Dec. 12, from 5:30 p.m. - 7 p.m. for a stress reliever before finals week begins. This will be the only class we will have that day.

We will also be offering exercise sessions Mon. through Thurs. of finals week, so watch the bulletin board outside the multipurpose room for class information and times.

Fitness Facts

Muscle weighs more than fat. Don't be discouraged if you gain weight while working out. A low-fat diet ensures the added weight is lean body mass (muscle weight) rather than fat.

Outdoor Rental Center

The Outdoor Rental Center will be CLOSED during the winter months. However, special arrangements can be made by calling the Recreational Services office at 532-6980. Twenty-four hour notice is required for any rental over the winter.

Intramural MANIA

Intramural Basketball

Don't miss our largest intramural sport of the year! Start organizing your teams now for the upcoming season! Entries will be accepted Tuesday, Jan. 20 through Friday, Jan. 23. Priority on playing times is on a first-come, first-serve basis. Information sheets with league menus will be available Monday, Dec. 15, in the business office.

Nutrition NOTES

Breakfast warms up your morning.

On cold winter mornings, a hearty breakfast does more than warm your insides. A nourishing breakfast gets your body going. Studies show that breakfast eaters perform better at school and work. Kids who start their day with breakfast do better on cognitive tests, miss school less often and get more of the nutrients they need. So tomorrow morning, start your day with breakfast.

For a warm start, try a bowl of oatmeal topped with spiced apples and cinnamon, accompanied by a glass of milk. Crispy french toast made with egg whites and crushed flaked cereal can be topped with warmed peaches and nonfat yogurt. For something a little easier, pop frozen pancakes in the toaster and roll them around sliced fruit. A bagel toasted and topped with low-fat cheese and served with a glass of juice is another easy option.

Whatever you choose - eat breakfast to warm your body and brain.

POOL action

December and January is the time of year to re-vamp the Natatorium. The pools will be cleaned and filters remodeled, so please be patient with us. At least one pool will be available for swimming during this time. Please refer to Rec Check and signage at the Natatorium for current pool information and swim hours during semester break.

Fri., Dec. 12, will be the last day that Wildcat Waterworks aqua aerobics will be offered for fall semester.

Campus health care cost could rise

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

The cost of health care at Lafene Health Center could be on the rise.

Legislation approved by the Privilege Fee Committee at its Monday meeting would keep the student health privilege fee at its current level but raise Lafene user fees to pay for projected shortfalls in the budget.

That legislation still needs final approval from Student Senate.

Committee members approved 7-3 a bill that would continue the privilege fee levels at $2,507,603 per year.

Lafene Director Lannie Zweimiller had originally asked for a 10-percent increase in the fee. But committee members opposed to a hike in the $84 per semester fee found other sources of funding.

The committee approved 7-2 a motion to charge a minimum of $5 per student per visit to a medical professional at Lafene.

Privilege Fee Committee Vice Chair Aaron Truax, who made the motion, said current numbers would indicate that the per-visit charge could produce more than $150,000 per year in additional revenue.

The increased user fee, Truax said, would place the burden for rising health care costs on students who use the service instead of the entire student body.

"The privilege fees, as a whole, are getting extremely high," he said. "This being the entity that has the highest privilege fee, I think we can at least try to get this on a track to a different type of system to where the students that are the primary users of this service could bear the primary expense for the service."

Truax said concerns from members of the administration about a user-fee system for Lafene were generally unfounded.

"We need to be looking out and be fiscally responsible to every student on this campus. They're paying for this, ultimately," Truax said. "Now we can tell the students, 'We're not going to raise your taxes this year, but whoever goes to Lafene is going to pay for it.'"

The committee also approved a change in the fee structure for University Counseling Services.

Money for University Counseling Services was formerly allocated as part of the student health privilege fee.

The committee approved the creation of a new fee for University Counseling Services, with the remaining health services packaged as the student health fee.

Zweimiller said the change was a good one because the two organizations have separate budgets.

"For both of us together to come in and present one budget for a privilege fee is kind of a problem for me," he said. "It just doesn't make sense because we're two separate entities."

The committee approved 6-4 a motion to recommend a $446,110 per year University Counseling Services fee for the next two years — a 7.5-percent increase.

25 phone lines. One bowl game.
Though K-Staters don't know which bowl game the Cats will play in, they still jammed phone lines Monday to place advance ticket orders.

TICKET FRENZY

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

The Athletic Department Ticket Office took orders for 5,600 Cotton Bowl tickets and 4,400 Fiesta Bowl tickets Monday, business manager Bob Cavello said.

The Fiesta Bowl gives only 13,500 tickets to each of the two competing schools and K-State sold about a third of that on the first day.

At the KSU Alumni Association, where 20 phones were ringing throughout the day, communications director Karen Shafer said her office didn't have time to count how many travel packages it had sold.

"We're so busy answering the phone down here that nobody's had time to stop and count," she said.

Cavello said the pace at the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics was hectic as well.

"We've got five phone lines in the ticket office. They have been continuously busy since 8 a.m. non-stop, and we've been taking orders throughout the whole day at about one per minute," he said.

Some customers reserved as many as 30 tickets at one time, which greatly increased the amount of tickets sold in the first day, Cavello said.

Manhattan mayor lights the holiday tree to start 150,000-pound food drive for Flint Hills Breadbasket

ILLUMINATING THE SEASON

MANHATTAN MAYOR Bruce Snead talks about the importance of helping to solve hunger problems Monday evening at Triangle Park in Manhattan. Snead appeared as part of the ceremonial lighting of the Mayor's Holiday Tree.

Monday night's cold temperatures didn't keep more than 100 Manhattan residents from showing up at Triangle Park in Manhattan for the ceremonial lighting of the Mayor's Holiday Tree.

▶ Get involved. Those interested in volunteering or donating can contact the Flint Hills Breadbasket at 537-0730.

Many people huddled together with hot cider and warm smiles as they waited for the festivities to begin at 6 p.m.

The ceremony kicked off with remarks by Shirley Bramhall, executive director of the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

She said she was pleased with the participation of Manhattan residents.

"You can read in the newspapers or hear on the radio about how participationism is down in our state," she said. "I can tell you that participationism is not down in Manhattan."

Bramhall then introduced Manhattan Mayor Bruce Snead.

Snead welcomed the crowd of onlookers and talked about this year's efforts to feed the needy.

He said this year's theme is "Hunger Has A Cure" and, in conjunction with the Flint Hills Breadbasket, it's trying to raise 150,000 pounds of food.

Snead spoke about how happy he is with the efforts of Manhattan's community to help out the needy.

"I'm so pleased to be the mayor when this type of contribution comes in," he said.

Snead also said the Mayor's Holiday Tree is one of the biggest food raising efforts throughout the year, and it's the people that make it happen.

After his remarks, Snead and Brennan Walter, a child from his neighborhood, helped the crowd count down from 10.

As the countdown ended, Snead hit the button that lit the Holiday Tree and the Christmas lights strung through Aggieville.

Oohs and ahs could be heard from the crowd followed by a round of applause.

Snead and Bramhall each encouraged people to volunteer or donate as much as they can to fight the hunger.

Businesses, students offer Christmas gift suggestions

STORY BY KRISTIN BOYD

Looking for that perfect Christmas gift takes talent. With the giving season quickly approaching, businesses and students offer suggestions for gift ideas.

"The biggest thing going for college students because of the cold weather are pajama pants and flannels. This, and wallets, are the hottest-selling items," said Sharon Decker, sales associate for men's and accessories department at Dillard's Department Store.

Theresa Manwaring, store manager of American Eagle Outfitters, said students are just starting to think of Christmas.

"We are trying to get everybody in the Christmas mood, but they really aren't there yet. We have been playing Christmas music, hanging garland up and setting out our miniature Christmas trees," Manwaring said.

Some K-State students already know what they would like for Christmas.

• "I want a pair of black boots to go out in, or I'll settle for money to go to Panama City for spring break. That is what I really want." — Claudia Donovan, sophomore in theater.

• "Bowl tickets for Christmas would be great because I had so much fun last year, so it would be fun to go again." — Gregg Farrar, junior in finance.

• "I would like a car, but I know I won't get one." — Mandy Lagoski, junior in elementary education.

• "I want a girlfriend for Christmas. Christmas time would be a great time to have a girlfriend." — Rob Griswold, junior in management information systems.

• "I want an Ernie doll that snores and whose stomach goes up and down." — Stephanie Willyard, sophomore in speech pathology.

• "I would like a mountain bike. I would like to bring it to school and be able to ride it on campus." — Rich Wilson, junior in landscape architecture.

• "A lap-top computer would be nice because I need one, and it would be convenient." — Vince

Student kills 3, injures 5 during prayer service

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WEST PADUCAH, Ky. — A 14-year-old boy who warned last week that "something big's going to happen" inserted earplugs, drew a gun and shot eight students as a prayer meeting ended in a high school lobby Monday.

Three girls were killed.

The boy, who had three spare clips of ammunition and four other guns, surrendered when Ben Strong — a pastor's son and leader of the prayer circle — grabbed the teen after he stopped shooting.

Afterward, the boy told Heath High School Principal Bill Bond, "I'm sorry."

"He acted just like he had been caught with some minor offense," Bond said.

"Really, the main question is, why," Sheriff Frank Augustus said. "He stated there was no personal vendetta against anyone. It was just a random shooting."

Strong said the boy hung out with people who claimed to be atheists.

The teen, who was not identified because of his age, carried into school a .22-caliber handgun with three spare clips of ammunition, two rifles and two shotguns. He wrapped the rifles and shotguns in blankets and told curious classmates they were props for a science project.

The principal in this western Kentucky community said an informal prayer meeting of about 35 students ended at 7:40 a.m., with the shooter and about a dozen others standing nearby. He said the teen calmly inserted earplugs, then drew the pistol from a backpack.

"Only the first three shots could have been aimed," Bond said. "After that, it was just as fast as he could pull the trigger. It was just random shooting."

Ben Heady, a senior, said he was nearby when the shooting began.

"I hear gunshots, about 10 in a row, just bang, bang, bang, bang, bang," he said. "People were just laying on the ground. People were screaming, running out of the hall."

Kayce Steger, 15, died at a hospital about 45 minutes after the shooting. Jessica James, 17, died in surgery. Nichole Hadley, 14, died late Monday. Four other students were admitted to hospitals. An eighth wounded student was treated.

"I ran up to him, and I just kind of pushed him against the wall," said Strong, who was warned by the shooter not to be

Reno might reject investigations into campaign finance violations

WASHINGTON — As Attorney General Janet Reno worked on her final decision, Republicans said it was certain she would reject their demand that she seek an independent counsel to investigate campaign fund-raising activities by President Clinton and Vice President Al Gore.

Reno met with top aides and leaders of her campaign finance task force for 2 1/2 hours Sunday. Asked as she left the Justice Department building whether she had made any decision, she replied, "No comment."

She added, "I'd look at Tuesday," the deadline for her to decide whether to inform a special court that activities by Clinton and Gore might warrant the appointment of an outside prosecutor to investigate possible illegalities.

Aides indicated that, as is her practice at pre-decision meetings, Reno asked questions but didn't volunteer her thinking.

Republicans used appearances on Sunday talk shows to predict Reno would opt against an independent counsel.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, contended on "Fox News Sunday" that Reno would do so because political appointees in the Justice Department were "politically advising her not to do this rather than advising her to live within the law and do what's right."

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said he also was resigned to a negative decision by Reno. "I think she just has a blind spot," he said on ABC's "This Week."

Eight planets and moon line up for visible sky show this week

MIAMI — The moon and eight of the planets will line up in the sky this week "like pearls on a string" in a sight that won't be visible again from Earth for at least another century.

Beginning Monday night and continuing through Dec. 8, the planets will appear in the southwestern sky in a line slanting upward from the horizon. From west to east, Pluto will be followed by Mercury, Mars, Venus, Neptune, Uranus, Jupiter and Saturn, with a crescent moon alongside.

Mercury, Mars, Venus, Jupiter and Saturn will be visible to the naked eye, with Venus and Jupiter by far the brightest. A good pair of binoculars will be needed to see the small blue dots that are Uranus and Neptune. Pluto will be visible only by telescope.

The planets will be similarly aligned in May 2000, but they will be so close to the sun that they won't all be visible from Earth. A computer analysis showed it will be at least another 100 years before so many planets will be so close and so visible.

3-year-old boy dies in house fire

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — No charges were expected to be filed in connection with a house fire that claimed the life of a 3-year-old boy.

Devonta Collins died of severe burns and smoke inhalation in the fire, which started about 1 p.m. Sunday at his family's town house in northeast Kansas City, Kan.

The Wyandotte County District Attorney's Office said the fire was ruled accidental and that no charges would be filed.

The boy's mother, Rochelle Collins, told officials she left Devonta alone sitting on a first-floor couch watching television while she went to a nearby neighbor's home to use their telephone. She said she had been cooking, but that she turned off the burners before leaving.

German government to compile list of 'dangerous' Internet sites

BONN, Germany — Anyone looking for pornographic or neo-Nazi material on the Internet doesn't have to spend hours surfing the Web. The German government is publishing its own list.

Germany's new multimedia law, which took effect in August, requires the Federal Youth Protection Agency to compile a list of World Wide Web sites it believes can endanger young people.

The government told Parliament on Monday that it had 57 sites on the list so far.

Under the new law, anyone propagating neo-Nazi material over the Internet in Germany can be sentenced to up to five years in prison.

Critics, however, doubt whether the law can be enforced. As a rule, such Web pages are stored on computers outside Germany.

They also say compiling such a list might be counter-productive. It has to be published in the parliamentary record, making it easier for people to find the forbidden sites.

Former K-State student plans new center for fellow alumni

AMY BICKEL
staff reporter

Amy Button Renz comes from a long line of Wildcats.

Maybe that's why Renz, KSU Alumni Association president and a third-generation K-Stater, finds her job a good experience.

"It's been extremely rewarding to work for my alma mater," Renz said.

After graduating with a degree in political science in 1976, Renz worked for a senator in Washington, D.C.. In 1977, she was offered a job with the Alumni Association to work with student programming.

One program she established was the K-State Ambassadors program in 1978. Student ambassadors are named each year during Homecoming.

"It's amazing that a group you started in '78 is still in existence today," she said.

Now Renz is working on a bigger project, the new alumni center, which will be built on the south of Memorial Stadium.

Renz said other sites were considered for the center, but being close to the center of campus was more of a priority.

"I'm very excited about the location," Renz said. "It will provide a gateway to the campus."

She said the center will provide a place for alumni to come back to when visiting the campus. The center is still being designed.

The building will be about 45,000 square feet. Instead of the planned horseshoe shape, a three-story limestone building that complements other buildings on campus is planned, Renz said.

One of the main concerns Renz has is with what students want in an alumni center.

Renz said she welcomes feedback from students about a building she believes students and alumni should have much ownership in.

"Students will be future alumni, so they should be very interested in this project," Renz said.

Renz said from the time she started at the Alumni Association, alumni participation has been increasing every year.

Since July, 16,500 alumni and friends have participated in 216 Alumni Association-sponsored events.

"With numbers continuing to grow, it can be a challenge, but also an opportunity," she said.

She also said the association's budget in 1977 was less than $200,000.

Now, it is about $1.7 million.

Renz and the Alumni Association Board of Directors have been looking at expansion for the past two years.

"This is something we (Alumni Association Board) always wanted to do," she said. "The fact that the university is excelling both academically and athletically — the time is right."

As the building goes into progress, Renz will continue coordinating activities for alumni, planning recruitment and doing what she enjoys most— working with students.

"It's really not a challenge," she said. "I consider them to be opportunities to work with alumni, administration, students and our colleges."

Renz said she will also continue to support campus sports, which she tries to attend in her free time. As a football fan, she and her family haven't missed a game all semester.

She will also continue to support the tradition that she and other family members were a part of when attending the university.

"I never considered any other institution to go to," she said. "I always wanted to go to K-State."

Minimum grade point average instituted for all sororities by Panhellenic Council

COLE EHMKE
staff reporter

A minimum 2.2-grade-point-average requirement on a four-point scale was passed by Panhellenic Council, the governing body of K-State's 11 sororities, at its Monday meeting.

The constitutional amendment mirrors a 2.2-GPA requirement for fraternities.

The cumulative GPA for sorority houses must be above the minimum. If not, the houses must write a scholarship plan to bring the GPA up. If the problem continues for a second semester, a house's executive committee must state in a hearing before Panhellenic Council's executive board why no improvement was made and outline an improvement plan that Panhellenic Council must approve.

Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said the change was preventive measure.

"If a problem did arise, then we would have a way to address it," Robel said.

Also at the meeting, which was a joint meeting between Panhellenic and the Interfraternity councils, Greg Davis, IFC president, introduced a survey to test the way greek houses are perceived by its members.

The study, which Davis helped write, is similar to a survey that his fraternity, Sigma Phi Epsilon, completed a couple of years ago.

Davis said the results of the survey enlightened them.

"We basically found we had no identity," Davis said.

As a result, Davis said his fraternity developed leadership training and tried to improve its image.

The new perception study will be given to four people in each house. It will only survey what a member of a house thinks of their fraternity or sorority.

Questions include how many people the person knows in the house and what they think of the house's overall attitude, impact on the community and type of people in the house.

"It gives a snapshot of where a house is," Davis said. "With the information from the survey, they can address the problems they have."

So far 11 of 26 fraternities and 2 of 11 sororities have asked for the survey, Davis said.

Additionally, an image survey of the greeks will also be undertaken. Cade Keenan, public relations director for IFC, said a separate survey of faculty, administration, businesses and neighbors will be done this year.

"It will give a better idea of things to improve upon," Keenan said.

K-State publications earn awards

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

Efforts by yearbook, newspaper and advertising staff members at Student Publications Inc. haven't gone unnoticed this semester.

The three publications and their employees have garnered several awards at the state and national level.

Nationwide recognition included a National Yearbook Pacemaker Award from the Associated Collegiate Press for the 1996 Royal Purple yearbook. K-State's book has won the award for 11 years, Royal Purple adviser Linda Puntney said.

"We always say that the Pacemaker is like the Pulitzer Prize for college journalists. It would be equivalent to the debate team winning the national championship or the football team winning the Orange Bowl," she said.

The Collegian won second place of Best of Show at the Associated Collegiate Press/College Media Advisers conference. Collegian News Adviser Ron Johnson said it was quite an achievement.

"The Best of Show competition, from a Collegian standpoint, is one of the most gratifying awards we've received in recent years," he said. "We were in some very prestigious company. The newspapers at Ball State, OU and KU are exceptional publications."

Advertising staff members have also been honored for their work, earning seven honors from the Kansas Newspaper Advertising Association.

Entries were judged against other professional Kansas newspapers, including The Topeka Capital-Journal and The Hutchinson News. K-State's staff earned two first-place awards, two third-place awards and two honorable mentions for display and classified ads.

This year's fall preview edition of the Collegian was also honored as the first-place special section.

Even with all of the honors, Puntney said reader satisfaction is still the most important factor for publications, not the number of plaques on the wall.

"Frankly, it's nice for us to win awards, because that is the recognition among our peers as being a professional-type publication. But our real judges are the students on this campus," she said.

Students should pay attention to AIDS Awareness Week

It's AIDS Awareness Week — where's your red ribbon?

In the K-State Student Union from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. today, you'll be able to donate money for nutritional supplements for people infected with HIV.

At 7 p.m. Wednesday in McCain Auditorium, you can listen to speakers Kathy Slawson, who works with the Ryan White Foundation in Topeka, and Monica McDaniel, who is living with HIV.

Despite more than 15 years of AIDS awareness campaigns, about 16,000 people are infected with HIV everyday. Not everyone knows everything about AIDS. And college students, who sometimes think they know everything about everything, are at risk.

You don't have to be homosexual.

You don't have to be a heroin addict.

There's no cure yet.

This week is a great chance to educate yourself about AIDS. You may think you know all there is to know, but chances are you don't. And the less you know, the greater the chance is you could contract HIV.

Pick up literature. Listen to guest speakers. Participate in activities. Show your support by wearing a red ribbon or donating money in the Union.

If you have any thought that you might be at risk for HIV, have yourself tested. Lafene Health Center offers testing, so you won't even have to go off campus. Don't just do it for yourself — do it for others as well.

Think twice when you're out and about as well. You can't tell on the outside if someone has HIV, so don't randomly go home with people. You could wake up with more than you bargained for.

You can't get it from casual contact.

You can get it from oral sex.

You can get it.

Be aware and be in support of those living with HIV this week.

NATIONAL CHAMPS?

9 WILDCATS LOOK TO CONTINUE K-STATE'S TRADITION OF ACADEMIC EXCELLENCE

VIEWPOINT

CHRISTOPHER McLEMORE

CHRIS McLEMORE is a sophomore in political science and speech. You can send e-mail to Chris at clm1182@ksu.edu.

Many of us are bright.

Very few of us are Fulbright.

This year just more than 500 Fulbright Scholarships will be awarded to collegiate applicants. The scholarship provides the winners with the ability to study abroad by providing round-trip airfare, transportation, tuition to a selected university and a monthly stipend for the academic year (party outfit sold separately). This award adds up to about $15,000 in the host country's currency. I hear runners-up get the take-home version.

At this point, you are probably wondering where the line for the Fulbright handout begins. Try the office of Walter Kolonosky, chair of the Fulbright Committee. Kolonosky has applications for the grand award available in his office, and your chances of winning might not be too bad. It seems Kolonosky is to the K-State Fulbright program what Bill Snyder has been to K-State football.

No, Kolonosky doesn't call offensive plays every Saturday, but rather he has fostered a program that is now flourishing. Since Kolonosky became Fulbright chair in 1981, 31 K-State students have won the prestigious award. Last year five K-State students won the $15,000 prize. If they would have pooled their money, they might have been able to have tea with President Clinton. Instead, the five students are now in England, Finland, Japan, India and Zambia. Once again, Wales was overlooked by K-State scholars.

This year, K-State hopes to win just as many Fulbrights. Nine K-State students have applied and been recommended by the Fulbright committee for a shot at the prize. Kolonosky told me these nine students are strong candidates, much like last year's. Winning five more Fulbrights this year would be like a return trip to the Cotton Bowl (artificial turf excluded). Such a distinguished feat helps elevate K-State into a national spotlight.

This year's Fulbright candidates are Nusheen Ameenuddin, Jennifer Higerd, Justin Kastner, James Lehr, Brittany Prelogar, Karen Ruckert, Julie Tarara, Diane Tuinstra and Aaron Wichman. Their international aspirations range from Tarara's desire to focus on agricultural meteorology while in Zimbabwe to Kastner's hope to focus on food safety and control in England. (Perhaps England could have used someone studying food safety earlier this year. I hear there's many angry cows running around over there.)

So, what have these students done to receive Fulbright recommendation? These students are setting their sights high, while many of us are still undecided.

There was obviously a lot of hard work involved. This work began with the applications. After that, students had to create proposals for study and research abroad. They then were interviewed by members of the committee and presented their ideas. The students spent hours creating their bid for an international excursion, and until now they have gone virtually unnoticed.

Despite Kolonosky's repeated efforts to e-mail, phone and write various campus figures to gain publicity for the scholars, little, if any, publicity has been given. There's been no special Fulbright Scholarship wrap-around section in the newspaper, no congratulatory messages during halftime at football games and no special recognition from the administration.

Here at the "Harvard of the Midwest" we espouse education as a primary focus. Of course, only when it's convenient. Even my hometown newspaper, The Wichita Eagle, picked up on President Jon Wefald's prepared statement on K-State's potential bowl bid. Apparently, nine Fulbright recommendations are no cause for a fiesta in the presidential suite.

This university should be proud that nine of its students are seeking out one of the most prestigious national scholarships available. I'd be happy just to get accepted into some of these international universities, let alone get paid to go there.

If we want education to flourish at K-State, we need to support education. It was university support that allowed the football program to prosper. Without support we could say goodbye to 10-win seasons. Should we allow this same potential lack of support to scuttle our own educational highlights?

I think the answer is clear. If we truly want to be the local Harvard (without the pretentious attitude) our scholars deserve some support and recognition. Sure, Harvard doesn't have a bowl-worthy football team, but its quality image is one we envy. The path to this quality doesn't begin in Tempe, Ariz. It begins here, with our students, our scholars and our nine Fulbright candidates.

Kicking TV habit frees much time for important studying, exercising

KRIS EMMONS/Collegian

On Aug. 22, I quit my TV habit cold turkey.

I did not suddenly decide to become virtuous, nor was I watching too much television (in fact, 10 hours a week is still far below the national average). But I had realized early the previous spring that I wanted to graduate this year, so I made a list of courses I still had to take to complete three majors. I realized I could do it if I took one more course per semester than I was already taking.

VIEWPOINT

JONATHAN WINKLER

JONATHAN WINKLER is a senior in physics. You can send e-mail to Jonathan at jnw@ksu.edu.

But I wanted to get into graduate school after I finished my bachelor's degree. That meant applying for scholarships and taking the Graduate Record Examination the following fall, which added still more to my workload.

So I sat down with pen and paper and did some simple calculations. Ten hours a week over a 14-week semester meant 140 total hours spent in front of the television. I estimated that in order to take an upper-division physics course, I needed six hours 10 times during the semester to finish homework assignments and three hours per week to attend class meetings. That added up to 102 hours.

I applied for two scholarships, which required 30 hours apiece. I couldn't estimate the time needed to study for the Physics GRE, but I had a vague impression that two hours' worth of reviewing per week through the semester would provide a bare minimum of preparation. That added up to another 28 hours.

With 190 hours of extra work on my plate, something had to go —either television or 1 1/2 hours of sleep per night. After seeing my favorite shows either canceled or forced into reruns, and observing some disturbing flickers in my set during commercial breaks, I decided I liked the insides of my eyelids better. (Psychological research has thoroughly discredited subliminal advertising as a marketing technique, but it's not explicitly forbidden by law. Because most TV executives believe viewers are trash in human form, nothing prevents them from experimenting with it.)

So when the annual letter from TCI of Kansas came with my dorm kit, I took one look at the rates — higher this year, as always — and threw them and the channel guide into the wastebasket.

I did not even pick up a television schedule until I was home visiting my parents over Halloween weekend. I found that the only two shows I was interested in following had not even begun for the season yet. So what had I missed? A hundred channels of nothing very much?

I feel liberated now. When I want to watch something on television, I just rent a video — it's cheaper to rent 10 movies a month (even at a dollar each) than to pay $30 monthly for 40 channels, with occasional poor picture quality.

I've also plowed over some of the time I used to spend watching television shows into getting into shape. Back in the bad old days when I was addicted, I was so securely imprisoned by ennui and accidie that I absolutely had to have one hour's worth of narcotic television drama to get through the evening.

At least twice a week I would go to bed and wake up in the REM phase of each sleep cycle, usually five times a night. Now I do at least five minutes' exercise on a rowing machine each evening and the exertion exhausts me so much I sleep like a rock.

I don't feel self-righteous because I no longer watch television. I just feel so much better. Now, if I could just find time to read a few books for pleasure.

Native of India says column is short-sighted

Editor,

I am an avid follower of the Collegian, and I've hardly missed an edition. After two years of great interest in the Collegian, I am totally disappointed by the dismal performance of one of your columnists and the editor who allowed a particular column to run.

I had great faith in your editorial staff, but I had to lose all that.

I'm talking about Monday's so-called "travel experience" by Kevyn Jacobs in his "Encounter with India."

In this column, he visited a place, Chennai, and commented about entire India. India is one of the most popular tourist attractions in the world. Its historic and cultural importance is unmatched. Just visiting one place that is not so famous and making vague statements about the poverty, culture and reception of the entire country shows a lack of experience and responsibility. India is too big to judge by seeing just one place.

I am not writing this to you just because I am from India, but to tell you that it takes some experience and responsibility to write about a country. Thank you.

K-State knocked down, but not out of Fiesta picture

I listened to the chorus of music group Chumbawumba's hit song the other day. You know, the one that goes, "I get knocked down, but I get up again. You're never gonna keep me down," and it immediately thought of football coach Bill Snyder.

The song's chorus perfectly describes the respect K-State earned (or didn't earn) in college football this season.

K-State finished its regular season 10-1 for the first time in 87 years. It has enjoyed a top-10 ranking in either the Associated Press or USA Today/ESPN poll for the past four weeks. But the Wildcats keep getting bounced around. They're up. They're down. They're up. They're down.

VIEWPOINT

D. SCOTT FRITCHEN

D. SCOTT FRITCHEN is a senior in mass communications. You can send your e-mail to Scott at ds7477@ksu.edu.

And now with any luck, they'll stay stagnant for a couple weeks until their fifth-consecutive bowl game.

Oh, don't act surprised. Snyder saw the drop coming before he hit the pillow after the win over Iowa State. He foresaw K-State dropping two spots in the polls. He can't tell you for sure why it took place, mind you, and he can't tell you if the move was right or wrong.

However, the winningest coach in K-State football history will tell you this much, which is really saying something for a coach who demonstrated equal emotion during a 23-20 victory over Ohio and a 58-0 win against Bowling Green.

It hurts. Dressing up for your senior prom and being stood up hurts. Putting in twice as many hours as your co-workers and watching them walk with the check hurts. And being snubbed by your coaching colleagues when you mold a football team and it becomes a national power, only to be knocked down again, hurts.

Funny thing is, K-State won by 25 points in its final game of the regular season and still didn't win in the polls.

The Wildcats dropped in the polls, and Snyder looked down at his table during a Tuesday press conference and scratched a fingernail along a grain of wood, searching for answers. Snyder hopes the Fiesta Bowl overlooks the drop and instead realizes K-State's only loss was to undefeated Nebraska four weeks into the season.

Shawn Schoeffler, public relations director for the Fiesta Bowl, answered Snyder's plea.

"Obviously, Kansas State had a very good season," Schoeffler said. "K-State has a very good chance of getting to the Fiesta Bowl."

But Schoeffler learned a valuable lesson last season when Texas suddenly rumbled into Tempe, Ariz., with an upset over Nebraska in the Big 12 Championship. Expect the unexpected. Expect to be surprised.

Schoeffler would be surprised to look at this figure. It's Tuesday and thousands of K-State fans have already placed orders for bowl tickets. Schoeffler said each school receives an allotment of 13,500 tickets. Technically, couldn't K-State sell its allotment by, hmm, Friday?

Even before bowl tickets were for sale, Schoeffler assured every Wildcat fan an opportunity to buy a ticket. "If K-State was accepted to the Fiesta Bowl and 50,000 K-State fans wanted tickets, we could find tickets for them," Schoeffler said.

If the Wildcats are accepted to the Fiesta Bowl, Schoeffler said he knows to expect a purple flood for a week.

"Fourty-thousand fans would be outstanding," Schoeffler said. "That's something important to know. What K-State did in Dallas is important to every bowl. Teams earn a reputation, and knowing that a very strong team is selling out the stadium is great."

How about selling the entire city of Dallas out of Bud Light, huh? Is that impressive?

But for now, Schoeffler sits on his hands and waits for Saturday's championship games. Then he'll figure out the Xs and Os of possible matchups. Then the Sugar Bowl will make a selection. Then he'll evaluate the situation.

K-State might get snubbed by the Fiesta Bowl. That's why Rick Baker, president of the Cotton Bowl, is busy. Don't ask me why. He's tired of the "hypothetically speakings," the "what ifs," the headaches of trying to control an out-of-control bowl picture that changes quicker than an 8-year-old's Etch-A-Sketch.

"I don't get into that at all," Baker said. And he means it. He fell in love with K-State in Dallas last year. He said Wildcat fans were some of the best he's ever seen. He said it was a special year for the Cotton Bowl. He doesn't want K-State to count Dallas out. "You're probably hearing the same things that we're hearing, that K-State is heading to the Fiesta Bowl. If that was the case, K-State wouldn't be available to us right now."

If K-State is accepted to the Cotton Bowl, Baker is sure there will be a contingency of purple flowing down Interstate 35. Wildcat fans will flood Dallas again and play UCLA or Arizona State. K-State will win. K-State will be OK.

But it's only Tuesday.

K-State deserves an Alliance Bowl bid.

RACE FOR RESPECT

▸ K-STATE MOUNTAIN BIKERS place 18th in Collegiate National race.

JACOB JANSONIUS
staff reporter

Inexperience hurt many of the K-State mountain bikers in the Collegiate National race, but it didn't stop anyone from giving an all-out effort.

The K-State Cycling team participated in the Mountain Bike Collegiate National meet in Wisconsin two weeks ago. The team placed 18th out of 51 teams from around the nation.

Theodis Gatlin, senior in kinesiology, finished last in the Men's B Cross Country race, but said he had a lot of fun anyway.

"My goal was to finish," said Gatlin. "I fell in a huge mud puddle, and everyone on our team watched me do it. It was all for fun, and I'm glad I went."

Jason Bucher, sophomore in business, said there were team members that were in way over their heads at nationals — including himself. Bucher finished 112th in the men's cross country race.

"I'm glad I finished the race. In one race this year, I broke a chain, and in another race I got a flat tire. This time I had lots of tools and I was prepared," Bucher said. "It's an enjoyable ride, but overall I think the team can get better."

The collegiate national race was the team's third and final race of the season. Despite the team's riding inexperience, many of the team's members turned in solid individual performances.

Jennifer Whitlock, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, placed third in the women's B Dual Slalom and third in the Women's B Cross Country race. Jamie Rutler, junior in mechanical engineering, finished second in the Women's B Dual Slalom and fourth in the Women's B Cross Country race.

Wally Burton, sophomore in mechanical engineering, finished fourth in the Men's B Dual Slalom and thought the team had an excellent performance overall.

"There were so many people there compared to the other races," Burton said. "Experience-wise, the team is pretty low. This is my first year and only my second race. Next year, I hope to do better, and I want to start training and getting in shape a little earlier."

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian

Because the collegiate nationals are held in Wisconsin, the terrain is very different than what the K-State team is accustomed to.

"Colorado, California and other riders out west have an advantage because they live in hilly country. With Kansas being in the midlands, we don't get much practice at climbing a lot of hills," Gatlin said. "The ride was grueling and it seemed like the hills that went up never went back down."

Burton plans on chalking up his race to experience.

"I had a great time, and everyone in the community got behind us to support us," said Burton. "I hope we get the opportunity to race somewhere cool again next year. I think I'll be a little more prepared."

> "My goal was to finish. I fell in a huge mud puddle, and everyone on our team watched me do it. It was all for fun, and I'm glad I went."

Freshman places 73rd at Nationals

JOEL WHITE
staff writer

Most freshmen cross country runners can't imagine competing in the national championship race. Trying to become an all-American is not even an afterthought. That is the case for most freshmen, unless you're K-State's Annie Wetterhus.

Wetterhus didn't qualify for all-American in last Monday's NCAA National Championships in Greenville, S.C., but she placed 73rd in a field of 180.

"It was overwhelming for me in a way, but it was a good experience," Wetterhus said.

She needed to place in the top 25 runners from the United States to be the sixth overall and second freshman cross country all-American in the history of K-State.

The last K-State freshman to be a cross country all-American was Cindy Worcester in 1977.

The national championship race contained numerous obstacles for Wetterhus to overcome.

"I started the race in an individual box for five people," she said. "There wasn't enough room for five people."

She made her way to the front of the box, which was on the far right side starting line. A quarter-mile into the race, the course made a hair-pin turn to the right.

"I had to get to the left so I didn't have to walk around the turn," she said.

After the hairpin turn, the runners dealt with concrete paths meant for golf carts. Because of the concrete, which covered about a third of the course, Wetterhus pulled the spikes out of her shoes — something she had never done before.

The part of the course that was not concrete was muddy from the rain of previous days.

Regardless of the adverse conditions of the course, Wetterhus ran a personal record time of 17:53 on the 5,000-meter course.

"When I crossed the finish line, I had no idea what time I ran," she said.

Her first mile time in the national meet was 5:19, and her first mile time in the Big 12 meet was 5:45. This is proof that Wetterhus rose to the occasion.

Wetterhus said although she didn't make all-American status, she ran well and was not disappointed with her performance.

"I don't think I can be disappointed because I ran my best time," she said.

Because Wetterhus ran as an individual instead of as a teammate in the race, she said she did not feel any outside pressure to compete well.

"The only pressure I felt was the pressure I put on myself," she said.

By qualifying for the national championship this year, she has put some added pressure on herself for the future.

"I have my eyes on all-American for my sophomore year," she said.

NFL

San Francisco already was in the playoffs and now has a bye, too. Denver joined in as a postseason qualifier, and Kansas City solidified its position as a contender.

Things are getting settled nicely in the NFL's western divisions.

They are getting more muddled by the week in the eastern sectors.

While Denver's 38-28 victory Sunday night at San Diego handed the Broncos a wild-card berth at worst, the Chiefs' 44-9 rout of the 49ers kept them right on Denver's heels in the AFC West. Oddly, the 49ers were assured of having the first round off when the playoffs begin later this month because the New York Giants were beaten 20-8 by Tampa Bay.

New York's loss also tightened the NFC East, although the Giants (7-5-1) stayed on top.

But Philadelphia's 44-42 shootout win over Cincinnati lifted it within a game of New York and tied with Washington, which fell at home to St. Louis 23-20.

"We're still in this thing," said Eagles quarterback Bobby Hoying, who threw for four touchdowns in only his third start.

"We still have a good chance at getting into the playoffs."

Even Dallas, a 27-14 loser to Tennessee on Thanksgiving, remains in that race.

The AFC East isn't any less uncertain. Buffalo's 20-10 decision against the Jets dropped front-running New York into a tie with Miami and New England, all at 8-5.

The Dolphins won for the first time in nine tries at Oakland, 34-16, and the Patriots took the Colts 20-17.

"That was a big win for us. We've had problems out here," Miami quarterback Dan Marino said. "The most important thing now is for us to win the division."

Tampa's win kept it viable in the NFC Central race, where it trails Green Bay by a half game and leads Minnesota by that margin, heading into Monday night's Packers-Vikings game at Minneapolis.

Pittsburgh and Jacksonville stayed tied in front of the AFC Central at 9-4 with tight wins. The Steelers edged Arizona 26-20 in overtime, while the Jaguars beat Baltimore 29-27.

Both Tennessee and Detroit, which also won on Thanksgiving, 55-20 over Chicago, are 7-6 and in the thick of the wild-card chases.

Also Sunday, it was Atlanta 24, Seattle 17 and New Orleans 16, Carolina 13.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

AUSTIN, Texas — John Mackovic's six-year run at Texas ended Saturday when he was fired and reassigned within the athletic program.

The move came a day after a 27-16 loss at Texas A&M that left the Longhorns 4-7 — tying the school's worst record in the last 41 years.

Mackovic, who led Texas to the 1996 Big 12 title, has three years left on a guaranteed contract at roughly $600,000 per year. He was 41-28-2 at Texas.

GOLF

LA QUINTA, Calif. — Tom Lehman won the Skins Game, earning $170,000 on Sunday for a two-day total of $300,000.

Lehman birdied seven of the final nine holes, taking two skins on No. 11, and winning single skins on Nos. 12, 13 and 17. He finished with a Skins record 10 birdies and no bogeys for a 61.

Mark O'Meara earned $240,000, including $100,000 on the first playoff hole. Tiger Woods was shut out Sunday after winning $60,000 Saturday. David Duval, a late replacement for Fred Couples, did not win any money. Couples withdrew to be with his father, Tom Couples, who died Thursday.

HOCKEY

KANATA, Ontario — Wayne Gretzky was selected for the Canadian Olympic team, while Mark Messier was left off the 23-man squad announced Saturday by Philadelphia general manager Bob Clarke.

Gretzky will be joined in Nagano, Japan, by forwards Eric Lindros, Steve Yzerman, Brendan Shanahan, Joe Sakic, Rod Brind'Amour, Shayne Corson, Theo Fleury, Paul Kariya, Trevor Linden, Joe Nieuwendyk, Keith Primeau and Rob Zamuner; defensemen Rob Blake, Ray Bourque, Eric Desjardins, Adam Foote, Al MacInnis, Chris Pronger and Scott Stevens; and goalies Martin Brodeur, Curtis Joseph and Patrick Roy.

BASKETBALL

Duke, impressive in its run through the Maui Invitational, vaulted over Kansas and into the No. 1 spot in the AP college poll.

Duke (5-0), which beat then-No. 1 Arizona in the Maui final, received 31 first-place votes and 1,695 points from the media panel. Kansas (6-0), which won the Preseason NIT, held second with 28 No. 1 votes and 1,678 points.

North Carolina (6-0), the champions of the Great Alaska Shootout, moved up one spot to third. Arizona is fourth, and South Carolina is fifth.

BUSINESS

NEW YORK — Michael Jordan is the richest athlete in the world, regaining the top spot in the Forbes list for the fifth time in six years.

Jordan will earn $78.3 million in 1997, getting $31.3 million from the Chicago Bulls and $47 million from endorsements and other income. Heavyweight champion Evander Holyfield was second at $54.3 million, followed by boxer Oscar De La Hoya ($38 million), Formula One driver Michael Schumacher ($35 million), boxer Mike Tyson ($27 million) and Tiger Woods ($26.1 million).

DISNEY'S 'Flubber' falls flat

STORY BY MARY RENEE SMITH
PHOTOS COURTESY OF ILM

Movie Review

John Hughes, Robin Williams, millions of dollars in special effects, a classic story and Disney. The combination could have made for an entertaining holiday film, but it doesn't.

"Flubber" is a feeble attempt at modernizing the 1961 Disney movie "The Absent Minded Professor." The story line is vaguely the same: an absent-minded professor invents a rubbery substance called Flubber. But the 1961 version had a plot and good acting. "Flubber" has the audience wondering when the real plot is going to begin, right up until the end of the movie.

Sure, there is a bizarre romantic triangle among the professor, his computer pal with artificial intelligence and the dean of a small college in financial trouble. There is a revengeful student, an evil rich man and a shifty ex-partner of the professor all with little stories of their own. Any one of those plots could have been developed into a good movie. Instead, "Flubber" crams them all into one bad film. None of the story lines ever takes the forefront, and when they are vaguely tied together in the end, it comes as no surprise.

It takes just a few moments to pick out Hughes' typical physical humor. There are plenty of grown men slipping and falling, their legs flying completely out from under them, followed by the landing on the back and the canned groan. There is the pair of dim-witted bad guys. There are even a few bowling balls to the head — reminiscent of another Hughes movie, "Home Alone."

Robin Williams' performance is disappointing, his trademark zaniness confined by the role of a preoccupied scholar. In too many scenes Williams milks the stereotypical "Disney moment of emotion" for longer than the typical movie-goer has the stomach for. The professor's computer dies, and there is what is supposed to be a heart-wrenching death-bed scene between Williams and a chunk of yellow metal.

The special effects are fun to watch, even if they are just put in the film for that reason. The effects of the Flubber never seem to tie in with the alleged plot. There is an elaborate Flubber dance number with a snappy tune you can dance to, but it is completely irrelevant to the rest of the movie.

"Flubber" hit movie theaters on Thanksgiving. In Disney style, "Flubber" stuff hit McDonalds, toy stores and every other marketing channel imaginable a few weeks before that. Unfortunately, the "Flubber" multimedia CD-ROM press kit sent out by Disney is more exciting, funny and entertaining than the movie.

3 Manhattan-area art venues have shows dedicated to artists from Kansas

Art Review

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

It's a good time to be a Kansas artist.

Three prominent art venues in the Manhattan area — the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, Strecker Gallery and Wamego's Columbian Theatre — all have shows dedicated to artists from the Sunflower State.

William Dickerson, a Wichita artist who died in 1972, is at the Beach art museum. Dean Mitchell, an Overland Park artist, is at Strecker. And James Munce, an associate professor of art at K-State and a local favorite, is showing a large collection of lithographs, etchings and drawings at the Columbian.

See it for yourself
"Markings," featuring work by James Munce and Ron Hinton, will be at the Columbian Theatre in Wamego until Jan. 4. Munce will be present on Dec. 10 from 1 to 2 p.m. to talk about his work. A $3 donation is requested for coffee and refreshments. Call 456-2029 for more information.

Munce is also showing with Ron Hinton, a sculptor from Lawrence, in the show "Markings," which is on display until Jan. 4. The two artists complement each other nicely, as both at least begin their process with copper plates — Munce as a printmaker and Hinton as a sculptor.

This is perhaps the most comprehensive showing of Munce's work in the area for some time. It includes a complete set of his extraordinary St. Francis Restores the Neglected Church series (dating to the early 1990s) among selections from the Wedding at Cana and Conservatory series, the latter dating to the late 1970s.

The work is on loan from the Strecker Gallery, which represents the artist and always has a few of his works up. Nearly all of the Columbian works are offered for sale and more prints can be ordered from Strecker.

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian
"ST. HELENS' SLIDE" is a sculpture made of etched bronze by Ron Hinton. The sculpture, which was created for this show, symbolizes the slide of Mount St. Helens that resulted from the May 18, 1980, eruption.

Munce's work is characterized by rich detail and subtle irony. In the St. Francis print cycle, every other print number is a colored etching. In print IX, "Pipe and Bellows Work," St. Francis is seen underneath a pipe organ as if it were some sort of car. He lies within reach of a power saw, duct tape and a power drill — not the sort of thing one expects. In another print, a styrofoam burger container is swept up off the floor of the church.

This wit has always been evident in Munce's work. In the artist's accompanying statement, Munce writes he's primarily a storyteller, but is also quite interested in a "sense of space that has somehow been altered or transformed by an event." That's particularly true of the St. Francis series, where the Gothic arches and buttresses of the church seemingly reveal a spirituality while the inclusion of contemporary details suggests an environmental message.

With the privilege of seeing the majority of his work in one room, one can't help noticing how the artist is a master of line and composition, bringing expressive figures — both humans and animals — together with apparent ease.

In the raucous "Pandora — Box, Jar or What?," a 1995 pen drawing, a roomful of period characters culled from the ages argue about the meaning of Pandora. There's so much going on, but in the lower right-hand center, an older woman sits in a chair with her leg kicked out looking bemused as a dog (presumably the artist's own) is looking somewhat confused. Other artists would be so lucky for even this sumptuous little detail.

The sculptor Hinton finds inspiration with the Russian constructivists, a group of early 20th-Century architects who have had enormous appeal to the so-called deconstructivist architects of the contemporary scene. Hinton's sculptures are jagged bronze conglomerations usually highlighted by photographs photo-etched onto the bronze.

"St. Helen's Slide," an etched bronze wall piece from 1997, is detailed with photo imagery of a map of Mount St. Helens splayed against tensely bent bronze forms. The concepts of the passage of time and the destructive qualities of nature are summoned with the delicate greenish aging of bronze.

Out of all the shows of Kansas artists now in the area, Hinton is the only one whose work departs from pure representation, but that's the difference between two- and three-dimensional work.

But when the questionable abstraction of some of the student work in upcoming bachelor of fine arts shows turns you cold, know you can turn for warmth to the rich work of Munce, Hinton and the other Kansas artists who get it right every time.

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian
"THE WEDDING AT CANA-DANCING" is a lithograph by James Munce. The piece was created in 1993.

The response to advance sales, he said, is proof that K-State fans deserve a high bowl preference.

"The amount of fans that you bring in to stay in their hotels, and eat in their restaurants, and spend money in their town is incredible, and there's not another school that compares to us. We hope that will play in our favor when it comes down to judgment day," Cavello said.

That judgment day — Sunday — will end the speculation about this year's bowl bid with the official announcement. But those who doubt whether K-State could take a large group of fans to the Fiesta Bowl instead of the Cotton Bowl should pay attention to ticket sales, Cavello said.

"There are still some naysayers out there. They say that we only had so many fans at the Cotton Bowl last year because it was so close. But they don't understand the passion that goes with being a Wildcat fan," he said.

"The volume that we've had so far proves that (last year's Cotton Bowl support) wasn't an aberration. It wasn't just a blip on the screen. This is a true testimony to the support of our Wildcat fans," Cavello said.

Though calls to the athletic department numbered in the thousands, Shafer said it wasn't a slow day at the Alumni Association, either. Operators fielded countless orders for travel packages as well as price inquiries and other questions.

"The first day we have a lot of people calling to check prices and to find out what the packages are. Then they'll call back later and make reservations," Shafer said.

The association has developed travel plans for the Cotton and Fiesta bowls. Shafer said customers can order a package for both bowls; orders will be filled after the official announcement.

The packages include options for air travel, economy or deluxe hotel accommodations, and the number of hotel-room occupants. Standard with every package is a game ticket, pregame ticket, and bus transfers to the pep rally, pregame party and game, Shafer said.

Prices for the packages range from $381 to $989 per person.

Cavello said the number of tickets sold this week will affect bowl selection.

"We'd be remiss if we didn't pass that information on to those people that make the bowl selections," he said.

Once K-State sells its allotment of tickets for either bowl game, the school will have to return to the bowl in question to request more tickets. Last season, K-State had sold its Cotton Bowl allotment the Thursday after the bid announcement.

THE BOWL DECISION WILL ARRIVE.

Look for the story the day after it happens.

Then wait for the special section.

in the lobby Monday. "And he was, like, 'I can't believe I'd do this.' Because he shot one of his friends who was just a few feet away."

After the shooting, blood was spattered through the lobby of the 600-student school, and the victims' books and clothing were strewn about.

The student was charged as a juvenile with murder, attempted murder and burglary. The prosecutor will seek to have him charged as an adult.

The principal described him as an intelligent young man who had had some minor problems but had never been suspended from school.

The sheriff said the teen stole the pistol and at least some of the other guns in a burglary Thanksgiving Day. The owner of the guns didn't realize they were missing until deputies contacted him after the shootings.

The principal credited Strong with preventing more bloodshed.

"He didn't run. He just stood and talked to him," Bond said. "He's the one who told him to stop, stop. He's the one who had the courage."

Reno rejects independent counsels for Clinton, Gore, O'Leary

▶ ATTORNEY GENERAL says decision based on law, not political pressure.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Attorney General Janet Reno declined Tuesday to seek an independent counsel investigation of telephone fund raising by President Clinton and Vice President Al Gore, saying their actions were outside the scope of federal election law.

Under strong pressures for months from all sides, Reno said, "The decision was mine and it was based on the facts and the law, not pressure, politics or any other factor."

Republicans criticized her decision as wrong and perhaps affected by loyalty to the White House. Democrats called it correct and courageous.

She also rejected a special prosecutor to investigate former Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary, concluding that O'Leary was unaware that a contribution to one of her favorite charities might have been solicited in return for her meeting Chinese business executives.

Reno

In her explanation, Reno said Clinton's fund-raising calls in October 1994 were made from the White House private quarters, not the president's offices. "This places the calls outside the scope ... of (federal election law) which applies only to solicitations for hard-money contributions occurring within the federal workplace," she wrote.

Reno said in a news conference that her campaign finance task force continues to investigate Democratic fund-raising practices that — without Gore's knowledge — diverted some of the money he raised into questionable accounts. And she said the department would continue investigating others involved in the O'Leary incident.

Gore

And she promised to seek a special counsel if these or other continuing inquiries implicate Clinton or other top officials.

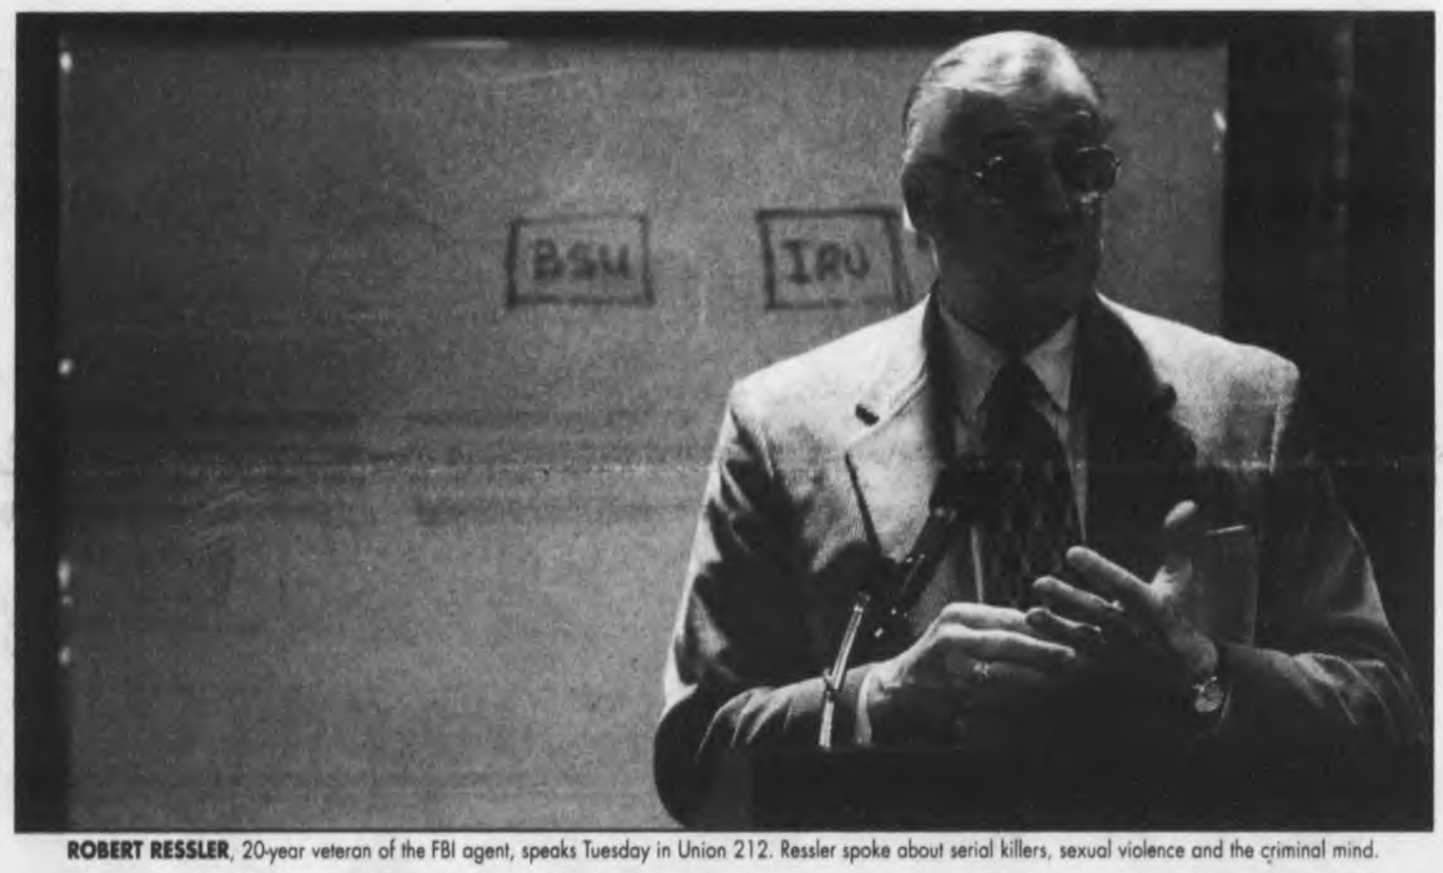
Rejecting a dissent from FBI Director Louis J. Freeh, Reno went right to the deadline before making her long-expected decisions. "He and I may not always agree, but the decision is mine," Reno said.

Freeh

Republicans, who had predicted Reno's refusal, denounced her as viewing the campaign finance affair and the law too narrowly. Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind., who chairs a House committee investigating campaign funding, said he would call Reno and Freeh to a hearing Tuesday.

Senate GOP leader Trent Lott called Reno's decision a tragedy. Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, said she had acted courageously despite "tremendous political pressure" from Republicans.

The telephone fund-raising inquiry was pushed into the spotlight by demands from Republicans on Capitol Hill, newspaper disclosures and the timetables set by the independent counsel law. It led to questioning of Clinton and Gore by Justice Department lawyers and FBI agents.



But it was always just part of a broader investigation by 120 Justice Department lawyers and FBI agents into numerous campaign fund-raising transactions and figures.

That investigation encompasses possible Chinese and other foreign donations, use of the White House as a fund-raising tool, and Democratic Party efforts that went beyond spending limits. Some Republicans, including Burton, also are under scrutiny.

This broader investigation continues, and indictments of at least two Democratic fund-raisers for concealing the identities of real donors are expected later this month. Justice officials have emphasized that if any of these inquiries produce evidence of possible felonies by Clinton or top administration figures, Reno will seek an independent counsel.

And Reno must decide by Dec. 15 whether further investigation is needed into what role, if any, Clinton and some top aides played in the Interior Department's denial of an American Indian casino that was opposed by other

Robert Ressler, 20-year veteran of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, spoke about his work with some of the world's most infamous murderers and violent crimes of the 20th century before a packed house in Union Forum Hall on Tuesday.

Ressler, a Michigan State graduate, has studied personalities such as Charles Manson, John List and Charles Whitman.

"Serial killers are not like the suspicious characters that most people would think," Ressler said. "They are more like your everyday guy-next-door."

Ressler, who said he coined the phrase serial killer, started to see a clear trend of multiple violent crimes around 1975. After that, it was a clear pattern.

Ressler said in his first study of 36 sexual killers from 20 state prisons, seven killed one victim, 29 killed multiple victims, there were a total of 118 convictions and the possibility of 200-250 unknown victims.

"Nowadays this would not be considered a study," he said. "A lot more murderers would have to be observed to be even considered."

"I enjoy doing these studies with these types of people," he said. "I like to talk to them without the benefit of security. I think it makes them more willing to talk."

Ressler asked if there were any artists or future dentists in the crowd. He said these professions have a future with the FBI.

"We have solved many crimes on teeth marks and re-creations of faces with dummies and skulls," he said.

Ressler said that with the help of artist Frank Binder they solved a murder and captured the man who did it 17 years after the crime.

"We took old photographs of the murderer, John List, and made a dummy of him of what he would look like 20 years later," he said. "We looked up some family history, made the dummy and it was seen on national television and he was caught a few days later."

Ressler's work also inspired the movie and book "Silence of the Lambs."

"I actually did the script reviews for that movie," Ressler said. "I wanted to make Jodi Foster an agent instead of a trainee, but Hollywood likes an underdog. This way it would have been more realistic."

Ressler innovated many of the programs that led to the formation of the Bureau's National Center for the Analysis of Violent Crime, which is at the FBI Academy in Quantico, Va. It

Kentucky students mourn classmates, return to classes

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WEST PADUCAH, Ky. — A day after three students were shot to death at the end of a prayer meeting, their classmates returned to the same halls Tuesday to mourn, lay flowers and silently pray again.

Even though the memories and the pain of the rampage were still fresh, Heath High School Principal Bill Bond said it was important to go back to classes to show "we can't let one mixed-up person destroy our society."

"If someone believes in anarchy and we let that anarchy control us, then he is in control of us," Bond said. "I don't believe in letting someone control me, so we will go about our business."

But the day was anything but normal. Students, many in tears, walked in groups and clung to each other for hugs and support. They prayed for the three friends who 24 hours earlier were shot to death just as their heads were similarly bowed and they uttered their last words — "amen." Five other students were hurt. Three remain hospitalized.

Counselors spent the morning talking with students, and teachers did their best to hold regular classes in the afternoon.

"There was very little being said. It was mainly quiet and kids praying," guidance counselor Allan Warford said. "It's a very somber scene inside. ... We're going to be looking at long-term counseling for some of these students."

Meantime, 14-year-old suspect Michael Carneal was moved to a juvenile center. Classmates said the attorney's son would sometimes show up before classes to mock the daily prayer group.

On Monday, witnesses said he put in ear plugs and sprayed the hallway with semiautomatic pistol fire. The teen-ager faces juvenile charges of murder, attempted murder and burglary for allegedly stealing the gun used in the attack.

Carneal's parents told their minister, the Rev. Paul Donner, they were stunned and couldn't explain what might have motivated their son to shoot the other students, who included some of his own closest friends. The family declined to talk with reporters.

"They really feel very deeply for the whole community and the other families," said Donner, who baptized the boy as an infant at St. Paul's Lutheran Church. "Absolutely, they have no idea."

Inside school Tuesday, a student described as a hero for persuading the suspect to drop his gun led another

Kansas pastor's relative killed in shootings

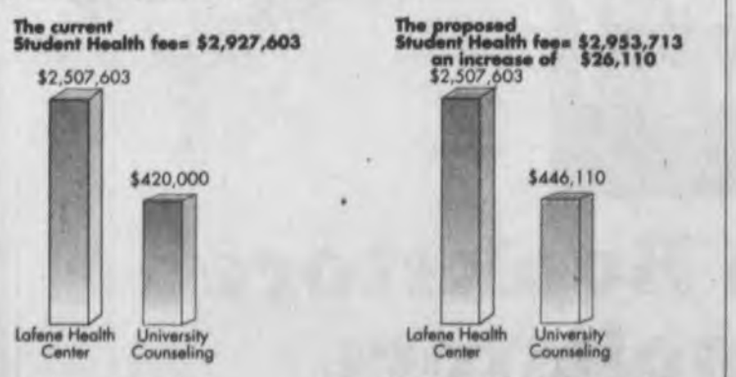
WICHITA — A Wichita pastor's granddaughter was among the three teen-agers killed when a fellow student opened fire at a Kentucky high school.

Nicole Hadley, 14, died Monday after she was shot in the hallway of a West Paducah, Ky., high school. Immediately after the shooting, authorities arrested a 14-year-old freshman identified by his friends as Michael Carneal, a self-professed atheist who would sometimes mock the prayer group but who was not considered a danger.



The Wichita Eagle reported Tuesday that Hadley's grandfather is the Rev. Chuck Hadley, pastor of Grace United Methodist Church in Wichita. A woman at the church told The Associated Press that Hadley was in Kentucky and unavailable for an interview.

CHECKING THE PULSE AT LAFENE HEALTH CENTER

STORY BY TRAVIS D. LENKNER

Proposed increase in health costs

In the past two years the Student Health Fee has funded both the Lafene Student Health Center and University Counseling Services. A propsal by Student Senate calls for the fee to only fund Lafene for the next two years. The following shows the proposed increase.

Alternative funding proposed for student health

Confronted with rising health-care costs, Lafene Health Center Director Lannie Zweimiller proposed a 10-percent increase in the Student Health Privilege Fee for the next two fiscal years.

Now he's looking at an increase in funds, but not in the form of higher student fees.

After weeks of review, the Privilege Fee Committee approved legislation Monday that would maintain the current fee level but charge students $5 per visit with a medical professional to make up for financial shortfalls.

The legislation still needs final approval from Student Senate.

The new visit charge would apply to students' consultations with any medical staff member at the facility. Projected revenue from the fee could be as high as $133,000 per year, Zweimiller said.

Both administrators and student leaders have called the proposal for a Lafene user fee a "major change in philosophy." But opinions are mixed on whether the change is a positive one.

Privilege Fee Committee member Bret Glendening said the push to charge students for their office visits is to keep the entire student body from paying for increased costs in a service that not all students use.

"There's some obvious evidence that it's very advantageous to at least try to move in this direction rather than just always asking the entire student body to pay for budget increases," Glendening said.

But Assistant Vice President of Institutional Advancement Mike Lynch said asking students to pay for their office visits on top of the privilege fee could cause financial hardships.

Lynch said the idea of the privilege fee has always been to have students pay for services at the beginning of the semester when they are most likely to have funds available.

"There will be some members of the student body — I think more than some people may suspect — for whom early on, money may not be a problem," Lynch said. "But at this time of the semester, there will be a substantial population of our student body that does not have the $5 to spend on the doctor's appointment and will opt not to."

However, Lafene Medical Director Guy Smith said students might not ignore their illnesses just because of the new charge.

"We've never tried it before, so any answer we give is a guess," Smith said. "But my experience is that most people have significant reasons for coming over here so I don't anticipate that they would not come ... if there's

Lawyer who claims to have lost $95,000 at riverboats files suit

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Guided by a recent state Supreme Court decision that said some casinos are operating illegally, a Kansas City, Mo., lawyer has filed a federal lawsuit that seeks his and other gamblers' money back.

Lawyer and plaintiff Stephen B. Small, who claims he has lost more than $95,000 on the boats since 1994, filed the claim late Friday in federal court in Kansas City.

Defendants are Harrah's in North Kansas City, the Argosy in Riverside, and Station Casino and the Flamingo Hilton in Kansas City, Mo.

One of the counts alleges a racketeering conspiracy under federal criminal statutes that seeks to close the casinos permanently.

If successful, Small proposes the court name him as administrator of a special fund that would be established with casino revenues to pay back "persons who conveyed money ... in unlawful gambling games of chance" at the four Kansas City, Mo.-area boats.

Woman pleads guilty to death of fetus for smoking crack cocaine

COLUMBIA, S.C. — A woman charged with killing her fetus because she smoked crack cocaine, the first to face a murder charge under a landmark South Carolina court ruling, pleaded guilty Tuesday to involuntary manslaughter.

Talitha Renee Garrick, 27, was given a three-year suspended prison sentence. In return for her plea, prosecutors had dropped a charge of murder by child abuse.

Garrick had faced a maximum of five years in prison, public defender Frank Draper said.

South Carolina's Supreme Court was the first appellate court in the nation to allow prosecutions of pregnant women who take drugs, ruling in July 1996 that a pregnant woman could be criminally liable for actions that endanger the health of a viable fetus.

Garrick was 38 weeks pregnant with her fourth child when she called paramedics on June 6, 1995, complaining of abdominal pain and cramps. Prosecutors said she told paramedics and doctors she had smoked crack an hour or two earlier.

State has 2,000 unclaimed checks

TOPEKA — Need a little extra cash for the holiday season this year?

The Kansas Department of Revenue might have the solution — about 2,000 unclaimed tax refund checks.

The state tax agency said Monday that many refund checks were returned because they couldn't be delivered. The checks range from $5 to $3,000. The average check is $120, and some date back to February.

Taxpayers expecting refunds for their 1996 taxes but haven't yet received them should call (785) 296-3051, and be ready to give their full name, Social Security number and current address.

City residents experience outage

More than 600 Manhattan residents were without power for about an hour Tuesday evening.

The power outage affected houses and businesses in the Third Street area north of Bluemont Avenue, Stacy Kohlmeier, KPL operations manager, said.

"A service pole near Bluemont Elementary school had a lightning arrester that went bad and caused a fault. That was the source of the problem," Kohlmeier said.

Kohlmeier said all the lost power had been restored within an hour, with the exception of the elementary school.

Club to build helium-filled balloon for open house

Institute looking for prospective members to help with balloon, remote airplane projects

MEMBERS OF K-State's American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics are, from left, Mike Grimm, senior in mechanical engineering; Mario Dippolito, sophomore in mechanical engineering; Jeevan Padiyar, senior in chemistry, biochemistry and pre-medicine; and Jeff Grant, junior in mechanical engineering. The club was working on a remote control airplane Tuesday night in Durland Hall.

K-State's American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics organization is looking for students who want to get hands-on experience.

The organization had an informational meeting about two of its projects Tuesday. Members are working on a remote control airplane and a new project, an indoor helium air balloon.

This is the second year the club has participated in the remote control airplane event, Jeevan Padiyar, senior in chemistry, biochemistry, pre-medicine and president of the club, said. Competition will be this spring in Wichita.

Because of time constraints, members are using a kit to build this year's airplane. The plane must be made to handle 10 pounds while circling a track. The score is based on the number of laps the plane will do. A written report is the other portion of the competition.

This year's big project, the helium air balloon, is being constructed for the All-University Open House in April.

Danny White, senior in electrical engineering, said he came up with the idea of the balloon.

He said the main reason for the balloon project was to set up a video camera connected to the balloon and project activities during open house onto a TV screen. Visitors will be able to have a better view of events through the big crowds.

"I talked to some electrical engineering professors. They had talked about it, but nobody had done it," White said.

Besides using the balloon for open house, the club will use it during Engineering Day at Manhattan Town Center and to advertise other university functions, Padiyar said.

Except for some electrical work, Padiyar said the balloon would be made from scratch. Members will begin construction next semester.

"We're looking forward to working on this," Padiyar said. "This is one of our most exciting projects because of the exposure it can give us."

He said the organization is looking for more members to help with the projects and to take over the organization when other members graduate.

The organization meets at 7 p.m. the first Tuesday of every month in Durland Hall. Members also work on projects at 1 p.m. each Sunday in the mechanical engineering shop in Seaton Hall.

"The whole organization is centered around having fun even though we are learning stuff at the same time," Padiyar said. "Without having fun there is no point."

City commissioners voice concern about community service agencies

JENNI EVANS
staff reporter

The Manhattan City Commission accepted the annual report as presented by the Social Services Advisory Board on Tuesday night. The annual report helps commissioners see the benefits and activities of the board's social service agencies.

Aaron Otto, chair of the social services advisory board, presented an overview of the services funded by the city for the 1997 fiscal year.

Commissioners voiced concern about several of the agencies, including the quality of services offered through the TAXI program, a senior citizen taxi service, and the funding of the Crisis Center, a program for victims of domestic abuse.

"I am very concerned about these issues, especially those directly related to the emergency shelter," Commissioner Roger Reitz said.

Commissioners were also presented with an ordinance that would establish the 1998 salary ranges for city employees.

The 1998 Salary Ordinance and Pay Plan will allow for a 3-percent increase in established pay grades and salary ranges for exempt and non-exempt classified positions.

"I want to express our appreciation as a commission for the work done by all of our city employees by providing services not only for us, but for all citizens," Mayor Bruce Snead said.

In other business, the commission authorized the soliciting of professional services from a planning and engineering firm for Manhattan Regional Airport improvement projects.

Airport Director Kenneth Black explained that well-planned and well-packaged projects are most successful.

Black said the planning and preparation by a strong team of airport planners and engineers are essential for the success of the Manhattan Regional Airport.

BSU planning spring activities

KERRY BOYDSTON
staff reporter

Members of the Black Student Union made plans to attend the 21st-Annual Big 12 Conference on Black Student Government at their general meeting Tuesday night.

"This conference is really hype," Colette McLemore, BSU president, said. "This will be a great conference for our members to attend."

The conference, which is sponsored by the University of Nebraska Afrikan People's Union, will be Feb. 19-22 in Lincoln, Neb. According to its registration form, the conference's purpose is to build leadership and communication skills, promote academic success and political awareness and reinforce the educational and cultural development of young, aspiring black students.

McLemore said this year's theme is "Black Love ... Restoring the Essence of the Black Family."

"There will be speakers, poetry readings, a career and graduate fair, step show and even a gospel extravaganza," she said. "The theme will be carried out throughout the conference and we want members from BSU to experience this."

The conference also will address problems, concerns and ideas of black students attending predominantly white colleges and universities.

McLemore said she has only one expectation from K-State BSU members who want to attend the conference.

"We want those who go to have attended at least three BSU general meetings. Our early registration is due by Dec. 19, and I encourage everyone to register before this date because it will save members $10," she said.

BSU members also announced club activities for next semester.

"We are putting together a resource workshop for incoming freshmen to help them familiarize themselves with the campus and community," Mikail Abdel-Khaliq, sophomore in business, said. "We are going to organize a tour of Manhattan so we can introduce them to the community because a lot of us are not from here."

A Black History Month trivia competition, and bowling, movie and study nights are also upcoming BSU activities.

"All of these activities help keep us unified, and we need to keep making that stronger," Abdel-Khaliq said.

Lafene should institute charges for office visits

Students who use Lafene Health Center might have to pay a little extra money next fall, but that's better than the alternative.

Even though Lafene needs more money to operate because of rising health care costs, the Privilege Fee Committee recommended that the Student Health Privilege Fee remain at its current level.

If the fee is approved by Student Senate, Lafene will institute a $5 office-visit charge. It would turn to the students who actually use its services for the additional funding it needs.

Had this change not been introduced, every K-State student would be paying more fee money toLafene.

Lafene should be able to maintain its high standards, but a fee raise across the board is not the solution.

Lafene found an alternative way to fund itself, and it should continue to look for ways to fund itself without taking money out of the pocket of all students.

And not all students go to Lafene.

According to the Student Health Advisory Committee, 12,317 students visited Lafene. SHAC members are concerned that number will drop if there is an office charge.

But a $5 office charge should not prevent students from going to Lafene when they're sick. It doesn't even begin to compare to an office charge in the private sector.

And if the change is approved, students shouldn't wait until they are too sick for Lafene to help them.

Student Senate should pass the privilege fee because it is consistent with what students want as shown by the KSU Stadium expansion referendum results.

The results showed students don't want to pay more for services they don't use. The results showed students don't want to pay more money in privilege fees.

It's good that the Privilege Fee Committee recognized this trend. We hope, Senate will recognize this trend and approve the fee as is.

MEET THE NEW GETTY CENTER

VIEWPOINT

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

RUSSELL FORTMEYER is a senior in architectural engineering. You can send e-mail to Russell at rmf@ksu.edu.

Considering that the United States' large arts institutions, namely museums, were established by Guild Age millionaires around the turn of the century, the new Los Angeles-based, $1 billion Getty Center seems a remarkable feat.

When the center opens its doors to Los Angeles on Dec. 16, it will be a landmark event for the City of Angels. Sitting on a Brentwood hilltop — yes, that Brentwood — the Getty commands the west side of the city with downtown to ocean views.

At night, the Getty's six prominent buildings combine to glow like a lighthouse for art. It's an art acropolis, as some have called it, that has been hailed as a high cultural addition to a town that seems to embody all that is low.

The Getty has officially been around since the 1970s with the construction of the J. Paul Getty Museum in Malibu, Calif. That Getty museum was built to resemble an ancient Roman villa and housed a moderate collection of antiquities, Renaissance paintings and 19th-century art. Both the old museum and the new were endowed by J. Paul Getty with what amounts to a $4.8 billion endowment.

This money, which makes the Getty the richest museum in the world, has allowed it to expand its art collection. The Getty does not collect work made after 1900. The old museum will now only house antiquities, while the Getty Center will expand its holdings, which is beginning to include an impressive photography collection.

Art critics have long written off the museum as having a paltry art collection with only a few standout pieces and not remotely canonical. True, but the Getty has never sold itself as New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art or the Louvre. Its new headquarters and its vast interests and financial capabilities make it important as a public resource.

The Getty has the funds to help countries such as Egypt restore and preserve ancient temples in exchange for the chance for scholarship and exhibitions to accompany the projects. This has been done with great success in the past, but little was made of it because of the Getty's relatively low profile in the arts community.

The Getty Center, on the other hand, suddenly thrusts the institution onto a world stage and gives the Getty a public profile outside of the realm of arts institutions.

Designed by architect Richard Meier, who designed Atlanta's High Museum of Art, and in various stages of construction for more than a decade, the Getty is no conventional museum. Its functions — a conservation institute, public auditorium, education institute, foundation, the museum and a research institute — are arranged in separate buildings, similar to an Italian hill town. They are joined by public space with those marvelous views and gardens by the noted landscape artist Robert Irwin.

Just to reach the museum, one must park in the requisite Los Angeles underground garage and ride a light rail system to the top. From this vantage point, or even from the San Diego Freeway that darts below the Getty, one can only partially begin to admire the hillside upon hillside of new landscaping and endless travertine walls.

Although I've yet to visit the Getty, practically every media outlet in the country has lavished attention on the complex. Most writers have concluded the Getty is somewhat of a contradiction — a 19th-century institution housed in a modernist superstructure with a staff looking keenly to the future.

The purity of Meier's modernism contrasts with the sprawling city below. The Getty, like nearly all of Meier's signature buildings, is all white walls and geometrical abstractions, with heavy influence from the modernist master Le Corbusier, who died in 1965. This incarnation, however, uses a dusty limestone, travertine, in place of Meier's usual white steel panels in response to Brentwood residents' requests.

Whether the Getty will meet its mission of being a community and international center for art remains to be seen. The project has been criticized for its choice of site. Instead of adding a public arts institution to the streets of the city, which would surely have been much more accessible, the Getty is isolated like so many Brentwood mansions.

Los Angeles Times architecture critic Nicolai Ouroussoff wrote about the Getty in Monday's Times as some sort of sanctuary, a place for the public to simultaneously contemplate art and the city while enjoying the light-flooded architecture and stylized gardens. He writes the Getty "seeks to civilize the city's sprawl" and "expresses a different view of what the city could become."

Truthfully, the Getty, which does not charge admission, is much like another Los Angeles institution — Disneyland. It's a day-long destination visible from the freeway that you can't just drop in on unplanned. It doesn't so much as fit into its site as it defines it anew. In that, the Getty is sprawl. For the Getty to be accessible, it should tie into the city's newborn subway system, thereby opening its doors to the downtrodden east side of the city.

Ouroussoff's different view has a few tests to pass before a real grade can be given. As architecture, the Getty isn't anything new from Meier. As an institution, it has easily secured an importance in the world. But as an integral Los Angeles arts center, the Getty has more hills to climb than the one it sits on.

DEATH should be last option for punishment

VIEWPOINT

KEVIN BAILEY

KEVIN BAILEY is a senior in elementary education. You can send your e-mail comments to Kevin at kevinsb@ksu.edu.

The realization of what was happening swept over the man, as he ate the last few bites of his T-bone steak.

He was going to die. In less than 30 minutes.

The last bite of steak seemed to have lodged somewhere in his chest. That discomfort was but fleetingly noticed as wave after wave of horror began to crash upon the shores of the man's mind.

"But, I'm human. Can they just kill me like this?"

"But, you killed first."

"Yes, but I'm human. I want to live."

The thoughts tumbled one upon another in the man's mind. How did this happen? A moment of anger? Cold, calculating murder? What had happened? How did he come to this place where he was now going to lose his own life?

"It's time."

The voice of the guard startled him. Had the guard's voice wavered? He couldn't be sure.

As he walked into the closed chamber, he called out loudly, "I'm human!"

After the mask was fitted over his face, he called out (less loudly this time), "I'm human!"

After the loud pop that told him the gas had been released into the chamber, he spoke more softly, "I'm human," then held his breath as long as he could.

When his lungs burnt so that he thought they would burst, he gasped out, "I'm hu-" He couldn't get the rest out.

His lungs pulled in a breath of the awful green gas. The burning. He was suffocating.

"I'm hu-"

"I'm uhh-"

Over and over — grunting, moaning — until finally, with a last tortured gasp, he was dead.

I am unsure what I believe about capital punishment.

On the one hand, the argument can be made that it is simply justice.

If people kill, they too are killed.

On the other hand, if you have ever watched someone die, you feel as if no one has the right to force death upon another. There must be some objective truth on the matter, it seems.

In a documentary titled "The Executioners" (A&E "Investigative Reports," Nov. 22), a study was cited that said around 80 percent of Americans are in favor of capital punishment. Does that mean death as a means of punishment is a just and fair solution?

I think not.

Just weeks ago, a man was executed in Missouri, to the horror of thousands of death penalty opponents around the world. Does their outrage show us this convicted murderer did not, in fact, deserve death?

Not at all.

At the heart of this debate, we find a larger issue — death itself.

Death is not a subject to be taken lightly. Nor should it be decided in the court of public opinion. What we must decide is not whether we are in favor of capital punishment. The issue at hand is whether we believe that one person ever has the right to take the life of another.

If the answer to the latter is yes, then there can be no opposition to capital punishment. For, if we believe that it is ever within one person's rights to take the life of another, then it follows that to take the life of a criminal could very well be within the rights of the state.

One defense of the death penalty is that it is to the state what self-defense is to the individual. If the individual is justified in causing another's death in an act of self-defense, then it would seem that the state (in a larger sense, of course) would be justified in taking the life of a known threat to society.

In my mind, it is hard to justify the taking of any person's life, for any reason. I could not, in good conscience, send another person over the edge of what we know as death. Even acting in self-defense, I would like to think if there were any other option besides killing, I would choose that option.

When looking at capital punishment in that light, it is quite easy to see there are far more options open to the state than the killing of the criminal.

In "On Crimes and Punishment," Cesare Beccaria argued long imprisonment was a more effective deterrent than capital punishment. His reasoning was that because death is a transient state, long prison terms were more effective in keeping future criminals from the same offense.

Whatever the reasoning, and whoever the culprit, one must remember the argument always returns to its basic component. Does one person ever have the right to take the life of another when there are other, very clear options open?

In the end, I must argue that the answer is no. As a person, if I find myself in a situation where defense of self or others requires use of deadly force, I will do so. However, as a political state, our government has many options open to it other than the use of such force.

I truly feel that of those options, the last considered should be death.

Increased scholarship opportunies proposed

Editor,

I would like to inform readers about increased scholarship opportunities that might be a possibility for Kansas students in the future.

The Student Tuition Assistance Recognition Scholarship program is a plan that has been proposed by the House minority leader and other House democrats in an attempt to subsidize rising tuition costs for Kansas students.

The state-funded program would provide a maximum of $1,200 in scholarship money per student per semester. Eligibility requirements would include maintaining a 3.0 grade point average and graduating from a Kansas high school.

Kansas House Minority Leader Tom Sawyer will be speaking about the STARS program at 4:30 p.m. Thursday in the Union Big 12 Room.

I would encourage anyone who is interested to attend this meeting.

Hospital misidentifies dead traffic accident victim

FRANKLIN, Tenn. — Kathy Getty was devastated when she was told her daughter had been critically injured in a traffic accident that killed the teenager's best friend.

Her anguish worsened four days later, when she learned the unconscious girl she had been sitting with was someone else's child and her daughter was dead.

Getty, a nurse, blames Vanderbilt University Medical Center for the mistake.

"I go in and see this child and pray for her and give her love and attention, and then four days later they tell me it's not my baby," she said Tuesday. "I have a live, comatose daughter, and then they shock the hell out of me by saying she's been dead. This is so horrible."

The hospital regrets the mixup but questions why Getty couldn't tell the injured girl was not her daughter.

"I'm being accused: 'You should have known that wasn't your daughter.' How can you know in a situation like this?" she asked. "I mean, hospitals don't get this kind of thing wrong.

"The only thing I thought was that her hair looked a little dark. You focus on what you're given and that's what I was given — hope and life."

The hospitalized girl is 14-year-old Tiffany Moshier, the best friend of Getty's 16-year-old daughter, also named Tiffany. Both were passengers in a pickup truck that collided with another truck on Nov. 26.

Members of the Moshier family, who had been planning their daughter's funeral, haven't spoken publicly since the mixup was confirmed Sunday.

The two teen-agers were among six people taken to the hospital after the crash. Two died and four were injured. A relative of the pickup driver incorrectly identified the girls for a police officer in the emergency room, said hospital spokesman John Houser.

The officer approved the release of what was believed to be Tiffany Moshier's body to the medical examiner's office, Houser said.

The medical examiner's office sent the body to Williamson Memorial Funeral Home, where owner Clyde Stephens said he urged the Moshier family not to look at the body until he could repair the disfigured face.

At the hospital, the real Tiffany Moshier was in intensive care and Kathy Getty was allowed to see her several times a day for about 15 minutes at a time.

The girl had a tube in her throat and a cervical collar around her neck. Her face was slightly swollen but recognizable, Houser said.

Tiffany Moshier is petite and dark-haired while Tiffany Getty was blond and several inches taller.

"We're puzzled as to why a proper identification couldn't be made," Houser said.

At the funeral home, the dead girl's clothing and jewelry were given to the Moshiers. On Friday, Giselle Moshier told Stephens the clothes were not her daughter's. Her husband saw the body the next day and agreed it was not his daughter.

On Sunday, the tube was removed from the injured girl's throat and she identified herself as Tiffany Moshier.

Kathy Getty was notified and went to the funeral home to identify her daughter's body.

"We undressed this baby and looked at all her boo-boos and all her broken bones, and it was horrible," Kathy Getty said. "But I got to touch my baby and talk to her for the first time. But she'd been dead and cold for days."

Online industry to report Internet child pornography

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON D.C. — Almost like cybercops, the online industry will report child pornography to law enforcement officials, Vice President Al Gore announced Tuesday at a conference on ways to make the Internet a safer place for America's children.

Roughly 10 million children now surf the Net.

Industry groups covering 95 percent of home Internet users will help enforce existing laws against child pornography, Gore said.

According to the policy, Internet providers would remove child pornography from their own bulletin boards and services, said Donna Rice Hughes, a spokeswoman for Enough Is Enough, an advocacy group trying to get child pornography off the World Wide Web.

Gore also talked about the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children's toll-free hotline to report incidents of child sexual exploitation online, including child pornography.

Together, these two initiatives will make a big difference in the ability of parents and law enforcers to work together to keep children safe on the Internet, Gore said.

"It is a warning to criminals and a promise to parents there are Internet police for those activities that are illegal, and they will capture and punish those who abuse the Internet to harm and hurt our children," Gore said.

The Justice Department was unable to say how many crimes against children occur over the Internet because it does not break out those figures from overall statistics, John Russell, a spokesman said. But the number of all child pornography cases filed in federal court increased by 129 percent in 1996, he said.

"The Internet is a faster, cheaper and safer way for child pornographers to move their product so the child pornographers are using it, as are pedophiles in search of their prey," said Raymond Kelly, an undersecretary at the Treasury Department, which also is involved in enforcing child pornography laws.

Even though he welcomed the industry's efforts to keep children away from smut on the Net, Gore warned the industry that it had better come up with ways to protect the privacy of children, shield them from exploitative marketing and provide them with more safe places to go online.

"If Internet sites for kids continue to feature advertising blurred into entertainment and targeted directly to children, parents may soon shut off the Internet," Gore said. "If there is not an effective industry-led solution, you might as well prepare yourself for a massive, nationwide backlash that will stunt the growth of this exciting resource."

Federal regulators, prompted by rising incidents reported by watchdog groups, are on the lookout for Web sites with exploitative and manipulative marketing to children.

Gore said the Commerce Department will have conferences on this and other issues next year.

Building on pledges made to President Clinton in July, industry groups discussed on Monday — the first day of a three-day conference — how to educate parents about anti-smut screening and how to highlight Internet sites that are clean enough for children.

In June, the Supreme Court struck down a law designed to keep cyberspace's seamy side away from children. It said the 1996 Communications Decency Act, in attempting to protect children from indecent material on the Internet, improperly restricted the free-speech rights of adults.

Robert Peters, president of Morality in Media, a group that wants to get illegal pornography off the Internet, called the conference a "public relations gimmick intended to saddle parents with an impossible burden and to discourage Congress from putting the primary responsibility on those who create harmful content."

▶ Need more info? Call the toll-free hotline for the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children at (800) 843-5678.

While Peters and others want mandatory government curbs, some civil liberties groups oppose the industry's voluntary ones on the grounds they restrict free speech.

"To them I say blocking your own child's access to objectionable Internet content is not censoring — that's called parenting," Gore said. "And a parent's right to block offensive speech is as fully protected by the First Amendment as the right to issue that speech."

Cats deserve shot at trash-talking Pac-10 crybabies

OK, it's time to get out the gloves.

And I'm not talking about the frigid December temperatures yet to come.

The trash-talking that sports media people along the Pacific Coast have been participating in is not only uninformed, but totally biased against any team east of the San Andreas fault line.

An article at The Sporting News Internet site (www.sportingnews.com — college football page — bowl analysis, for the curious) by Chris Dufresne of The Los Angeles Times discussed the possibility of No. 6 UCLA getting the shaft from the Alliance that BYU claimed to have gotten last season.

VIEWPOINT

SUN DEE MILLS

SUN DEE MILLS is a senior in electronic journalism. You can send your e-mail comments to Sun Dee at sundee@ksu.edu.

He then says the only similarity between the BYU situation and UCLA is the shafting part; this season's Bruins are much better than last year's Cougars.

This may or may not be true — this column is Dufresne's opinion, after all — but he goes on:

"Despite UCLA's loftier poll status, it is a virtual lock the Fiesta Bowl will take No. 11 Kansas State with the fourth pick, matching the Wildcats against Syracuse … No way Kansas State is better on the field than UCLA, but it's a lot better in the stands, a key component for a Fiesta Bowl desperately seeking a hearty live gate to dress up a less-than-desirable New Year's Eve time slot."

It is hard for me to believe sports fans on the West Coast demand that their cable operators pick up Fox Rocky Mountain sports and other regional broadcasts of the Cats. Unless the fans are K-State alumni.

Admittedly, I haven't spent a lot of time watching UCLA play on Saturdays. Although if I wanted to, it would be much easier for me to do so than it would be for a K-State fan to see a Cats game in California.

So exactly how familiar any Californian is with how these two teams would match up is a mystery to me. We can all look at the two teams and break down individual performances on both sides of the ball. If K-State does play UCLA in the Cotton Bowl, that will be done in depth on this page.

But to blindly profess that UCLA is the better team without any research is a desperate attempt to appease the Bruins' fans who will undoubtedly be upset if UCLA is left out of the Alliance picture.

While it thrills me to see that someone believes the Cats are a virtual lock for the Alliance, part of me secretly wishes there were a way to have my cake and eat it, too.

If the Cats could go to the Fiesta Bowl and play the Bruins, it'd be nice to see UCLA fanatics eat their words along with cake.

I'm not going to blindly say K-State would manhandle the Bruins. That would be irresponsible of me.

UCLA is a good team on a nine-game winning streak. Bruin quarterback Cade McNown is up for the Davey O'Brien National Quarterback award. Place kicker Chris Sailer is competing with the Cats' own Martin Gramatica for the Lou Groza National Place Kicker Award. Bruin tailback Skip Hicks is a nominee for the Doak Walker Award and a finalist for Football News' Offensive Player of the Year.

They don't just give these awards to anybody. Believe me, I've asked around. But a few great players do not a team make.

Examining the Bruins' schedule closely is a revealing experience. Their only two losses were close ones, and they came in games one and two against now No. 7 Washington State and No. 3 Tennessee. Yes, they played a tough non-conference schedule. Or did they?

Well, the Bruins played Tennessee. But their other two non-conference games were poundings against Texas, 66-3 (Hey, Baylor beat Texas), and Conference USA member Houston, 66-10.

So, although K-State earned the unofficial Mid-American Conference champion title in its preseason, UCLA belongs to the WAC-10, er, I mean the Pac-10, and hasn't played teams the caliber of No. 14 Texas A&M and No. 20 Missouri.

True, Stanford has been sporadically ranked throughout the season, and beating now No. 22 Washington Nov. 15 gives UCLA legitimacy. But Nebraska's earlier win over Washington on Sept. 20 proved the Huskies' No. 3 ranking was doomed from the start.

In my tenure at K-State, the Cats have never played a Pac-10 team. In fact, the last time the Cats saw Pac-10 action was in 1991, when the Huskies handed Coach Bill Snyder a 56-3 loss.

But this time, things would be different.

This 10-1 Cats team is undoubtedly one of the best to walk the K-State campus. And if the Cats are left out of the Alliance picture to meet UCLA in Dallas, I won't be that upset.

What kind of cake do you think the Bruin fans would prefer?

Injury leaves Cats short-handed against UMKC

JOEL WHITE
staff writer

When the Wildcats take their show on the road for the first time this season in tonight's game against the University of Missouri-Kansas City, the team might be without starting forward and leading rebounder Manny Dies.

Dies, who averaged eight rebounds and 13 points in the first three games, injured his left ankle with five minutes remaining against Mercer last Saturday.

"I wouldn't sense it's a bad sprain," Coach Tom Asbury said. "But I don't know if or how he'll play on Wednesday."

Asbury said the swelling in Dies' ankle was under control by Sunday.

Without Dies in the lineup, Asbury said the Cats' look will not be much different.

"Obviously, we've lost an inside presence, maybe our best post defender, but I think we're deep enough that we can sustain an injury," he said. "He's obviously a key guy, but I think we have a handful of key guys."

If Dies is not ready to go, Asbury said he will either start a forward in Ty Sims or Pero Vasiljevic, or a center in Joe Leonard. However, Asbury said he doesn't want to make the decision until he knows Dies' status.

"I haven't really decided yet," he said. "I don't want to give his job away before it's deemed he can't play."

With Dies' injury, the Cats will again showcase their depth. The Cats have six forwards who have played at least 15 minutes in a game this season.

The Cats' statistics are almost as evenly spread as their minutes played. A different player has led the Cats in scoring for each of the past three games. Dies led game one in scoring with 20 points, forward Josh Reid led game two with 14 points and forward Shawn Rhodes led game three with 22 points.

Asbury said he would like to bring in someone like Marcus McCollough, and have a "real nice, balanced team." McCollough has made 13-of-18 shots from the field this season and is averaging 9.7 points per game.

Forward Charles Dinkins, who is recovering from knee surgery, might add to the Cats' depth once he is healthy. If Dinkins does not recover in time, Asbury said he will be a candidate for a redshirt.

"He's a candidate, although we have to make a decision pretty quickly," Asbury said. "He's about 80-percent physically and about 50-percent mentally ready to play in a game at this point in time."

Dinkins was the 1997 player of the year in the Pacific Coast League at Southwestern (California) College. He averaged 27 points and 12.2 rebounds per game for the junior college last season.

One of the Cats who was relied upon heavily last year for point production, Ayome May, has taken a different role in the first three games. He averaged 10.9 points per game last season, yet has averaged only 6.7 points per game in this season's three games.

"I'm not saying he's not playing well. He's just not putting up big numbers," Asbury said.

Asbury said May has helped the Cats more defensively than offensively this season, and he thinks May is most effective when concentrating on defending.

UMKC, which has a 1-4 record, has two players who average double-figure scoring. Forward Jimmy Keller is averaging 13.2 points per game, and guard Eddie Smith is averaging 12 points per game.

K-State will be UMKC's second home game of the season. Its first home game was a 74-62 win over Doane College.

UMKC is coming off a 61-79 loss at Northern Iowa on Monday.

"They've got so many new guys in their program that they're searching for a line-up, and I think they probably struggle a bit with that," Asbury said.

"You know that we'll get their best shot. Missouri doesn't play them and Kansas doesn't play them, so logically they're looking for respect in the region and there's nothing they would rather do than beat us."

SENIOR GUARD BRIT JACOBSON passes the ball past Drake defender Keisha Cox and her Bulldog teammates. The Cats have a 3-1 record and will play Grambling State at 7 tonight in Bramlage Coliseum.

A 75-68 loss to DePaul left a sour taste in the mouths of K-State players. Tonight, the women's basketball team looks for

REDEMPTION

STORY BY SUN DEE MILLS • PHOTO BY BRANDON WHITE

Losses make no one happy, especially coaches, but they provide a great benefit as a teaching tool. Women's assistant basketball coach Kamie Ethridge said the Cats are using Saturday's loss to DePaul as just that — apply it to tonight's matchup with Grambling State at 7 p.m. in Bramlage Coliseum.

"We were real frustrated with our effort," Ethridge said. "The DePaul game was just a roller coaster. We had a tremendous first half until the five-minute mark — we just didn't score."

The Wildcat players spend many minutes watching videotape of games, and Ethridge said the team's youth makes this intensive studying even more important.

"With this group, we have to show them the good and the bad," Ethridge said.

"The film doesn't lie."

What this game's film said was loud and clear. DePaul's fast break gave the team fits, the young point guards struggled and moving the ball quicker forced the Cats to turn the ball over.

All this serves the Cats well for the future, and the Cats won the consolation game in the DePaul Tournament against Yale 75-47. Community college transfer Ewa Laskowska led K-State in scoring with 16 points. For last week's efforts against DePaul, Yale and Drake, Laskowska was named Big 12 Rookie of the Week.

And the future continues tonight. Grambling State coach David Ponton is in his first season, but the team posted a 24-6 record last year and finished first in the Southwestern Athletic Conference.

"Grambling State is a team that made the NCAA Tournament last year," Ethridge said. "They will press us full court, and we must be ready to handle the ball and not turn it over."

The Cats are working on lowering that number every game. Against DePaul, the team recorded 25 turnovers, but cut that number to 15 against Yale.

Grambling State lost nine letterwinners and three starters, but returns two to lead the team. Ethridge said she is impressed with what she's seen from the new coach.

"This is a young team," Ethridge said. "This guy does a nice job recruiting. We'll expect the same from them as last year."

The Cats are a young team as well, and Ethridge said the players take turns popping out as leaders on the court.

"Our personality is still developing," she said. "The analogy of a group of geese that change leaders all the time is true here for our team."

One of those emerging leaders is the Cats' primary ball handler, freshman Kim Woodlee. Woodlee has started as point guard for every game so far and has seen considerable minutes. But Ethridge said Woodlee's fellow point guard Dee DeShay is the one the Cats might eventually use at the one position.

"I can't say enough about how she's stepped in to give consistency at the point guard position," Ethridge said. "Dee has to really draw in her game here, because you can't have the turnovers from the point guard in college."

Either way, the two players are a welcome addition to the Cats' game, Ethridge said. Someday, perhaps one player will move back to the two position she played in high school.

But for now, senior guard Brit Jacobson is handling that position just fine. Jacobson put up 22 points against DePaul and 15 against Yale.

"Brit's game is about effort," Ethridge said. "Sometimes, when you're going that fast, you can get out of control. She did step up, and she was under control. But more importantly, she is communicating better on the court."

Ethridge said the effort the Cats gave in the second half of the DePaul game, when the team shot 56 percent and pulled ahead of DePaul for a while, is a goal for the team right now.

"The second half is the personality we want to show for 40 minutes," she said.

"The DePaul game was just a roller coaster. We had a tremendous first half until the five-minute mark – we just didn't score."

K-State golf teams sign 3 recruits

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

With the fall portions of their seasons over, both the K-State men's and women's golf teams have been busy signing recruits for next year.

Men's golf coach Tim Norris has been busy this fall, and has signed two recruits. Both will transfer from Butler County Community College.

One of the new Wildcats is Christopher Brungardt, a 6-foot-3-inch, 230-pound player. Brungardt is a 1996 graduate of Hays High School, where he won the 5A state championship as a senior. While at Hays High, he was a medalist at the 1996 Rocky Mountain Conference and the Junction City Invitational. In addition to winning the individual crown, Brungardt led his team to the 5A crown in 1996.

At Butler County, Brungardt was the third medalist at the 1997 Region 6 competition and also won the Wichita Butler County Community College Tournament, shooting a 72 and a 69 for a two-round total of 141.

Norris said Brungardt's size is becoming the norm in professional golf.

"Golfers are getting bigger as courses are getting bigger," Norris said. "The ideal size used to be about 5-10 or even 5-9. The game has changed and Chris brings along the complete package, both physically and mentally."

Norris also said Brungardt is excited to come to K-State.

"He was so enthusiastic about coming here and helping this golf team get to national prominence," Norris said. "He is very excited about coming here. We are lucky to get him."

Brungardt's teammate at Butler County, Josh Cook, has also signed with the Cats.

"He comes from a successful program," Norris said. "He and Chris bring good individual skills. They also know how to win as a team. I think that is very important."

Cook lettered all four years at Augusta High School before going to Butler County. He earned all-conference and all-state honors in high school. At Butler County, he earned all-league honors in the Jayhawk Conference.

Norris said Cook will help out the Wildcats right away.

"I think his strength is that he has no glaring weaknesses," Norris said. "He is good tee to green and a good putter. He is a well-rounded player."

The women's golf team has also added to its roster and didn't have to look very far to do so.

Head Coach Kristi Knight announced that Lindsay Hammerschmidt has signed a national letter of intent to play golf at K-State.

Hammerschmidt is a senior at Manhattan High School, and was the 1996 Kansas 5A-6A State High School golf champion and the 1997 Midwest Section PGA Junior Player of the Year. On Aug. 18, 1996, she set the Stagg Hill Golf Club women's course record with a 3-under-par 69. She was named McDonald's KMAN Sports Athlete of the Week for Oct. 16-22, 1996, and KQLA Dick Edwards Sports Athlete of the Week for Oct. 21-28, 1997.

Manhattan High golf coach Larry Becraft said he sees her strong work ethic as a positive entering Division I golf.

"Her capacity to me is unknown right now since she hasn't been golfing all that long," Becraft said. "She has taken tremendous strides year by year. I think because of her work ethic and her just wanting to get better, she'll do well at Kansas State."

Hammerschmidt's low round in high school competition was a 76 she carded at the Washburn Rural Invitational on Sept. 23.

Knight said she was excited about having a local student athlete join the Wildcats.

"I am confident Lindsay's going to continue to get better," Knight said. "There's a good chance she'll redshirt the first year. If not, she will have a shot at making the travel squad. Her best quality is her work ethic. In one or two years, Lindsay will be a lot better than she is now and that is not the case with some players coming out of high school."

Both teams are off until the spring, when they will resume competition in late February.

Osborne determined not to let flu bug defeat Huskers this time

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LINCOLN, Neb. — Last year, the flu bug slowed Nebraska before the Big 12 Championship game and Texas' offense made the Cornhuskers sick afterward.

This year, Coach Tom Osborne ordered his players to get flu shots six to eight weeks ago — well in advance of Saturday's Big 12 title game between No. 2 Nebraska (11-0) and No. 14 Texas A&M (9-2).

Normally, the Huskers wait until bowl preparations in mid-December to get flu shots. But after being upset 37-27 by Texas last year in St. Louis, Osborne wasn't taking anything for granted.

"We had about 35 players who missed practice that week, either one or two days. Some of them had recovered (for the game) but they weren't very strong. It didn't help us any," Osborne said.

"It sounds like we're making excuses for getting beat. All I can say is it didn't help our preparation," he said.

Even with the shots, Nebraska is not completely healthy. Defensive tackle Jason Peter and center Josh Heskew are nursing nagging injuries, but both are expected to play Saturday.

Peter, an Outland Trophy finalist, has been bothered for about three weeks by lower back spasms that peaked during Nebraska's 27-24 win at Colorado on Friday.

He said his back stiffened as the team flew to Boulder, Colo. on Thursday night and got worse after the game started. Afterward, he said, he could barely stand.

"It was like a knife — real sharp," Peter said.

Still, Peter had five tackles, including one sack. Peter, who didn't miss any time last year after breaking a bone in his hand against Texas Tech, has practiced this week and will play on Saturday.

"I'm not missing the game," Peter said. "Some people here have run that by me. If there's any way I can help this team for 60 minutes on Saturday, that's all I want."

Heskew sprained his ankle against the Buffaloes and missed Monday's practice. Nebraska temporarily moved left guard Aaron Taylor to center, where he played last season.

The Huskers have worked out this week at their indoor facility to simulate conditions at the Alamodome.

"I'd imagine even people who aren't Texas A&M fans will be cheering for them," defensive end Grant Wistrom said. "But that's OK. I like playing in a hostile stadium."

As K-State rolled up its first 10-win regular season in 87 years, many Cats are garnering conference honors, starting with the Big 12 Coaches' team.

HONOR ROLL

As K-State achieves more national notoriety daily, the Wildcats were recognized as a force to be reckoned with among Big 12 coaches this weekend.

The second All-Big 12 Conference Coaches' Football Team listed four Cats on the first team, five on the second team and three on the third team.

Junior place-kicker Martin Gramatica, junior linebacker Jeff Kelly and senior offensive linemen Todd Weiner and Kendyl Jacox appeared at the top of the All-Big 12 teams.

Gramatica, a finalist for the Lou Groza National Kicking Award and the Tatupu Award, is the first overseas member of the All-Big 12 team. He went 19-for-20 in field-goal kicking this season and set a school kicking record with 94 points and 37-of-38 successful point-after kicks for the Cats. Gramatica is the only kicker in school history to hit three 50-plus field goals in a single season after a 52-yard field goal against Colorado on Nov. 15.

"I'd be hard-pressed to believe there is a finer place-kicker in the country at this level than Martin Gramatica," Coach Bill Snyder said. "The numbers speak for themselves against anybody in the country in regards to consistency and to the range that he has, but not by any stretch of the imagination to the true range he has."

The Big 12 also named Kelly as the conference Defensive Newcomer of the Year. Kelly led the Cats with 110 tackles this season and was best in the Big 12 with 24 tackles for a total loss of 108 yards. He also recorded seven sacks, a pass break-up, a fumble recovery and two forced fumbles. The Kansas City Star recognized Kelly as a Newcomer of the Year as well.

Kelly played fullback as well as linebacker at Garden City Community College for the past two seasons. However, Kelly said playing middle linebacker is his specialty.

"I feel this is my position," Kelly said. "It fits my personality and athletic ability more than any I've ever had."

Jacox and Weiner led an offensive line that helped the K-State offense rack up 2,422 rushing yards this season, 21 yards shy of the record 2,443 yards the 1973 team set. Weiner led the Cats with 31 dominator blocks and was second in pancake blocks with 22. Jacox was second to Weiner with 24 dominator blocks after missing most of the preseason recovering from knee surgery.

Snyder said the two seniors belong to an elite group.

"This is the only group that leaves here, collectively, having never won less than nine games and not having a bowl experience," Snyder said. "That's quite an accomplishment."

On the second team, K-State was represented by quarterback Michael Bishop (who was also named Big 12 Offensive Newcomer of the Year), defensive end Darren Howard, defensive tackle Jerome Evans, free safety Lamar Chapman, linebacker Mark Simoneau and punt returner David Allen.

The third team included Cat punter James Garcia, right tackle Ryan Young and wide receiver Gavin Peries.

Ten Cats were named to the honorable mention list: tight ends Justin Swift and Jarrett Grosdidier; receiver Darnell McDonald; running backs Brian Goolsby, Eric Hickson and Mike Lawrence; defensive tackle Damion McIntosh; linebacker Travis Ochs; cornerback Demetric Denmark; strong safety Jarrod Cooper and return specialist Gerald Neasman.

who contributed to the Democrats.

Late Tuesday, Reno took the unusual step of crossing Pennsylvania Avenue from the Justice Department to FBI headquarters to meet Freeh.

Clinton said earlier in the day that he had avoided contact with Reno and Freeh in recent weeks to avoid an appearance of undue influence. With Reno's decision, Clinton said, "I would expect that things would return to normal because we'll go back to work."

Her decision meant Reno had rejected Freeh's view that the broad range of allegations supported a request for an independent counsel.

Reno has said the law requires her to find evidence that specific felonies might have been committed and does not allow her to refer "some big blob" of allegations to a counsel.

prayer meeting before class in the school lobby. This time 200 students — nearly half the student body — attended.

"We had just a time of silence for everyone to reflect and pray," said Ben Strong, himself a pastor's son. "I told them God's the only thing we can turn to in a moment like this."

Witnesses said Strong, a 17-year-old senior who was friends with Carneal, talked to the teen even as he fired randomly into the crowd.

Sheriff Frank Augustus said the suspect also carried spare ammunition, two rifles and two shotguns that he had smuggled into school wrapped inside a quilt.

He told curious classmates the bundle was a prop for a science project.

"I was scared once I realized it was real," Strong said. "The thing running through your mind is, you've got to stop it. You can't let it go, and I was just trying to rationalize my thoughts.

"Regardless of what anybody says, it's not that easy to run and go tackle him as you're seeing live bullets flying by. You're just trying to think, should I do this? All these thoughts are running through your mind in a short amount of time. And, you know, I just started talking to him."

In Washington, D.C., President Clinton offered sympathies to families of the three slain girls. "Like all Americans, I was shocked and heartbroken by the terrible news," he said.

Kayce Steger, 15; Jessica James, 17; and Nicole Hadley, 14, died hours after the shooting.

Hadley was the first one shot. Strong said that was further evidence Carneal was spraying random gunfire, not aiming at particular students.

"Because Nicole was one of his good friends, and he would never have done that," Strong said.

One focus Tuesday turned to the search for a possible explanation, and to the fear that one won't emerge.

The sheriff said the teen told a detective that he didn't know why he pulled the trigger.

The principal said he locked the freshman inside his office with a teacher to guard him until police arrived.

Bond said Tuesday that the teen-ager told English teacher Tobe Dulworth after the shootings, "It was like I was in a dream, and I woke up."

a $5 charge. Only time will tell for sure."

Lynch also said health-care service should be available to all students and should be a financial burden that the student body funds without placing more user fees on individual students.

"It's like in your local community — who's going to pay for the fire department? Is everybody going to kick in a little in case they need it or are we going to make the people who have the fires pay the bill?" he asked.

"Health care is like that. If only the people who use the service are asked to pay for it, you're not going to have it because those individuals can't do it by themselves," Lynch said.

Glendening said using the fire department analogy is an administration attempt to stick with tradition instead of trying a new, better system.

"The fire department doesn't cost us $83 per person per semester to watch our houses in case they catch on fire. I don't want to say that (the administration) is afraid to let us try this, but maybe the results might not be what they're anticipating," Glendening said. "They're not anticipating that this is going to work, and that's why they use the whole fire department scenario. They're just maybe a little bit hesitant or reserved to move this way."

On the contrary, basing some services' budgets more on user fees is feasible, Lynch said, but not for the Student Health Fee, which he said is an essential service.

"I don't know of any other service that is less suited to a per-visit charge. As it is now, we charge for services beyond the visit, but at least we give the student a diagnosis. I simply think that's something students should receive as part of the privilege fee that they pay up front," Lynch said.

Zweimiller, who has the authority to raise the $5 fee and would supervise the administration of the new charge, said he sees both sides of the user-fee debate.

"I'm on both sides of the fence," he said. "I can see the problems that might arise because a student would have to pay for each visit when they come in. I can see where that might be a problem for a student financially.

"The other part of me says we can deal with that ... if this goes through, we can work to keep the Student Health Fee down as well as serve the students," Zweimiller said.

SHIPBOARD LIFE

Life on Mediterranean Sea takes adjustment, but experience well worth time, effort

KEVYN JACOBS
staff writer

Greetings from the middle of the Mediterranean Sea.

Isn't modern technology wonderful? Here I am, literally thousands of kilometers from land, and I am able to send a fax back to the Collegian so people can read about life as a Semester at Sea student. Incredible.

A sobering aspect of being on the water is the realization that we are just skimming the surface of this world. There's a lot going on below us. Depths of 18,000 feet beneath the ship are common. We have almost no idea of what we are sailing over, with the exception of the occasional appearance by dolphins or flying fish.

Travelogue

Sometimes I stand on deck and imagine that the water is invisible. What would it look like, with the ground four miles below us? Are we over a mountain, a valley, or a broad, flat plain? Would we see distant shipwrecks? The thought of seeing fish swimming in mid-air is certainly amusing, though we do see a bit of that with the pretty common flying fish trying to get away from the ship's wake.

Two months into our semester-long "voyage of discovery," life aboard the ship has settled into a routine. I get up every morning at around 6:30 to walk 10 laps around the ship. Exercise at sea is very important, since we are in such an enclosed space, which tends to encourage a sedentary lifestyle. Some students choose to jog, ride exercise bicycles, participate in aerobics classes or play basketball on the top deck (The basketball court is surrounded by a big net, to keep balls from ending up in the sea).

Breakfast, like all meals, is served buffet-style in one of the two dining halls on board, and is generally pretty good. And there's lots of it, so I'm happy. Like all campuses, meal times are very social times on board, where friends can get together and chat.

Then, like any college student, it's on to class. The classes are pretty similar to classes at K-State, with one big exception: We are in class seven days a week when on ship, and then not in class at all while we are in port.

The classes are also oriented to issues in the countries we visit, and in port we are required to visit historical, cultural or political sites relevant to our course of study. Four hours of my day every day are taken up in the computer lab, as part of my work-study. I work as a lab monitor, helping people print papers and troubleshooting computer problems. We have a well-equipped computer lab on board, including PCs, Macintoshes and laser printers.

Unfortunately, there is no Internet access aboard ship, so I can't read my e-mail or the Collegian on the World Wide Web. But that's a small price to pay for seeing the world.

Working on ship, in addition to carrying a 12-hour course load, can be a bit burdensome at times. It's hard trying to find time to study and read — and there is a lot of reading assigned — or even to write columns for the Collegian. But this is a problem faced by work-study students everywhere, so I know I'm not alone.

Privacy can also be a problem on ship. You have to have roommates. No students are given the option of having a private room, so we all have to learn to get along as a diverse community. And we are both of those things — diverse and a community.

Students are from all over North America (There are two other Kansans, one from Wichita State University and one from the University of Kansas). There are students from other places as well — Japan, China, Morocco, Colombia, India and Croatia are all represented. We've all come together in a shipboard community that grows closer every day. We have to get along. We can't just get out in the middle of the ocean if we have a problem.

And we have fun, too. There are always lots of activities, put on by the excellent student life staff or the students themselves. There are dances, lectures, student organizations, documentaries, a theater showing videotapes students have brought with them and a nightly newscast, produced by students on board.

There is even a bar on board. The period when the bar is open is called "Swell Time" and is very popular, because out here in the open ocean we aren't subject to U.S. drinking laws, so 18-year-olds on the ship can drink. Needless to say, "Swell Time" is always festive.

Overall, living on a university ship takes some getting used to, but after being here this long, I'm glad to make the adjustments.

This travel series is made possible in part by a grant from the Reader's Digest Foundation.

Band offers variety, fresh sound

JAKE PALENSKE
staff writer

Review Music

We live in an era of musical cloning. When asked to describe the style of the newest band, people often answer "they sound just like (fill in the blank)."

It seems as if no groups are going to the trouble to create their own styles, and instead are borrowing tunes from the latest hit band. Forest for the Trees is a refreshing departure from that pattern. Nowhere is there another album that combines the sounds of such diverse sources as bagpipes, sitar, kettle drums and record-scratching into such an appealing package.

The single that put this relatively unknown group on the map was the MTV buzz clip "Dream."

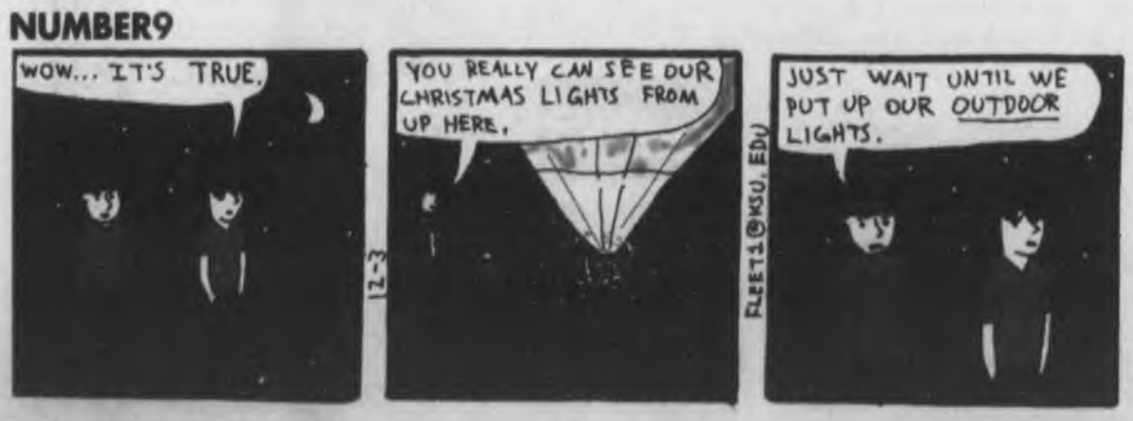
This song, with its thumping bass background laced with the sounds of bagpipes and accordions, is anything but run-of-the-mill. The soothing voice of Jaspr Baj — the only female member of the group — smothers the track with her distinct vocal style. Her vocals offset the synthesized voice of lead singer Carl Stephenson, who is also the producer of the group.

The song is up-tempo and hopelessly catchy. When I heard this song for the first time, I found myself humming the tune for the rest of the day.

The other standout track on "Forest for the Trees," their latest album is "Planet Unknown." This song sounds like nothing else on the album and would fit in well at a dance club. The song integrates Stephenson's synthesized voice with a strong bass guitar background and a mariachi guitar to create a sound best described as cosmic.

As strange as these combinations might sound, they blend seamlessly on the album. The great thing about this album is that every song could fall under a different genre. "Dream" could easily be described as world music, while "Planet Unknown" falls under the newly formed group of electronica. All listeners can find at least a few songs on this album they will enjoy, simply because the song styles are so diverse.

Another facet of "Forest for the Trees" that separates it from other recent musical offerings is the music and lyrics actually contain a worthwhile message.



Throughout the album, topics like pollution, deforestation, violence and cruelty to animals are all touched upon. The lyrics, when really listened to, educate the listener of these problems without ever being preachy.

Another outlet "Forest for the Trees" uses to convey messages, both lyrical and musical, is its innovative World Wide Web site. Web sites often reflect the creativity and mission of the groups they represent, and the "Forest for the Trees" site does an excellent job of both entertaining and informing the viewer about the band.

Its site is fully Java-enhanced (those of you who are weak-of-modem, beware of long download times) and has the lyrics for all the songs on the album, games, RealAudio samples of the music and a history of the band. Besides being information packed, it is one of the coolest-looking Web sites on the Internet and is definitely worth checking out at www.dreamworksrec.com/forestforthetrees.

With excellent diversity, meaningful messages and entertaining music, "Forest for the Trees" is one of this years most interesting albums. Fans of everyone from 311 to Enya will enjoy this compact disk and should make it a part of their music libraries.

Grades still a concern in new biology classes

SARAH IRICK
staff reporter

Communication may be up in the Principles of Biology class, but grades have failed to follow the same direction.

In an effort to create a better learning environment for students, the Division of Biology replaced their old audio-tutorial format and wooden cubicles in the biology laboratory with 22 new work stations, each equipped with two IBM-compatible computers and CD-ROMs.

"The physical facility was almost 30 years old and in need of change because it was nearly falling apart," said Beth Montelone, associate professor of biology and grant coordinator. "We wanted to keep up with educational advancements and also implement media technology in the classroom."

By implementing the changes, Mark Decker, assistant professor of biology and project coordinator, said the department wanted to bring the class focus back to student and student-teacher interaction — creating a better learning environment for students.

Decker said the A-T format had students listening to audio tapes in secluded cubicles and limited the opportunity for interaction between students and teachers.

"This idea of collaborating with your peers, interaction with others in the class and being actively involved in what is going on in the class is the heart of this teaching," Decker said. "Students feel like they now have the opportunity to get their questions answered. We are getting much more feedback on how well they are understanding the material."

Decker said students can now access lessons through programs he created over a five-month period.

"Much of the material we use in class is delivered through what looks like standard web technology," Decker said.

Course material can now also be accessed through the course website.

"Students can take a look at it before they get to class and then also after class," Decker said. "So if they want to look at stuff before the exam or after class, they can go over things in their dorm, home or from one of the public computer labs."

> "This idea of collaborating with your peers, interaction with others in the class and being actively involved in what is going on in the class is the heart of this teaching."
>
> • Mark Decker
> assistant professor of biology

Along with the new computers, the course itself received modifications. An introductory lecture at the beginning of each class replaced a weekly recitation and insures students will have someone to turn to with questions.

"This is not a course on computer," Decker said. "The whole point here is to create an actual tool along with all the other tools that are available, like the microscopes or live specimens for dissections. They are all integrated into the course."

Instructors also have a technological advantage in the new lab, Decker said. Equipped with a computer podium, the instructors can project the day's lesson or other information through a dual-projection system onto two screens on opposite sides of the room. Instructors use the system during the introductory lecture and wrap-up session at the end of class. In the wrap-ups, students often present the way they solved the day's problems.

"It's student-centered. It's students teaching students," Decker said. "So rather than students listening to what they think is the absolute truth coming from some faculty members, students come up and help each other."

After implementing the program for the first time during the 1997 summer session, Decker said he spoke with students who were taking the course for the second time.

"There were a lot of students this summer who had just failed the course through the old model and were now taking it with the new model," Decker said. "Many, many students told me 'I had just taken the old course and I didn't do well and I'm retaking it and I like this course much, much better. I feel like I'm getting the material in a much more understandable way.'"

As a requirement for a variety of majors, Biology 198 used the technology to give non-biology majors an opportunity to better understand the material.

Matt Hupp, sophomore in construction science, taking the class for the second time this fall 1997, said the changes helped improve his grade.

"You have to have a partner so you have someone to discuss the day's lab with," Hupp said. "Having a lab partner and the teachers readily available helped me understand the material and the concepts better."

Teachers like Decker believe the new program gives students a different perspective on basic biology concepts and helps to improve their learning attitudes.

"The main thing about that particular interface is it's really easy to create all kinds of interactive stuff the students have some control over," Decker said.

"Students can look at the three-dimensional models of molecules and control this thing so they can look at it through the perspective they want to."

Students like Jodi Hansen, sophomore in arts and sciences, find the new programming is easy to use, but not sufficient enough to understand essential concepts.

"It's hard to look at a computer program and just learn from it," Hansen said. "You just go through the program and write down the answers, and then you're not given the right answers if you get it wrong. It would be more effective if they lectured over each objective and just had one lab a week."

Other students raise the question as to whether the students have improved academically enough to justify the $1,008,979 spent renovating the lab. Although his grade in the class has improved, Hupp said the class average of the class has not shown the same improvement.

"Last fall, the class average was about a 60 percent and this semester is not much better with the class average around 68 percent," Hupp said.

Teachers like Jon Zimmerman, professor of biology, believe the course has not been taught long enough to compare it to the older model that was taught for 30 years.

"It is just too soon to tell," Zimmerman said. "I think this course just has the same problem as the older one. Students are not applying themselves as much as they should be. The students need to be mature enough to be responsible for their own learning."

Both teachers and students agreed the course has room for improvement.

"It would be nice if they lectured over each objective and had one lab a week, because now I feel like I have to learn on my own and I think that is hard to do," Hansen said.

Decker knew from the beginning adjustments would need to be made to the course after the first semester.

"We're still learning," Decker said. "There is always new problems associated with new programs. We just have to work through them."

Ads feature Jayhawk stars against gang activity

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. — Three University of Kansas basketball players are featured in public service announcements with a stark message aimed at young people: Stay in school, study and stay out of gangs.

Raef LaFrentz, Paul Pierce and Ryan Robertson — heroes to thousands of Kansans — all star in public service announcements that began airing Monday and will continue through March in TV and radio markets throughout the state.

The announcements cost about $45,000 altogether to produce, financed by the Koch Crime Commission, Kansas Bar Association and the Kansas District Judges Association, commission director Steven Davies said.

"Not a dime of public money was used," Davies added. The Koch Crime Commission is a statewide organization dedicated to helping Kansans understand the causes of crime and work for its reduction.

Each of the three 30-second ads features one of the uniformed players in an inset that is surrounded by lively tape from a Jayhawks game. Their messages are similar.

"Join me on a winning team by staying away from gangs," Pierce said.

"I had to stay in school and make good grades before making the team," LaFrentz said.

"You can't score in school if you don't get to school on time," Robertson said.

A print version of the ad will run in newspapers. Posters featuring the same theme — stay in school and out of gangs — and the three players will be distributed to every school in the state's 503 school districts.

Davies said LaFrentz, Pierce and Robertson were selected over their coach, Roy Williams, to star in the announcements because "when you have youth talking to youth, they listen better."

But Williams supported the players' participation in the ads, Davies added.

"If he didn't, the players wouldn't have done it," he said.

Davies said the ads are aimed at prospective rather than active gang members.

"The youth can say this is an avenue, an alternative ... It won't hit hardened gang members," Davies said.

Gangs are a growing concern throughout the state especially in metropolitan areas such as Wichita and Kansas City, Kan., Davies said. As of April, there were as many as 7,000 gang members throughout Kansas — with about 2,000 in the Wichita area, Davies said.

He said law enforcement officials estimate there are at least 250 gang members in Lawrence.

An accurate picture of the extent of gang activity is difficult to draw because there is no central clearinghouse for relevant information, he said.

Equipment not cause of explosion; human error to blame for deaths

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE, Kan. — There was no equipment failure in last week's electrical explosion at KPL's Lawrence Energy Center that claimed three lives, according to an investigation that blames the accident on human error.

Western Resources said Tuesday a team of experts from inside and outside the company concluded that safety shields had been removed by the men who were trying to find out what caused a circuit breaker at the energy center to keep tripping.

"The accident resulted from human error when a piece of metal apparently contacted an energized conductor within the cubicle," the utility said in a report on the investigation.

"The result was a brief but intense electrical flash with no sustained fire. The individuals involved were working in and nearby the cubicle at the time of the flash."

Duane Tenpenny, 48, of Topeka, Kan., a journeyman electrician employed by the utility, was dead at the scene last Monday afternoon. Another KPL employee, maintenance coordinator Ron Guy, 57, of Lawrence, died on Saturday at the University of Kansas Medical Center. And Charles Price, 51, of North Kansas City, a service engineer with ABB Services, died there on Monday.

Western Resources said the investigation determined that a wiring error had caused the circuit breaker to keep tripping.

The plant's Unit No. 5 had been down for a scheduled two-week maintenance procedure and was in the process of being started up again the day before the accident. The investigators said the unit's main station power breaker did not perform normally, so it was taken out of service for further work, with ABB Services asked to send someone to help with the troubleshooting on Monday.

The report said a mechanical problem was solved and repaired, but the breaker tripped again due to a ground fault.

The workers then began checking the breaker controls, and in the process a safety barrier and shutter were removed, the report said. The workers determined that two current transformers had been interchanged during the outage, and they then modified the wiring in an attempt to correct the error, the report said.

The investigators said it appeared that the three men who died were preparing to reassemble and test the breaker when the accident occurred as a result of an inadvertent contact between the energized connectors and the interior of the steel cubicle.

"An unsafe act was performed by not complying with the company's lock out-tag out procedure, which requires isolation and control of all potential sources of hazardous energy before performing maintenance on equipment," the report said.

The report said the most likely cause was inadvertent contact of a live conductor with a conductive material, most likely metal hinge parts on the outer shutter.

Scientists continue 80-year investigation

▶ RESEARCHERS looking for cause of Kansas' 1918 influenza outbreak.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA, Kan. — It's been nearly 80 years since an outbreak of influenza spread from Kansas throughout the world, killing at least 20 million people.

But experts are still trying to determine what caused the deadly infection.

Many say the epidemic probably started at Fort Riley, Kan., which had the first recorded cases.

In 1918, with the nation at war, soldiers from all over the Midwest were at Fort Riley training for Army duty in France. Each month, horses and mules created 9,000 tons of manure, and piles of it were burned daily.

On March 9 of that year, a blinding dust storm struck the base, mixing the ashes of burned manure with flying dust.

Less than 48 hours later, a company cook named Albert Gitchell came down with a bad cough, fever, severe sore throat, headache and muscle pain. That was around the breakfast hour.

By noon, 107 patients with the same symptoms had checked into the base hospital.

By the end of the week, 500 cases were recorded, 46 resulting in death. Before it was over, the flu would claim 20 million to 40 million lives.

"This is the greatest epidemic worldwide that we have ever known," said Robert Hudson, professor emeritus of the history and philosophy of medicine at the University of Kansas Medical Center.

Experts believe it followed Fort Riley soldiers overseas when they were shipped to France, but it's hard to say exactly what happened because there were no methods of tracking such diseases.

Historical accounts agree on one thing: The 1918 flu had its roots in Kansas.

In the United States, the sickness was most commonly called the Spanish influenza or the Spanish lady.

Older people called it the grippe. German soldiers called it Flander fever.

One in every four Americans caught it, and 12,000 Kansans died of it.

In early October 1918, Dr. Samuel Crumbine, secretary of the state board of health, issued a statewide shutdown intended to halt the flu's spread.

Visitors were barred from all state institutions, places of amusement were closed and local authorities were told to discontinue public meetings.

"In talking with older people, it is rare that you don't come across somebody who doesn't say, 'My mother's cousin died of this,' or 'My brother,'"said Judith Johnson, assistant history professor at Wichita State University and author of "Kansas in the 'Grippe:' The Spanish Influenza Epidemic of 1918."

"This was an event of such gigantic proportions. Yet, it was overshadowed by the end of the war. It was so virulent you would find cases of people who would be perfectly healthy in the morning and on their deathbeds by noon," she said.

Could it happen again?

"AIDS was certainly a reminder," Hudson said. "But this is just one more case in the evidence that diseases change. We can look forward to epidemics in the future that, even with modern medicine, we can't control."

Scientists haven't been able to get their hands on the 1918 flu virus, much less figure out why it was so deadly, or how to prevent future outbreaks.

In October of this year, scientists used radar to study seven graves of 1918 flu victims below the permafrost line in a tiny Norwegian coal mining village.

They hope the results, expected sometime next year, will show the graves still contain remnants of the virus.

It's Christmas eve -- and a young girl dreams of a frightening Mouse King, her heroic Nutcracker, a kindly Sugar Plum Fairy, and a kingdom of delicious sweets. Tchaikovsky set this ETA Hoffmann tale to a memorable score in 1892 -- and his ballet has been delighting audiences ever since.

You may have seen it before, but when performed as an ice ballet, Nutcracker sparkles with a special grace and beauty.

Don't miss the troupe the Manhattan Mercury praised for its staging and athleticism: "The show may not have been ballet, but it was the best damned ice dancing show I'm ever likely to see."

Give the gift of the Nutcracker ice show performance for Christmas and purchase a McCain gift certificate. Great for people of any age!

Virginia student strikes head, dies in month's 5th alcohol-related death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — A University of Virginia student fell down stairs and died, becoming the fifth Virginia college student killed in alcohol-related accidents in a month.

Leslie Anne Baltz, 21, of Reston, Va., fell and struck her head Saturday evening, police said. She died at a hospital Sunday.

Her death came days after Attorney General Richard Cullen created a statewide task force to help curb binge drinking among students.

Baltz, a senior honors student in art history, was found unconscious at the bottom of the stairs by three friends. There was no sign of foul play, Detective Richard Hudson said.

The woman's blood-alcohol concentration was more than three times the legal limit for driving, Hudson said.

In a public letter Monday, college president John T. Casteen said the woman's death emphasizes the need to change a culture that often views alcohol abuse as a normal stage of growing up.

"We are more aware ... about the dangers of driving and drinking, but somehow we pay less attention to the dangers of alcohol itself," Casteen said.

On Nov. 10, a Virginia Commonwealth University student was in a car that crashed into a concrete bench and a tree. She died, and police said the driver had been drinking.

Two fatal accidents happened on Halloween. A Virginia Tech student fell eight stories from her dormitory window. Another Virginia Tech student who had been drinking died in a car accident that also killed his passenger, a Radford University student, as well as the driver of the other car.

The Virginia fatalities come after increased attention on the issue because of at least two deaths this semester from alcohol overdoses.

A Massachusetts Institute of Technology freshman died three days after a drinking overdose in September, and a student at Louisiana State University died in August after a night of drinking.

Judge cracks down on feuding children

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich. — Two fifth-grade girls were told if they can't get along they won't be sent to the principal. Instead, they will be called before a judge.

"If one of you looks cross-eyed to the other, you're going to come back here," Macomb Circuit Judge Michael Schwartz warned the 10-year-old classmates during an after-school hearing Monday. "If one of you causes problems to the other, I'm going to put you in the juvenile hold."

Kytan Schultz and Cassandra Reibel stood before him, their heads barely rising above the judge's bench. The girls only nodded during the stern lecture and stuck close to their parents as they left court.

Schwartz cracked down on both girls, students at Miller Elementary School in the Detroit suburb of Center Line, during a hearing in which he lifted another judge's personal protection order issued Nov. 21 on behalf of Kytan.

Under the original order, the girls couldn't be on the same piece of prop-

Netanyahu says annexation to be last resort in future

ASSOCIATED PRESS

RAMALLAH, West Bank — Dismissing Israel's warnings that it would annex parts of the West Bank if the Palestinians unilaterally declare statehood, Yasser Arafat said Tuesday that a Palestinian state was a foregone conclusion.

Keeping open the annexation option is reportedly a key reason for Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's reluctance to hand over more of the West Bank to the Palestinians now.

"The less land the Palestinians control in the early stages, the easier it will be for us to annex in the future," the Yediot Ahronot daily quoted Netanyahu as telling lawmakers from the right-wing Tsomet Party.

Netanyahu said Tuesday he would use annexation only as a last resort and that a negotiated peace settlement was Israel's preference. "Obviously, if the other side acts unilaterally, they will encounter unilateral actions on our part. I hope it doesn't come to that," Netanyahu told reporters.

Arafat has said that at the end of the five-year autonomy period, in May 1999, the Palestinians would declare statehood, regardless of whether there was a peace settlement.

When asked Tuesday about Israel's threats of annexation, Arafat said again the Palestinian dream of statehood would be realized.

"Let me make it clear — the Palestinian state is coming, with (the part of) Jerusalem occupied in 1967 as its capital," Arafat said.

In Washington, the State Department advised Israel and the Palestinian Authority on Tuesday to stop talking about unilateral takeovers on the West Bank and deal with the territory's future at the negotiating table.

Statehood and borders should be decided by the two sides in negotiations and "no one should be preempting any of those issues," spokesman James P. Rubin said.

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright will meet in Paris on Friday with Netanyahu and in Geneva, Switzerland, on Saturday with Arafat, the State Department said.

The prime minister was likely to meet French President Jacques Chirac in Paris and German Chancellor Helmut Kohl in Germany and would announce final arrangements for the unscheduled trip Wednesday, aides to Netanyahu said.

Aides added that Netanyahu also spoke to British Prime Minister Tony Blair and asked for "positive European support for the Mideast peace process."

Netanyahu has come under pressure from the three Europeans and other world leaders to do more to put the peace process back on track.

The Palestinians now control, in full or in part, 27 percent of the West Bank. In a U.S.-brokered agreement, Israel promised to pull back more troops in the West Bank in three stages, with a withdrawal to be carried out every six months and to be concluded by mid-1998.

The Palestinians expect to be in control of more than 90 percent of the West Bank by the end of the third stage, a position Israel says is unrealistic.

In March, the Palestinians rejected Israel's offer of two percent in stage one as insufficient. On Sunday, Israel's Cabinet decided in principle to carry out stage two, but did not set a date or define its scope. The Cabinet also said the second pullback would only be carried out if the Palestinians cracked down on Islamic militants and handed over those wanted for killing Israelis.

The Cabinet said it would skip stage three altogether and move straight into negotiations on a permanent peace agreemen. Under timetables agreed to earlier, such talks are to be concluded by May 1999.

The Palestinians have rejected Israel's latest offer, saying it was a ploy to try to keep control of the territory.

Netanyahu, Levy, Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai and Infrastructures Minister Ariel Sharon were to meet Wednesday to discuss the scope of a possible pullback.

Today, Sharon plans to present a map of a possible final agreement in which Israel would retain control over all the Jewish settlements as well as two broad security zones in the West Bank.

The Israeli group Peace Now said Tuesday that Israel should give the Palestinians complete control of 50 percent of the West Bank now, ahead of negotiations on a permanent peace agreement and that settlements in those areas should be evacuated.

Artwork infuses hidden elegance while it remains disconcerting

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

There must be a secret society of art students who are solely interested in organic matter, both real and fantasy.

For the past three years, an alarming number of student art shows have routinely been colored with gross depictions of meat, organs, various body parts, diseases and fanciful micro-organic details.

Art Review

The work of Brian Clark, whose bachelor of fine arts show is in the Willard Gallery until Friday, is no exception to this mysterious rule.

In several gooey, textural oil paintings, Clark focuses on dreamy organic matter in vibrant colors. One large-scale work, the aptly-titled "Sonic," is like a greenish-grey vision of jellyfishes dancing across a bubbly geometric grid. Contrasting this disorder-order relationship are green tubes and chords that want to frame the painting with hints of art nouveau.

Clark again uses a grid, this time as the sole compositional technique, in an untitled work that illustrates the artist's interests in color and surface texture. The work is a running grid of hot orange blocks of color which float above the cool blue grid.

▶ The exhibit
The art of Brian Clark will be in the Willard Hall Gallery until Friday. There will be a closing reception for the artist at 5:30 p.m. on Friday in the gallery. Admission is free. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

It's evident from the show that Clark is not afraid to use color — sometimes with mixed results. In another of the many untitled works, silvery foil droplets (sperm, perhaps?) ramble about a canvas defined by a central blue curtain that parts down the middle. Mixed with various other details, the canvas lacks focus and purpose.

Many of the works have a menacing quality, especially "Point of Entry," which depicts a fiery orifice on a red plane symmetrically surrounded by black dots. Is it a safe-sex message? An allusion to a cult?

Living tissue and micro-organisms naturally appeal to an interest in the grotesque. They can suggest the frailty of life, a dependence on the sum of one's parts functioning properly together and the susceptibility of humans to micro-organism invasion. Sometimes tissue and organisms can be used in highly disturbing ways, such as in the suspended-in-chemicals animals of British artist Damien Hirst.

BFA shows are often times suffocated by an artist's intention to shock or at least, in K-State terms, unsettle the viewer with a vivid subject which diverts attention from a sloppily painted canvas. Although that's not always the case with Clark's work because some artists are drawn to the malleable quality of organisms, which provides limitless formal capabilities.

Besides, Clark can infuse an underlying elegance in his art that shrugs off any inclination to gross you out. But, bear in mind not to visit Willard while eating anything too sticky.

Court seems ready to allow same-sex harassment cases

▶ SUPREME COURT JUSTICES CRITICIZE lower-court ruling.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Supreme Court appeared ready Wednesday to rule that a law against sex harassment applies even when the harasser and victim are the same sex.

Six of the court's nine justices criticized a ruling that barred a federal lawsuit by a Louisiana oil rig worker who said he was sexually pursued and harassed by his male supervisor.

A lower court ruled that a federal law banning on-the-job discrimination never applies to same-sex harassment, but Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist said at one point, "I don't see how we could possibly sustain the ruling."

Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg, David H. Souter, John Paul Stevens, Antonin Scalia and Stephen G. Breyer also voiced grave doubts about ruling that the federal law, known as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, cannot apply to same-sex harassment.

In the ornate courtroom, where arguments usually are dominated by references to legal fine points, justices spoke on Wednesday of employers who might pat their workers "on the fanny" and of the "disgusting" sexual allegations made by the oil worker. But the gender of alleged assailants and victims was irrelevant, many justices suggested.

"A Jew could discriminate against a Jew," Breyer said. "An African-American against an African-American, an Italian against an Italian. Why isn't it possible that a homosexual ... could discriminate?" he asked.

The highest court's decision could have enormous importance for American business. Gay rights groups are watching closely, too, though there is nothing in the court papers to indicate the worker, his supervisor or two other alleged assailants is homosexual.

If the court should rule that same-sex harassment never violates Title VII, victims of homosexual harassment would be left without a federal remedy.

Comments and questions from Justices Anthony M. Kennedy and Sandra Day O'Connor were more difficult to categorize.

Justice Clarence Thomas, a former Equal Employment Opportunity Commission chairman whose Supreme Court confirmation hearing was marked by allegations of sexual harassment, sat silently throughout the 60-minute session. He seldom comments during such sessions.

The term "harassment" does not appear in the text of Title VII but the Supreme Court ruled in 1986 that harassment amounts to discrimination if it creates a "hostile environment" in the workplace.

In subsequent rulings, the justices said a hostile environment can come about not only by overtly sexual behavior but also by "discriminatory intimidation, ridicule and insult ... sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of the victim's employment."

The justices will take their initial vote in the case Friday, but announcement of a final decision could take months.

While it appeared clear the court will revive John Oncale's lawsuit against his former employer, Ginsburg suggested he might have a difficult time proving he was a victim of illegal discrimination in the all-male environment of an offshore oil rig.

"How can we know how these gross people would have treated women?" she asked. Perhaps, she added, the treatment Oncale allegedly suffered was "a disgusting way to show they didn't like him" and had nothing to do with his sex.

SHAC members concerned about fee

NATE JENKINS
staff writer

Student Health Advisory Committee members voiced concern on Wednesday about legislation approved Monday by the Privilege Fee Committee that calls for a $5-per-visit user fee for Lafene Health Center.

The legislation, which will be read tonight at the Student Senate meeting before it is sent back to the Privilege Fee Committee on Monday to be amended, could mark a departure from more than 80 years of free health service at Lafene.

Kristin McDonald, member of SHAC, said she understood the arguments for a user fee but doesn't agree with them.

"I understand the idea of the fee, that students who don't use Lafene shouldn't have to pay more in privilege fees to sustain it, but statistics show that over 90 percent of students use Lafene at some time," McDonald said.

Julie Tarara, chairwoman of SHAC, asked committee members to speak their mind about the user fee so they could begin to form a consensus to present to the Senate when a final vote is taken on Dec. 11.

At that time, Senate will receive the legislation from the Privilege Fee Committee, amend it and then vote on it. If passed, the bill would go to the President's Office. If approved, it would move on to the Kansas Board of Regents.

Amy Donahy, last year's SHAC chairwoman, said Senate should be cautious about implementing a user fee because it would set a precedent for years to come.

"I agree that $5 wouldn't be a big

Service planned to honor K-State student's memory

CLAUDETTE RILEY

A memorial to honor the life and memory of Jason Christiensen will be at 5:30 tonight in Danforth Chapel.

Christiensen died the morning of Nov. 19 after a battle with primary pulmonary hypertension. The 23-year-old junior in kinesiology at K-State was diagnosed last May and had been receiving oxygen 24 hours a day for several months.

Christiensen had become a familiar face, thanks to friends and family who were attempting to raise money for his double-lung transplant. Since being diagnosed, he had been living with his family in Abilene, Kan.

Friends and family had formed a committee to help raise the $234,000 needed for the transplant, which was expected to be done next August. They raised money through donations, fundraisers and collection jars in area businesses.

Don Fallon, coordinator for religious activities, said Christiensen's parents plan to attend the service. His former roommate, youth pastor and friends are also scheduled to speak. The public is welcome.

Monica McDaniel-Collins, a woman living with HIV

MONICA McDANIEL-COLLINS spoke Wednesday night in McCain Auditorium about her hardships with living with HIV.

Facing reality

Woman relates her battle with HIV to students

She was 20, young and alive. She went out on the weekends and had fun with friends. Then suddenly everything changed.

The tests came back positive, and she knew her life would never be the same.

Monica McDaniel-Collins, now 26, spoke to a small audience at 7 p.m. Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

McDaniel-Collins was born and raised in Concordia, Kan. She said she did not go to many parties in high school but was active in her church, school and community. After high school, she moved to Minnesota where she went to college and later worked as a nanny.

McDaniel-Collins said she became sexually active at 19 after being intoxicated at a party. She said this one-night stand started a pattern in her life of wanting to feel loved and needed.

"I wanted someone to love me and to hold me," McDaniel-Collins said. "And I thought the only way I could get that was from a guy."

McDaniel-Collins said she had many sexual partners while in Minnesota, but she never worried about HIV because it didn't seem like something that would happen to her.

"I thought HIV was a gay disease. That's what they taught me in high school," McDaniel-Collins said. "It wouldn't affect me."

Time, however, proved her assumption wrong.

McDaniel-Collins had been tested for HIV once, but the results came back negative. At 20 she was tested again, this time the results were inconclusive.

"All I heard was 'HIV' and 'test' and 'not right,'" McDaniel-Collins said.

After further tests, she found out she was HIV-positive. McDaniel-Collins said many thoughts bombarded her when she discovered she had HIV.

"Your tests come back, and when you find out you're positive, it's just like your whole life is over," McDaniel-Collins said.

"I was 20 years old and living with this disease that's going to kill me."

McDaniel-Collins said she also experienced feelings of denial.

"I remember thinking it wasn't supposed to happen to me. I had God on my side. I wasn't a bad person," McDaniel-Collins said. "But I got caught."

Instead of going out to celebrate her 21st birthday, McDaniel-Collins went home to tell her parents she had tested positive.

"There was about an hour of running around the house and screaming," McDaniel-Collins said. "But really, my

While beef industry insiders combat consumer skepticism, K-State researchers are working toward

SAFER MEAT

▶ DESPITE FDA APPROVAL, irradiation not a silver bullet to food contamination problem.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LINCOLN, Neb. — Irradiated beef may only cost a few extra cents in the check-out lane at the local grocery store, but beef industry insiders are unsure just how long it will take consumers to warm to the idea of meat being zapped with gamma rays.

The Food and Drug Administration's approval on Tuesday for beef to be irradiated is just one step in the process of making meat safer, said Chuck Schroeder, chairman of the National Cattlemen's Beef Association.

"We've said from the start that irradiation or no single tool would be a silver bullet," he said on Wednesday. "But we wanted to get as many tools as possible."

Schroeder serves as chairman of a beef-safety task force created earlier this year in the wake of three high-profile E. coli bacteria contamination scares linked to beef-processing plants in Nebraska, including the recall of 25 million pounds of beef from the former Hudson Foods Inc. plant in Columbus.

"I think (irradiation) does give us a step forward on our mission to solve the E. coli problem," Schroeder said.

The process kills most — but not all — bacteria such as E. coli and salmonella in food.

Irradiation might prove to be a hard sale even though it has been available for years for poultry, pork, spices and some fresh produce.

"There isn't a lot of public acceptance," Nebraska Gov. Ben Nelson said. "We've got a major undertaking here to make the public more aware and more acceptable of radiation."

The beef-safety task force, which meets next week in Dallas, must initiate a public-awareness campaign to make consumers comfortable with the idea of buying irradiated beef, Nelson said.

The group likely will have plenty of time to launch an education campaign.

Before irradiated meats can be sold at the grocery store, the Agriculture Department must first develop regulations to go along with the dosage levels set by the FDA.

In addition, companies must add the irradiation technology to their existing plants. Just how much that will cost and how long it will take is unclear, Schroeder and others in the industry said.

"(Irradiation's) not something that can be done in a couple of weeks," Schroeder said.

K-State meat researchers look for new, safer methods

JERRY BOYDSTON
staff reporter

K-State meat researchers are continuing their exploration for new methods to providing pathogenic-free meat products for consumers.

"We have a lot going on in our department right now," said Randy Phebus, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry.

Since 1976, research focus has been placed on looking at the microbiological qualities of meat and meat products. From these findings, researchers were able to begin isolating and detecting bacteria and developing new ways to eliminate it.

"We've been working with steam pasteurization for a while, and now we are developing more methods that will work in conjunction with the steam pasteurization to help provide a safe product," Phebus said.

Steam pasteurization is a 6- to 8-second immersion in pressurized steam that raises the meat carcass surface temperature to 185 degrees Fahrenheit.

"We have determined that this process does an effective job of killing pathogens such as E. coli 0157H7 and salmonella,

Regents, universities still struggling with setting goals

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Freshmen at state universities often wonder how much time professors will have for them. Their parents often wonder how much time it will take them to graduate.

Now, university officials are supposed to be worrying about the same issues. They also are supposed to worry about how to improve teaching and advising without using a lot of extra money.

A Board of Regents program, "Vision 2020," is designed to make universities more efficient and more effective. It requires universities to set goals that can be measured objectively, so the regents can see how well the universities are doing.

But, two years after the board created the program, its members and the universities are still struggling with setting goals.

"I think it's new enough that we're still feeling our way along," said Regent Bill Docking, of Arkansas City.

The regents plan to review the latest "Vision 2020" reports from the campuses during their next meeting, Dec. 19 and 20. The reports detail the efforts of each university to set and meet goals.

The basic question for the regents is whether the goals the universities have set are ambitious enough.

"One of the things that has become clear to us is that some of the goals we set may have not stretched us enough," Edward Hammond, Fort Hays State University president, said.

The regents created the "Vision 2020" program in December 1995 in hopes of making the universities more accountable to taxpayers.

The current budget for the regents system is nearly $1.35 billion, the second-largest in state government, behind state aid to public elementary, junior high and high schools. The regents account for nearly 17 cents of every dollar state government spends.

In 1996, just months after the regents began their program, the 3 policemen sue 'PrimeTime Live' for slander, hidden camera use

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. — Three police officers sued ABC for $3 million, saying the network hired black people to drive around in an $85,000 car, break traffic laws and then accused the three of racism when the officers stopped them.

The officers were featured in a Nov. 27, 1996, episode of "PrimeTime Live" called "Driving While Black," which alleged the officers stopped the men only because of their race, according to the suit.

The network hired the three men to drive around a drug-plagued neighborhood in Jamesburg, N.J., for several days in October in a Mercedes-Benz equipped with a hidden camera, the suit said.

One of the officers, Louis Hornberger, said the car was stopped the third night after breaking several traffic laws, including disobeying a traffic sign at a dangerous intersection in front of the officers' car.

"Not too many kids drive $85,000 cars," Hornberger said. "And when they came in, they were doing everything they could to stand out. They wanted to be seen."

The young men even bought bottles of spring water and put them into brown paper bags to look like they were carrying alcohol, Hornberger said.

In a March letter to the officers' attorney, the network defended the segment.

"The 'PrimeTime Live' report accurately described the experience of these three black youths who were stopped, ordered out of their car and subjected to frisking and a search of the vehicle, without their consent, after having done nothing more than drive into town in a relative's Mercedes for a second night," wrote John W. Zucker, senior general attorney for ABC.

Committee endorses legislation on Kansas' community colleges

TOPEKA — Most community colleges would decrease their property tax rates and out-district tuition would be abolished under a legislative committee proposal to be presented to lawmakers next year.

None of the community colleges would lose money with the tax cut because the proposal includes $31.7 million from the state to fill the void, officials said.

The Special Committee on Community College Governance plan also included language allowing voters to determine whether they want officials of community colleges and vocational schools to discuss mergers. It wouldn't mandate any merger, only that it be discussed.

The proposal also calls for an increase in the amount of money for vocational programs at 14 community colleges that aren't designated by the state as area vocational training schools.

Harley sues over X-rated movie

MILWAUKEE — Harley-Davidson Inc. is giving a thumbs-down to an X-rated movie that shows sex acts on its motorcycles and on rugs bearing its logo.

Scenes from the movie, "Gang Bang Girl No. 20," tarnish Harley-Davidson's reputation and might mislead the public into thinking Harley authorized the film, the company said in a lawsuit.

The lawsuit, filed in federal court Monday, asks the court to order the producers to turn over to Harley-Davidson all copies of the movie as well as a list of all purchasers of the film.

The movie was filmed at a Harley-Davidson motorcycle dealership in Marina Del Rey, Calif., according to the lawsuit. Harley-Davidson officials have sent the dealer a scolding letter and said any repeat performance could lead to cancellation of the dealer's Harley licenses.

Toyota recalls all 1997 Camrys built in U.S. after 27 complaints

GEORGETOWN, Ky. — Toyota is recalling 1997 Toyota Camrys with automatic transmissions because of possible ignition lock defects in the nation's best-selling car.

The recall covers about 280,000 cars built at the company's plant in Georgetown, Ky. The recall does not affect Camrys built in Japan because Japanese plants use different suppliers.

The action was taken after 27 customers reported faults in the locks, which resulted in six non-injury accidents.

Because of the faults, the ignition key can sometimes be removed when the car is not in park. If the car is left in neutral, it could roll; if left in reverse, it could lurch when started.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration notified Toyota of complaints about the faulty locks in June.

A letter is expected to be sent to customers in mid-December notifying them of the recall and asking them to take their cars to dealers for free replacements.

Despite humble beginnings, Kansas Cosmosphere reaches 35th anniversary celebration

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HUTCHINSON, Kan. — In 1962, it was "Patty's Folly," operating with second-hand equipment out of a poultry barn.

But now the Kansas Cosmosphere and Space Center has grown into a museum with a national and international reputation, and one of the top attractions in the state.

It marked its 35th anniversary Tuesday.

"I'm floored that it has grown to what it is now. It had a very, very humble beginning," said Charles Gilliland, who worked with Patty Carey, the woman he called the driving force behind it, in the early years of what was then the Hutchinson Planetarium.

On a Friday in October 1962, Carey got a telephone call from the director of the planetarium in her native Oklahoma City. She had grown to love astronomy and was a frequent visitor to the planetarium.

That planetarium was planning to remodel and upgrade its equipment, and the director wanted to know whether Carey would like to buy the old star projector. The cost was $7,200, and Carey had until the following Monday to come up with the money. Otherwise, the projector would be sold to someone else.

Carey began making calls and got the money, although many of the people she talked to had no idea what a planetarium was.

The Hutchinson Planetarium opened Dec. 2, 1962, in the new Poultry Building on the Kansas State Fairgrounds with a show called "Star of Bethlehem," depicting what the heavens would have looked like at the time of Christ's birth.

There was no heat in the poultry building, quickly nicknamed "the chicken coop." Volunteers used a portable kerosene heater to warm the small dome for each show, and spectators sat on hard, wooden folding chairs.

Privately, H.J. "Jake" Carey jokingly referred to the planetarium as "Patty's Folly" because it seemed like such an unlikely enterprise, kept alive by the will of his wife.

Carey drafted whomever she could to put on the planetarium shows — high school students, teachers, even local businessmen. She remembers talking an attorney out of a court hearing one day so he could come over and do a show for a crowd of school children.

Gary Sherrer was teaching at Hutchinson High School in the early 1960s when he was persuaded to help out at the planetarium.

"I didn't know anything at all about that stuff — I was a speech-political science major," said Sherrer, now the Kansas lieutenant governor. "People would come in and I'd be a one-person operation, pulling switches and levers so that things happened."

The planetarium found a new home in 1966 when the poultry association said it needed more room for exhibits.

But the president of Hutchinson Community College offered space in a new arts and sciences building, complete with a new star projector, financed in part by a grant.

Among students who began working at the planetarium in the late 1960s was Max Ary, who expected to go to Emporia State University, get his degree and become a biology teacher like his brothers.

But he and Carey hit it off immediately. It was months before Ary realized his new friend also happened to be the person who signed his checks.

When it came time for Ary to go to Emporia with his new wife, he was heartsick about leaving the planetarium.

"I fell in love with it," he said. "I told myself, 'This is what I want to do the rest of my life.'"

Ary never enrolled at Emporia State. When the planetarium director resigned in August 1970 he became an assistant director and finished his education at Wichita State University. He left for a while to become director of Noble Planetarium in Fort Worth, returning in 1976 when given the chance to build a new museum from the ground up.

What sealed the deal, Ary said, was knowing he'd be able to work closely with Carey again.

The two spent four years flying around the country, visiting various museums, crafting a vision of what the Cosmosphere would be. They were instrumental in raising $3 million for the Cosmosphere's new home.

But the dreams kept getting bigger. In 1988, the Cosmosphere formed Space Works, a subsidiary specializing in replicating and restoring space hardware.

A fully funded $13-million expansion was completed in March. At 75, Carey is dreaming still, coming to the museum several days a week and talking about how it can make still more improvements.

Kentucky sheriff suspects accomplice in shooting

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WEST PADUCAH, Ky. — In the search for a motive in the shooting deaths of three students in a high school prayer circle, the sheriff suggested on Wednesday that the 14-year-old suspect may not have acted alone.

And his principal said an examination of Micheal Carneal's school essays and short stories revealed a recurring theme that the bespectacled 14-year-old felt weak and picked upon.

Principal Bill Bond said the boy apparently had been teased all his life and just struck out in anger at the world.

Three young girls died Monday and five were wounded after Carneal allegedly opened fire after a prayer meeting in the crowded lobby at Heath High School. The boy surrendered after a friend persuaded him to drop his pistol.

Sheriff Frank Augustus said Carneal may have had help. He acknowledged the theory was based on a gut feeling and not any evidence of a conspiracy.

"He did bring five guns. Is he the only one who was supposed to be there?" the sheriff asked. "Are there more people involved in this, who maybe chickened-out or used him as a pansy?"

Monday's shooting follows a similar incident Oct. 1 in Pearl, Miss. Authorities say a 16-year-old outcast stabbed his mother to death and then fatally shot two classmates. Prosecutors allege that Luke Woodham conspired with a group of six other youths, and passed a handwritten note to a friend before the rampage: "I killed because people like me are mistreated every day. I did this to show society push us and we will push back."

Bond said he reviewed school essays written by Carneal, which suggest the boy felt powerless.

Those who know the teen described him as physically small and emotionally immature, but a good student with no serious discipline problems.

"He felt like he was weak," Bond said, adding that he wasn't aware of any incidents in which Carneal had been physically harassed.

Augustus said he didn't think hostility from other students had been a factor in the shootings, which injured five other students.

Funeral services for Kayce Steger, 15, Jessica James, 17, and Nichole Hadley, 14, will be conducted Friday. Two of the five injured students remained hospitalized Wednesday in satisfactory and stable condition.

The sheriff said Carneal, who is being held on juvenile charges of murder, attempted murder and burglary, carried the pistol, extra ammunition, two shotguns and two rifles into Heath High on Monday. He's accused of stealing the weapons from a neighbor's gun safe.

Classmates said Carneal warned some people last week that "something big is going to happen," and urged at least a few friends, not to attend the Monday morning student-organized prayer meeting in the school's lobby.

"I've got a 14-year-old male who walks into school and commences fire on a group of students," the sheriff said. "Why did he bring five guns to school? Why did he evidently make statements to people that something tragic was going to happen?

"I don't believe this boy planned this out by himself. I believe there is somebody else in the background that we need to talk to. I think it's other students. I may be totally out of whack, but I just believe there's others involved."

The community clearly is frustrated that no explanation behind the shootings has emerged, and the sheriff said he wants to talk with Carneal again. The interview was being arranged through the boy's attorney, Chuck Granner. Hours after the shootings, Carneal told a detective he didn't know why he fired on his fellow classmates. And the boy's parents told their minister they have no idea what prompted the shootings.

"I could stop this investigation right now, take this young man to court and convict him, but everybody in this county and everybody across the nation, especially me — I want to know why," Augustus said. "And I want to know if there was anybody else involved in it."

Court could further human rights with decision

If the Supreme Court rules that sexual harassment is illegal even when the harasser and victim are the same sex, it would further society's commitment to basic human rights.

The court is considering a case that might do just that.

According to The Associated Press, six of the court's nine justices criticized a ruling that barred a federal lawsuit by a Louisiana oil rig worker who said he was sexually pursued and harassed by his male supervisor.

A lower court ruled that a federal law banning on-the-job discrimination never applies to same-sex harassment, but Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist said at one point, "I don't see how we could possibly sustain the ruling."

If the court rules that laws against sexual harassment can apply to same-sex cases, it would be more than a token gesture to contribute to a more "politically correct" society. It would send the message that all people, regardless of their gender or sexual orientation, have the right to work in a harassment-free environment.

The American legal system has given legitimacy to people's right to be free of harassment from the other sex. This decision could be a landmark in extending that right.

American culture's macho stereotype suggests that "real" men don't need to be protected — they can take care of themselves. Such reasoning leaves men without the legal protection that women have in a case such as this one. For society to achieve gender equity, women and men must enjoy the same rights, including the right to work without being harassed.

The Supreme Court could clear up many of these gray areas that surround sexual harassment. Ruling that such laws could apply to same-sex harassment would send the message that sexual harassment of any kind should be taken seriously. It would make it clear that sexual harassment laws are created to assure equal rights to all people.

Technology

Don't believe the hype

A friend recently sent her first-ever e-mail to me saying that she had finally decided to join the 1990s. I told her to go back to the decade in which she had previously been living.

Those who know me know that this advice was akin to the crack junkie telling a younger sibling to "stay away from this stuff." I will admit right now to hypocrisy. I am a radio and television major. I am addicted to e-mail and check it religiously.

But I know, as someone who appreciates words, even if I don't use them well myself, that e-mail is less intimate than a phone call, colder and more tone-deaf than a letter and lacks the warmth of face-to-face interaction. It is a modern telegram — no fuss, no muss, no germs or fluids.

VIEWPOINT

TERRY WELCH

TERRY WELCH is a junior in radio/TV. You can send your e-mail to Terry at tlw1915@ksu.edu

Don't worry, my disgust is broad enough to take in a large range of technological advances. I am, I think, a true neo-Luddite.

For those of you not in the know, the Luddites were members of an English labor movement in the early 19th century who thought ill of technology. This was not a philosophical round table. They were weavers whose livelihoods were threatened by automation (I think some of my print media colleagues here at the Collegian might sympathize).

They took their name from Ned Ludd, a boy who — as legend has it — broke some weaving equipment in the late 1790s, but was too stupid to be punished for it. From then on, when accidents occurred, they were blamed on Ned Ludd.

In 1812, this movement's short history peaked with its attack on a power loom mill. Technology might have helped these workers here. Their attempt to use sticks and rocks against the mill owner's well-armed guards failed, and they settled for burning down the mill owner's house. Consequently, a number of them were tracked down, then imprisoned or hanged.

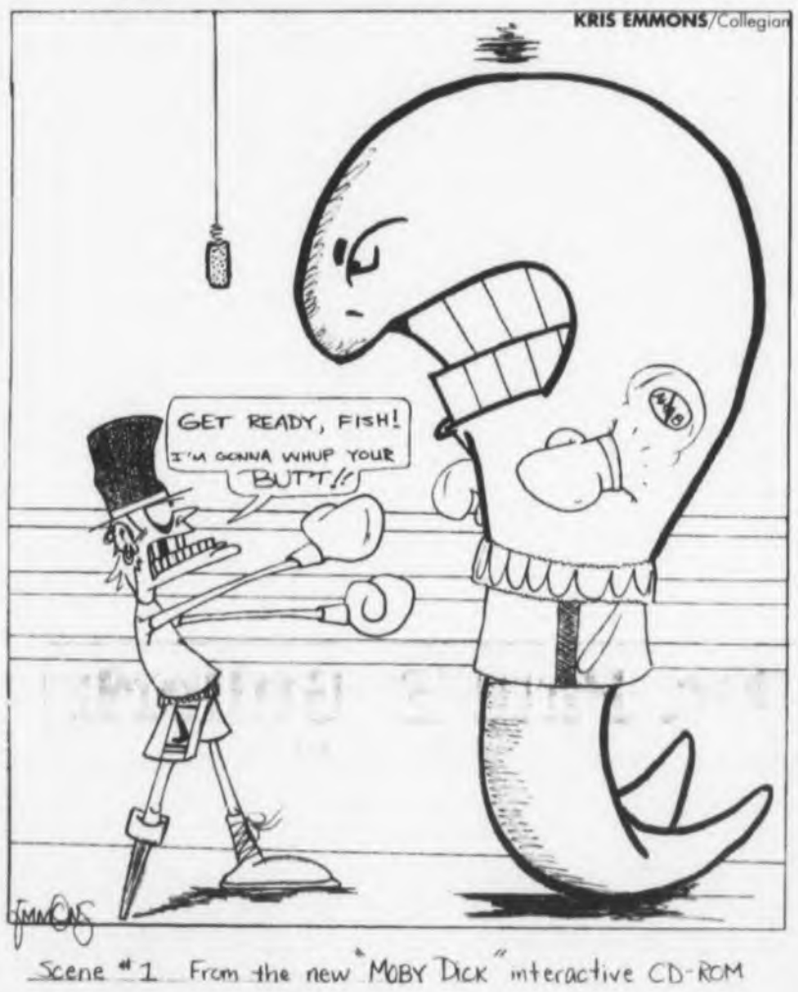
If you think the Luddites were just kooks, and you don't think there's at least something to the Amish concept of technology being inherently evil, consider the following:

In 1993, an Australian psychiatrist studied the effects of television on humans' ability to think. In this test, he found that children who were allowed to watch more television had less capacity for reasoned thinking than those whose television watching was limited.

He argued that it wasn't the crappy programming that television usually provides that was the culprit, but the actual technology. The fact that people's eyes move very little when watching television had something to do with it. This study, coincidentally, has pointed to new methods of combating autism.

Another recent study, which I must admit I heard about last week on National Public Radio's "All Things Considered," so can't really reference, found that the brains of people who were watching television and surfing the Internet were giving off more alpha waves — the same type of brain wave given off by people who are dreaming. Have you ever seen that zombie-like stare on the faces of people who are really into their "Friends" episode? They look like that because they're dreaming.

Yet technology has its accomplices. Like the proto-humans in the opening scene of "2001," many of us jump at new technology, apparently believing that every new thing is inherently good because it's new.



For example, after President Jon Wefald's State of the University Address, there was a 1 1/2-hour presentation regarding the new uses of technology in K-State classrooms. Absent from the presentation was any evidence that technology helped anyone learn better. I will grant that it has taught my environmental geography professor much. I doubt, however, that the university spent thousands of dollars on computer and projection technology in Kedzie 106 to teach new curse words to people with doctorates in geography.

As if technology itself didn't cause enough grief, the most promising aspects of technology seem to get taken over by people aiming for the lowest common denominator. Why do you think pornography is the only thing that makes real money on the Internet?

And interactivity? Fuhgeddaboudit. Do I really think that interactivity is such a good thing? I saw an ad a while back for interactive novels and trembled. I fear hearing this commercial someday: "Moby Dick. What a bummer, huh? Well, if you like Ahab, he can kick the white whale's ass in your own version with Novel-Like-New! Holden Caulfield gets a girlfriend and cheers up! The last 20 pages of Ulysses get punctuated!"

If only Ted Kaczynski had been introduced to a psychiatrist and an editor during his Harvard University graduation reception, things might have been so different.

Koran brings word of God, unique wisdom

Humanity has received divine guidance through two channels — first the word of God, second the prophets who were chosen by God to communicate his will to human beings. These two things have always been connected ,and attempts to know the will of God while neglecting either have always been misleading.

The Koran is the greatest gift of God to humanity, and its wisdom is unique. Briefly stated, the purpose of the book is to guard the previous revelations and restore the eternal truth of God, to guide humanity to the straight path and quicken people's souls, to awaken the human conscience and enlighten the human mind.

It was revealed to Mohammed through Angel Gabriel, and it is beyond human imagination to produce anything like it. Mohammed's contemporaries were the greatest masters of the Arabic language with the most compelling motives to produce a rival text. But they could not produce anything like the Koran in content or style. Mohammed had no formal schooling, and he made no secret of it.

VIEWPOINT

MAJED KHAN

MAJED KHAN is a graduate student in electrical engineering. You can send e-mail to Majed at majed@ksu.edu.

Before I continue, I should say all that the translations I will quote will be the approximate translations from the Arabic language, because no translation can convey accurately the original content.

It is to his greatest credit that Mohammed was an illiterate man rising from among illiterate people to teach the whole of humanity the true message of God.

A fact of this book is the unquestionable authenticity of its contents and order, a quality that no other of any kind has ever enjoyed or is likely to enjoy. The authenticity of the Koran leaves no doubt as to the purity, originality and totality of its text.

Serious scholars, Muslims and non-Muslims alike, have concluded that the Koran we use today is the same book Mohammed received, taught and lived by almost 1,400 years ago.

The Koran is not the only word of God. God sent many prophets before Mohammed, and he spoke to them as he spoke to Mohammed. So a Muslim also believes in these earlier books, like the Torah and the Gospel, because the true believers are those who "believe in what has been sent down to thee (Mohammed) and what has been sent down before thee" (Al Baqara, 4).

"Say: We believe in God, and that which has been sent down on us, and sent down on Abraham and Ishmael, Isaac and Jacob, and the Tribes, and in that which was given to Moses and Jesus, and the prophets, of their Lord; we make no division between any of them." (Al Baqara, 136)

God created people so they may serve him. People being servants of God constitutes the essence of humanity.

God, being merciful and just, has helped people in many ways. He granted them an originally good nature that is inclined to know and serve its true Lord. He granted them a mind that possesses a moral sense and the ability to reason. He made the universe a natural book full of signs that lead a thinking person to God.

God has sent down verbal messages through his prophets chosen from among people, ever since the creation of humans. Hence the description of these messages in the Koran as guidance, light, signs and reminders.

All these books advocated basically the same message, "And we sent never a Messenger before thee except that we revealed to him, saying,'there is no God but I so serve Me.'" (Anbiya': 25)

Thus Noah, Abraham, Jacob and his sons, and the Apostles were all Muslims. Islam in this sense is in fact the religion of the universe.

One last important point about books is that, with the exception of the Koran, they have not been preserved, but have either been completely lost or have been distorted and corrupted. As to the Koran, God has decreed that it shall never be subjected to such distortion but shall be preserved by him.

A significant characteristic of the Koran is its practicality. It does not indulge in wishful thinking. The Koran accepts humans for what they are and exhorts them to what they can be. It does not brand humans as helpless or hopeless creatures, condemned from birth to death and drowned in sin from womb to tomb, but it portrays them as noble, honorable and dignified beings.

A third characteristic is moderation or harmony between the divine and the human, the spiritual and the material. The Koran pays attention to all facts of life and all needs of humans and deals with them in such a way as to help people to realize the noble objectiveness of their being.

In all its dimensions, the Koran's wisdom is conclusive. It neither condemns nor tortures the flesh nor does it neglect the soul. It does not humanize God, nor does it defy humanity. Everything is carefully placed where it belongs in the total scheme of creation. There is a proportionate relationship between deeds and rewards, between means and ends.

The Koran is meticulously preserved because it is the book of guidance for all of humanity forever. Thus it does not address the Arabs, even though it was written in their language. It speaks to humans as a human being, "What has seduced you from your Lord?" The practical nature of the Koran's teachings is established by the examples of the prophet and of pious Muslims throughout history. The Koran's instructions are aimed at the general welfare of humanity and are based on possibilities within its reach.

Those who allege that Mohammed wrote the Koran claim something that is not humanly possible. Could anyone living in the sixth century utter such scientific truths as the Koran contains? Could he describe the evolution of the embryo inside the uterus so accurately that it matches the description given by modern science?

Biology class needs to change exams

Editor,

The article in Wednesday's Collegian titled "Grades still a concern in new biology class" said "Other students raise the question as to whether the students have improved academically enough to justify the $1,008,979 spent renovating the lab. Although his grade in the class has improved, Hupp said the class average of the class has not shown the same improvement."

The return on the $1 million investment will, in time, probably prove effective. However, class improvement will remain the same until the course testing methods are improved, also. Taking the course in the super lab is great. Taking the exams in the dungeon test-hall facility stinks.

In a perfect world, that shouldn't make a difference, but it does to this student. When I first walked into the testing room, I thought to myself, "Surely this can't be the place."

The exams need some thought, too, seeing as how this must be the only way the staff can draw any numerical comparisons and conclusions on student performance. This must be where the problem lies.

Are the methods of testing any different from the way it was then? Are the distracters in the multiple-choice questions as difficult to distinguish then as they are now?

This is one of the few classes that I walk out of the exam room with a feeling of "I feel pretty cool about this one," only to find out later when the grades are posted that "I didn't do so hot" would have been more appropriate. I remain convinced it is the tests themselves that cause this disappointment, not my abilities as a biology plebeian.

125 nations to sign historic treaty to ban mines; U.S. opts not to sign

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OTTAWA — Goaded into action by a global grassroots alliance, 125 nations began signing a treaty Wednesday to ban anti-personnel land mines — a treaty the United States has refused to endorse.

As mine victims in wheelchairs and jubilant activists looked on, Kofi Annan, the secretary-general of the United Nations, praised the treaty as a historic victory for the weak and vulnerable of the world.

Also attending the ceremonies were observers from prominent holdout nations — such as the United States — which now face increased pressure to support the treaty.

When activists began campaigning for such a ban seven years ago, some people said this achievement was out of reach. Those who didn't were filled with elation Wednesday.

"Here we have 125 governments recognizing that the tide of history has changed," said Jody Williams, who shared this year's Nobel Peace Prize with her anti-landmine coalition. "It's a new definition of superpower. It is not one, it is everybody. We are the superpower."

Williams shared the podium at the ceremony with Annan and Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien. Canada — which was the first nation to sign Wednesday — played a pivotal role in persuading other nations to form an unprecedented alliance with non-governmental agencies in pushing for a ban.

"It is an alliance that has shamed the world and enlightened it," Annan said. "It has, for once, made the international community a living, thriving reality."

With so many countries lined up to sign, the ceremony was scheduled to continue through today while delegates held round-table discussions on the next steps — notably raising funds to aid mine victims and clear away the estimated 100-million mines scattered round the world.

"Let us swear to the hundreds of thousands who have been murdered by land mines that we will not turn back," said Chretien, whose government pledged $70 million over five years. "This slaughter must end."

The treaty requires signatories to destroy their stockpiles of mines within four years and remove deployed mines within 10 years.

Prominent holdouts refusing to sign include the United States, Russia, China, Turkey, Iran, Iraq, Libya, India, Pakistan, Egypt, Israel, North Korea, South Korea and Vietnam. Many of these countries sent observers who participated in discussions about mine clearance and other technical issues.

"We're part of this process," Ambassador Karl Inderfurth, the chief U.S. observer, said in an interview. "The United States is in a very special position, and other countries understand that."

The United States has said it could sign the treaty only if exemptions were made to protect its troops in Korea and allow continued use of its anti-tank munitions. Inderfurth said Clinton has asked U.S. defense officials to address both these problems with a tentative goal of signing the treaty in 10 years.

He estimated the world spends about $200 million a year on clearing mines, and said they should be spending five times that to get the job done effectively.

U.S. supporters of the ban expressed dismay that their country was not part of Wednesday's celebrations.

"I'm extraordinarily disappointed the United States is not signing," said

Testimony of OKC witnesses differs from earlier FBI statements in trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — Prosecutors hammered away on Wednesday at several defense witnesses who said they saw Timothy McVeigh with others just before the Oklahoma City bombing yet admitted that their testimony differed from earlier statements to the FBI.

John Davis described for Terry Nichols' jurors the features of a man — not McVeigh — who accepted a delivery of Chinese food at a room at the Dreamland Motel in Junction City, Kan., that was registered to McVeigh five days before the blast.

He described the man as having unkempt, dark blond hair, and added that "his nose was not a prominent feature of his face."

But Davis acknowledged telling FBI agents he couldn't recall the features of his customers because he makes so many deliveries.

In court, Davis also identified a composite sketch of the man at the hotel which an artist drew in April 1996. It does not match FBI sketches of John Doe 1, later identified as McVeigh, or John Doe 2, a man who two witnesses said accompanied McVeigh when he rented the truck.

Prosecutor Larry Mackey asked Davis if he could reconcile why he came up with a composite sketch a year after telling FBI agents he couldn't recall his customers' faces. After a pause, Davis said, "My initial answer would be no."

Since opening their case, defense attorneys have called at least 16 witnesses in an effort to distance Nichols from McVeigh, and to suggest that someone other than Nichols helped McVeigh plot the April 19, 1995, bombing that killed 168 people. McVeigh has already been convicted and sentenced to die.

None of the witnesses saw Nichols with McVeigh, and only one has placed Nichols anywhere in the critical week before the bombing — an employee of a Herington, Kan., surplus store who said Nichols asked to trade picks and axes for shingles.

Mary Louise Martinez, a Junction City nurse, testified she saw McVeigh and a dark-complected man in a Ryder truck on April 17, 1995, hours before prosecutors say McVeigh rented the truck used in the bombing.

The passenger, she said, had dark hair cut just above the shoulders and a medium build.

She said she was in a minivan in an intersection facing the truck McVeigh was driving. When the light changed, she passed the truck. "Mr. McVeigh was looking at me all the way past his shoulder with his beady eyes, and it scared me," she said. "Nobody has ever looked at me that way."

After the bombing, Martinez waited several weeks before contacting the FBI because of the flurry of McVeigh sightings in news reports.

Under cross-examination, Martinez admitted she told FBI agents that McVeigh's hair was very light red, and said she told defense investigators six weeks ago that she couldn't be sure the driver was McVeigh.

Earlier Wednesday, Eldon Elliott, owner of Elliott's Body Shop in Junction City, said a man wearing a baseball cap was with McVeigh when he rented the Ryder truck.

Elliott said he couldn't recall what the second man looked like, except that he was shorter than McVeigh and wore a white baseball cap set off with blue lightning streaks.

"I just took a glance at him and the hat he had on," Elliott said. "I can't really tell you what he looked like."

The descriptions of the man from Elliott and shop employee Tom Kessinger were used to create the sketch of John Doe 2, a shadowy figure known around the nation that people reported seeing with McVeigh before the blast.

Prosecutors have said the man portrayed in the sketch was an Army soldier not involved in the bombing who rented a truck the day after McVeigh.

Nichols, 42, could face the death penalty if convicted of murder, conspiracy and weapons counts. His former Army buddy, McVeigh, has appealed his conviction on identical charges.

GRAMBLING STATE'S Ashana Wright falls short of blocking the shot of K-State's Brandy Harris on Wednesday night in Bramlage Coliseum. The Wildcats won 73-54.

Struggling Cats manage win over Grambling State

DAN MERKER
assistant sports editor

"The good thing about the game was that we won. How we got to that point, I have no idea."

Those were K-State head coach Deb Patterson's words after a 73-54 win over Grambling State. The victory pushed the Wildcats' record to 4-1, while the Lady Tigers dropped to 2-2 on the season.

Grambling State's aggressive, attacking defensive style forced 28 Wildcat turnovers Wednesday night, but the Lady Tigers committed 24 themselves. That defensive style also led to foul trouble for Grambling State, a factor that weighed heavily into the outcome of the game.

Freshman point guard Kim Woodlee said the Grambling State pressure was responsible for the high turnover numbers. She had always played shooting guard before coming to K-State, and was not used to having to handle the ball.

"Experience is a big factor," Woodlee said. "I just need to calm down and get a grip. I think if I can get a grip, the rest of the team can get a grip."

After 10 minutes, one could tell it was a defensive battle, with the Cats leading by a low 12-10 count. K-State would jump out to a 21-12 lead after four consecutive free throws by guard Brit Jacobson, but the Lady Tigers battled back to within one at halftime, trailing 30-29.

Both teams struggled in the first half. Grambling State shot 38 percent from the field, while the Cats sunk only 28 percent of their shots. Woodlee had 10 points, six by way of the three-point shot, to lead K-State.

At one point in the second half, the Wildcats were leading only 44-42, but Jacobson drilled a three to extend the lead to five points. On the next possession, with 12 minutes, 38 seconds left, Jacobson made a lay-up and drew a foul on Grambling State guard Felicia James. The foul was her fourth and the team's 10th. That sent the Cats into the double bonus for the rest of the game.

James, the Lady Tigers' top scorer for the game with 15 points, mouthed off to an official and got called with a technical foul. That was her fifth personal foul, and she had to sit for the rest of the game.

After that point, the Cats would never lead by fewer than seven points, and they extended their lead to 19 by the final buzzer. Jacobson nailed a shot from nearly half-court as time expired, but the officials ruled she didn't get the shot off in time.

Despite not getting credit for the final shot, Jacobson led four Wildcats in double figures with 20 points. Freshman forward Brandy Harris recorded K-State's first double-double of the season with a dozen points and rebounds. Woodlee scored 18 for the Cats, and forward Ewa Laskowska came off the bench to score 13. Forward Jenny Coalson matched Harris with 12 rebounds.

Harris said intensity was the key to her strong performance.

"My goal was to go out and to start with a lot of intensity," she said. "I tried to keep playing hard and maybe things would start to come together."

Patterson said Harris was the key to the Wildcats' win.

"I thought she played a real complete game," Patterson said. "I felt that she was the only player on the floor that stayed within the system and was within rhythm and making good

Lady Tigers keep Cats off-guard

When the number of turnovers vastly outnumbers the number of successful shots at the half, a basketball team has problems. The women's basketball team struggled with that very problem against Grambling State.

At halftime, the Cats had sunk nine of 32 attempts and turned over the ball 15 times. For the game, the same was true; the Cats recorded 28 turnovers and made 25 of 64 shots. The Lady Tigers' aggressive, man-to-man defense was just one of the reasons the Cats had problems on the offensive end of the floor.

"We wanted to dictate the tempo of the game," Coach Deb Patterson said. "But it was tight down the stretch because we weren't doing that."

Up by one at the half, the Cats had free-throw shooting to thank for that. At that point, the Cats were 28 percent from the floor. Cat forward Brandy Harris and guard Brit Jacobson made numerous trips to the charity stripe and contributed 11 of the team's 17 free throws.

However, the Cats' 58-percent free-throw shooting didn't please Patterson, either.

"When you're inconsistent at the foul line, it generally means you'll put together

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Shawn Rhodes had 12 points and Marcus McCollough added 10 to lead K-State to a 71-50 victory over UMKC on Wednesday night in a non-conference game.

K-State only had two scorers in double figures, but the Wildcat defense limited the Kangaroos to just three points in the first 10 minutes of the second half, leading 39-25 at the break.

UMKC didn't score a field goal in the second half until Nick Richmond made a 12-foot jumper with 13 minutes and one second left. The Kangaroos were outscored 13-3 in the first 10 minutes of the half.

Richmond was the leading scorer in the game with 21 points.

The Wildcats were ahead 19-16 with eight minutes to go in the first half, but a 9-0 run lifted K-State to a 28-16 lead at 5:33. The closest UMKC came for the rest of the game was 32-24 at 2:11 in the first half.

The Big 12 Conference Wildcats improved to 4-0. The Mid-Continent Conference Kangaroos fell to 1-5. Neither school has begun conference play.

Ticket sales continue to rise for Bowl games despite uncertainty of destination

SPORTS INFORMATION

After two days, the Athletic Ticket office has taken orders for more than 8,500 Cotton Bowl tickets and 7,400 Fiesta Bowl tickets.

Fans who call the ticket office have the choice of ordering either Cotton or Fiesta Bowl tickets or to order tickets no matter what the bowl.

"I've been really pleased that most of the fans have chosen to purchase tickets no matter which bowl we attend," Athletic Ticket Manager Carol Adolph said. "The phones have been very busy both days."

Alliance Bowl invitations will be issued at 3 p.m. Sunday on ESPN by the executive directors for the three Alliance Bowls. The three Alliance Bowls are the Fiesta, Sugar and Orange bowls.

Fans may place an order for postseason bowl tickets with a credit card by phone, or in person at the ticket office in Bramlage Coliseum. Ticket prices for the Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz. on Dec. 31 are $65. Tickets for the Cotton Bowl in Dallas on Jan. 1 are $55. No orders will be processed until the official bowl announcement.

Phone numbers for the ticket office are (800) 221-CATS or 532-7606. The ticket office is open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday.

For information about land/air travel packages through the KSU Alumni Association, contact the K-State Bowl Hotline toll free at (888) 256-9756. For pregame party information only, call (800) 600-2586, or locally at 532-6260. Thanksgiving holiday provides clarity on K-State sports for columnist

VIEWPOINT

CRESTON KUENZI

CRESTON KUENZI is a junior in computer engineering. You can send your e-mail to Creston at creston@ksu.edu.

Well, Turkey Day has come and gone once again.

I must say Thanksgiving has to be about the best holiday out there. When else can you gorge yourself on turkey, mashed potatoes and stuffing and then sit comatose the rest of the day watching football, with the remote control sitting on your protruding stomach?

Besides Christmas, I mean.

I made an interesting discovery this holiday weekend, however. I found out that everything becomes really clear in my mind when I'm a complete sloth. My thoughts were so distinct that I decided to jot a few of them down.

First of all, I'm sick and tired of East Coast-biased announcers on television. Any time they talked about the Fiesta Bowl this weekend they not only picked a team other than K-State, but they also neglected to even mention the Cats in many cases.

Initially, most of them said Arizona State or Penn State had the best shot at going to the Alliance Bowl. When both of those teams lost, suddenly they threw Florida and Ohio State into the mix.

K-State is definitely the Rodney Dangerfield of college football because it doesn't get any respect. I have a feeling that the only way they'll ever get any is to schedule one of those overrated East Coast teams and just stomp them into the ground.

I was kind of happy to hear that Lee Corso from ESPN doesn't think the Fiesta Bowl will select the Cats, because he couldn't predict the outcome of throwing a cat in a cage filled with rabid dogs. I honestly watched him each week because I knew that any team he picked would lose.

In my opinion, barring an upset in one of the championship games this weekend, it's either going to be K-State or UCLA against Syracuse in the Fiesta Bowl.

The second thought that came to mind, as I sat on the recliner in pain after stuffing myself with turkey, is that I'm upset that I never got the opportunity to watch a basketball game in Ahearn Field House.

My cousin was telling me about the games he saw there and how loud it was compared with Bramlage Coliseum. He also said there wasn't a bad seat in the house, and it felt as if you were right on the court.

Ahearn had a true home-court advantage, which is something the Cats are missing in Bramlage. I guess that's fairly obvious now that KU fans have started calling it Allen Fieldhouse West, because they have never lost there.

I'm not saying I want to move all of the games back to Ahearn, but maybe at least one a year.

I realize there isn't a whole lot of seating in Ahearn, but why not have an exhibition game in there or maybe a game during winter break when there isn't more than a handful of people in attendance anyway?

I think it would be a great opportunity for some of the younger Cat fans like me to get a taste of what it was like in the glory days.

Finally, I've been pretty impressed with the Cats on the basketball court. I know some of their opponents so far would probably have trouble beating some of the area high school teams, but I still think the Cats are much improved from last year.

It's been a long time since a K-State team has had so many outside shooters and so much depth, in general.

Maybe I'll jinx the Cats by saying it, but I think they'll be competitive in the Big 12 and (dare I say it?) I think they're on their way to a top-five finish in the conference and a date in the Big Dance.

Chiefs linebacker fined $7,500 for hit against 49ers quarterback

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Linebacker Anthony Davis became the third member of the Kansas City defense to draw a league penalty this year when he was fined $7,500 Wednesday for a hit on San Francisco quarterback Steve Young.

"I knew I was going to be a scapegoat. I knew they were going to try to make a scapegoat out of me," said Davis, a five-year veteran who'd never been fined before.

The play occurred in the first quarter Sunday of the Chiefs' 44-9 victory when the 49ers were near their own end zone and officials blew the play dead just as the ball was snapped. Unable to hear the whistle, Davis came in from Young's blind side and delivered a jolting blow just as the quarterback relaxed and stopped his motion. Officials immediately assessed a 15-yard penalty.

"I didn't get fined for not hearing the whistle," Davis said. "I got fined for hitting the guy with the crown of the helmet. They were going to find a reason to fine me one way or another. I knew it. Everybody knew it."

Davis said the letter from the league was waiting for him when he reported for practice Wednesday morning.

Chiefs' safety Jerome Woods was fined $7,500 in September for a hit on Denver quarterback John Elway. Then Woods was assessed a $10,000 fine for a hit on receiver Ed McCaffrey in the Broncos-Chiefs game in Kansas City last month.

Are the Chiefs acquiring a reputation as nasty, cheap-shot artists?

"They talk that we're dirty players. ... And now the league is looking more at us than usual," Davis said. "Any time we do something, we're fined. Anybody who saw that game, or saw that hit (knows) I didn't hear the whistle. I'm not a dirty player. Jerome is not a dirty player. They're just trying to make an example of us."

He said he and his agent would appeal the fine.

"I asked Jerome, 'How does the process work?' and he just said, 'A.D. forget about it. It will take six weeks.'"

The Chiefs' aggressive, hard-nosed defense has been a significant factor in their 10-3 record. They have not given up a touchdown in the second half for eight straight games, and they vow not to let anything stop their momentum.

"I look at film, and any week, anywhere, I don't see us doing anything any differently than any other team," said defensive end-linebacker Derrick Thomas. "We are determined to play as hard as we can each and every play."

Chiefs' coach Marty Schottenheimer declined comment on Davis' fine.

"When we started out, nobody would have said for a million dollars the Chiefs would have won 10 games at this point," Thomas said. "We've found a way to be successful. That's how we got here, and we're going to continue to play that way."

On another matter, the Chiefs said quarterback Elvis Grbac did not practice on Wednesday. Grbac, recovering from a broken collarbone he suffered on Nov. 3, had said he would try to get back on the practice field by mid-week. The Chiefs have said he would not play this week against Oakland.

an inconsistent game," Patterson said.

Grambling State's aggressive defense got the Lady Tigers into foul trouble as well. With 12 minutes left in the game, five players had at least three fouls and the team had reached 10. K-State had only two.

"This is what we're trying to do," Patterson said of Grambling's foul trouble. "It's part of what our offense should create. But unfortunately, I felt we were doing the same thing."

At this time, Grambling's leading scorer, Felicia James, received her fifth foul as a technical. Jacobson shot three shots, but only hit one.

Dribble penetration was difficult for the Cats as well. As the Cats tried to push the ball inside, it would result in a turnover more often than Patterson liked. She said the performance was characteristic of a young team.

"We had trouble with unforced turnovers on rebounds," Patterson said. "We were running narrow lanes, we were in a hurry, we weren't responding to the pressure after a rebound and we were trying to get too much too soon."

In the second half, the Cats turned up their own pressure. Most every Lady Tiger shot was contested, and the Cats kept Grambling State to 28 percent from the floor.

"I really felt in the second half we made some key stops," Patterson said.

Grambling State was an NCAA Tournament team last season, and despite losing three starters, the Cats were prepared for the tough game from the Lady Tigers.

"I expected Grambling to give us trouble," Patterson said. "They play an unconventional style that's hard to predict. They dribble penetrate well."

In fact, Patterson said the team had a startling similarity to a team the Cats suffered their first season loss to — DePaul.

"We saw the same kind of thing from DePaul," Patterson said. "We knew going in we didn't play well against those teams."

Grambling managed to take K-State out of its offense entirely in the first half, something that created much frustration for the head coach.

"Tonight's game was so frustrating from the sidelines because so much of what we do was unrecognizable tonight," Patterson said. "We had players trying to make plays and cost us in the system."

But the players, especially freshman point guard Kim Woodlee, felt the frustration as well.

"I made freshman mistakes — out-of-control, crazy stuff," Woodlee said. "I need to straighten up and play like a senior."

Patterson added that Southern, a team K-State will see in the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic this Friday and Saturday, will be no different.

"As frustrated as I am with the offense, we scored 73 points and we didn't shoot well," Patterson said. "But we need to clean up our act between now and Friday, which I guess leaves us tomorrow."

decisions. I was very pleased with Brandy tonight."

The Cats improved on their shooting numbers for the second half. Despite making only seven of 17 foul shots, the team shot 50 percent from the field in the second period, pushing its total to 39 percent for the game.

K-State dominated the game defensively and on the boards. Grambling State shot only 28 percent from the field in the second half and 32 percent for the game, and the Cats out-rebounded the Lady Tigers 54-33.

"It was very important that we dominated the boards," Patterson said. "I think that was really the reason we found a way to win. It kept them from getting second and third shots."

K-State now prepares for the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic on Friday and Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum. The Cats will play Southern in the first round, while Wisconsin-Green Bay matches up with Utah in the other first-round game.

parents supported me from the beginning."

"My dad asked me, 'What does this mean? What are we going to do?'" she said.

McDaniel-Collins said most of her family has been supportive through her trials with HIV.

"Most of the people who are not supportive are uneducated, or they just don't care," she said.

At that time, doctors told McDaniel-Collins she had two years to live, and at first, a depression set in.

"I thought I could never be married, finish college, have kids, all those things you plan to do," McDaniel-Collins said. "Everything in my life that I planned on was all gone in one statement: You have HIV."

McDaniel-Collins said she then decided, however, she could not afford to waste her life.

"I knew I had to make a choice," McDaniel-Collins said. "I can be depressed and die tomorrow, or I can make a difference and live today."

McDaniel-Collins started speaking to groups about living with HIV less than a month after she found out she was positive.

"Everyone I would see on the street I would just want to shake and tell them, 'Wake up! It can happen to you.'" McDaniel-Collins said.

"You can't tell by just looking at someone," she said. "That's a lie."

McDaniel-Collins said that in this way, contraction of HIV has been a positive force in her life.

"I've spoken in front of doctors and high schools, and I will continue to as long as I'm allowed to," McDaniel-Collins said.

"Because I feel that's why I'm here. It has given me a purpose," she said.

She said her experience has also taught her about the nature of love.

"The reality was, love doesn't mean that you have to have sex," McDaniel-Collins said. "And sex doesn't satisfy the need for love."

McDaniel-Collins said one of the most important things to remember is that when you make choices, you are not only affecting yourself.

"These choices don't only affect your pleasure," McDaniel-Collins said. "They affect your parents, your friends, your brothers, your sisters, your grandparents."

HARASSMENT

O'Connor sounded a similar theme by asking Clinton administration lawyer Edwin Kneedler: "Suppose an employer has the unfortunate habit of patting every single employee — both male and female — on the fanny every day. How do you show discrimination?"

Kneedler, who argued that Title VII covers same-sex harassment, had to concede that an "equal-opportunity harasser" might not be violating the law.

Kneedler recounted two of Oncale's allegations — that two men grabbed his genitals and one of them placed his penis against Oncale's head.

Oncale's lawyer, Nicholas Canaday III of Baton Rouge, La., also alluded to another allegation — a shower room assault involving a bar of soap.

Oncale's lawsuit stems from his four months of work in 1991 as a roustabout assigned to a Gulf of Mexico oil rig with Sundowner Offshore Services.

His lawsuit against Sundowner and three men said he was sexually assaulted, battered, touched and threatened with rape by his direct supervisor, John Lyons, and a second supervisor, Danny Pippen. Another defendant, co-worker Brandon Johnson, was accused of assisting in one of the alleged incidents.

All three men named as defendants say no harassment occurred, and portray their conduct as hazing or locker-room horseplay.

Oncale's lawsuit said he twice reported the situation to his employer's highest-ranking representative on the job site, but no action was taken. Oncale quit, the lawsuit said, because he feared the harassment would escalate to rape.

Lawyer Harry Reasoner argued for Sundowner that Congress never intended to have the 1964 law extend to "relationships between people of the same sex."

"There is no evidence that they intended to federalize the regulation of conduct between men and men," he said.

deal, but I'm afraid that it will set a trend and people will be more willing to increase it to $7, and then maybe $10," she said. "I don't think $5 is bad, but we should be concerned with the precedent it sets."

Committee member Troy Brin questioned if the user fee would affect the health of the student population.

"When you go to Lafene, you're not just ensuring that you're well, but that everybody else around you also stays well," he said. "If somebody has mono and has the decision to go to Lafene and spend $5 or buy a six pack, I know a lot of guys who would spend it on the beer."

SHAC members said they agreed the user fee would affect the number of students that use Lafene, they just couldn't say how much.

Lafene Director Lannie Zweimiller said the fee could reduce the number of students who abuse the service Lafene provides, while committee member Jade Murphy said it could automatically lead to higher user fees in the future.

"With a $5 fee, we will see a decrease in the number of students who use Lafene causing an imbalance in funds," Murphy said. "Reliance on a user fee will force Lafene to charge more."

Student senator T.J. Schreiner said he wasn't aware of the challenges SHAC faced in making recommendations for Lafene.

"It's interesting. For instance, I didn't know that money received from user fees could be taxed," he said.

Donahy said Senate and SHAC would benefit from better communication.

"Senate needs to understand that SHAC is an objective branch of student government, not a branch of Lafene," Donahy said.

Legislature agreed to give up some control over how tuition dollars are spent on the campuses. In exchange, the regents were supposed to take steps to make universities' performance easier to measure.

And students and their parents have expectations, as well. Justin Holstin, an Emporia State University junior and his university's student body president, said students want to know they are getting their money's worth, especially as tuition increases.

"Somebody has got to be able to show tangible evidence to the students," he said.

The regents have told the universities to set specific goals, ones that can be measured.

For example, all of the universities are supposed to decrease the percentage of incoming freshmen who drop out after a year. The dropout rates would range from 34 percent at Fort Hays State to 20 percent at the University of Kansas for freshmen who enroll in fall 2001.

The universities also are supposed to graduate more students after four years. At most of the institutions, fewer than one-quarter of incoming freshmen graduate in four years.

The universities even have goals for increasing the number of requests for research grants.

Individual universities have their own goals. At K-State, officials plan to require in fall 2000 that incoming freshmen take at least six writing-intensive courses before graduation. A course would qualify if 20 or more pages of students' writing were evaluated in a semester and classes had 22 or fewer students.

The board's members and university officials have not always agreed on goals, however.

A year ago, several regents suggested universities were being too timid in setting goals. University officials expressed concern about not having enough money.

And this year, the regents' staff raised nearly three dozen questions about the universities' goals.

For example, a staff evaluation said the timetable for starting K-State's writing initiative was inordinately long. It also questioned why it would take Emporia State until 2000 to establish a system for monitoring how faculty members spend their time.

"I think it will be an ongoing, evolving scheme for each university," said President Jon Wefald. "Each university has its own values, its own design, its own idiosyncrasies ... Universities are very complicated organisms."

Both board members and university officials expect the tension to remain in future years, as the regents monitor the progress toward meeting goals, and universities come up with new ones.

"Obviously, you're going to have to continue as long as we have a regents system," said the regents' chairman, former state Senate President Robert Talkington, of Iola.

Gary Mickelson, spokesman for Dakota City-based IBP Inc., the nation's largest meatpacker, said he had no idea how much it would cost IBP to install the necessary equipment, because he had not seen details on how the government plans to regulate the process.

There are some concerns about how the process might affect the taste and texture of meat, but the industry is anxious to get started, Schroeder said.

To cut down costs, meatpackers could join to build regional facilities with irradiation equipment, said Jim Dickson, food microbiologist at Iowa State University.

To build a new facility with the irradiation capability would cost $6 million to $10 million, Dickson said.

It is difficult to predict how irradiation might affect the price of meat at the store, but Dickson said studies have shown the irradiated meat will cost 3 cents to 6 cents more per pound.

"When we started pasteurizing milk, the cost of milk went up," he said. "As a microbiologist, what's the cost of one E. coli infection?"

which can't be seen when you look at the carcass," said Curtis Kastner, professor of animal sciences and industry.

"Now we are ready to take it a step further and combine it with other strategies to make the entire product, from carcass to consumption, as safe as possible.

"Over the past five years, we have looked at steam vacuuming and also the use of hot water, and determined that these work well when properly administered," Kastner said.

Currently, researchers are going a step further and looking at the use of irradiation. Researchers are finding a way that irradiation and cleaning the carcass will fit into consumption process.

"We've known for years that irradiation will kill pathogenic bacteria like E. coli and salmonella. Now, we have to decide where the best place to employ this process is," Kastner said.

"Meat safety is a total system, and when there is contamination on the beef carcass, you have to get it off," he said. "Total elimination is necessary because pathogens can spread and recontaminate carcasses long after the pasteurization has occurred."

Kastner said a combination of practices is sure to provide a safe product.

"When you multiply the effects of a 99-percent pathogen kill with steam pasteurization, good manufacturing practices, and another 90- to 99-percent kill with irradiation, you can't say it is absolutely pathogen-free, but it's close to it," Kastner said.

During her speech, Williams introduced two Cambodians who have lost limbs to mines, Song Kosal, 13, and Tun Channareth, 37, who helps manufacture wheelchairs for mine victims.

Cambodia is one of the world's most heavily mined countries.

Song Kosal was 8 when a mine blew off her leg while she was herding animals near her village.

"I am very happy — so many countries have come to sign the treaty so other little girls don't step on the mines," she said through an interpreter.

BirdHouse prepares for acclaimed musician

SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
staff writer

She's on her way, so batten down the hatches.

That's the message from David Kamerer, coordinator for the BirdHouse Acoustic series, for when songwriter/performer Patty Larkin comes into town for the final installment of the 1997 Fall BirdHouse series at 8 p.m. on Saturday.

Larkin will be preceded by a 20-minute performance by finger guitarist Richard Gilewitz before she begins her hour-plus set. Having already begun the preparations for the arrival, Kamerer said he is doing his best to make the stop a comfortable one from the rigors of life on the road.

On tour since September to promote her newest compact disc, "Perishable Fruit," Manhattan will be stop No. 44 on a 45-stop tour across the continental United States.

Her publicist, Cyndi Harles, said the 11-song CD marks not only Larkin's debut as a producer but also abandons the use of drums to utilize other instruments that were at hand for percussion.

Raised in Wisconsin and now living near Cape Cod, Mass., Larkin is considered a near legend in the genre of grassroots music, with a background that runs from rock 'n' roll to Celtic and frequently in between. She is also the recipient of 10 Boston Music Awards, a Distinguished Alumnae Award from Berklee College of Music and glowing reviews from publications including People Weekly magazine, The Boston Globe and Billboard Magazine.

"Patty has a great live sound," Kamerer said. "I urge people to buy advance tickets."

Kamerer stressed that only 156 tickets are available due to limited seating at Manhattan Center for the Arts. Kamerer added that Larkin's final stop in Moundridge, Kan., on Sunday has already had to add another show. The first show has already sold out.

Tickets, $10 general admission and $8 for students and seniors, are available at The Dusty Bookshelf and the Manhattan Center For The Arts.

Beach art museum offers students opportunity to make holiday cards

ANGELA BUCCIGROSSI
staff writer

Students still have time to buy their Christmas cards, but if they want to give cards that have a handmade touch, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art is offering a block-printing card class.

The class will be 1:30 to 3:30 Saturday afternoon at the art museum and costs $5 to participate. Participants will have the opportunity to use the block-printing technique to design and print their own handmade Christmas cards.

"It's a relatively simple form of print-making, but you can make wonderful Christmas cards with a personal touch," Kathrine Walker, art museum education coordinator, said.

The block-printing technique traditionally involves carving a design into an aluminum block, applying ink to the block and then printing the design on paper. The art museum class will be using foam blocks instead of aluminum.

"The ones we're using will be made of a special foam that you can easily carve. It's basically the same process, but much easier," Walker said.

An exhibit on display at the art museum will help participants understand the block-printing technique and gather ideas for their own cards, she said.

"We'll be looking at some of the prints from the Cochran Collection, as examples, to help get ideas. It's a wonderful collection and an excellent opportunity to view the exhibit," she said.

The exhibit, African-American Works on Paper, is a collection including pen-and-ink sketches, prints, pastels and sequined collages that focus on works of 20th-century African-American artists. Artists featured in the collection include Jacob Lawrence, John Biggers and Robert Blackburn.

All supplies for the class will be provided, and anyone interested in participating may call the art museum to reserve a place before Friday morning, due to limited space, Walker said.

"We'll have all different colors of ink, and basically they can make as many as they want. All they need are their own lists of addresses for the cards," she said.

Bands from U.S., Japan team up in punk rock battle

PHIL KELLUM
staff writer

Anti-Flag/Obnoxious
"I'd Rather Be In Japan!!!" split 7"
(Nat Records)

One of Pittsburgh, Pa.'s, finest punk bands, Anti-Flag, leads off this U.S./Japan summit of punk rock.

I love this band, and I was surprised to see that the songs were from the same sessions as its 1996 album "Die For The Government."

The first song, "Their System Doesn't Work For You," seems to be a continuation of fellow Pittsburgh punks Aus-Rotten's "The System Works For Them." It's a pounding, anti-American, anti-capitalist political punk song.

I really like the sing-along choruses and the line, "Don't have to choose to join their corporate army. Your choice!"

The second song continues in the anarchist/anti-American theme with "Class Plague." In this song, Anti-Flag advocates revolution and the overthrow of the class system in this country. It's also a slower, more dirge-like song than the first.

This side rocks. Anti-Flag can do no wrong.

The B side is a cool look at Japanese punk with Obnoxious, a band I had never heard of before this record.

"Go To Hell" sounds really good recording-wise, except for the vocals. They seem to be drowned out at times, but the dual vocal attack sounds cool.

The lyrics attack those who make fun of punks for the way they look and dress. Obnoxious gets its point across even with lyrics in broken English. My favorite lyrics in this one are "Can you something better? Can you think better? I'd rather die. You dig?!!"

Obnoxious' second song features a title and lyrics that are unprintable in this paper. Just use your imagination.

Music Review

It's a great, sloppy hardcore song with rad gang choruses with what sounds like the whole band screaming along to "Destroy man of high station. Destroy your future. Destroy man of high station. Our life has no choice."

Classic. Search for this one.

Less Than Jake
"Muppets 7"
(Liquid Meat)

Less Than Jake continues on with its silly choices for covers and singles with a cool 7-inch featuring all Muppets songs.

First off, the Gainesville, Fla., boys and girl transform "Movin' Right Along" from a nice little song to a fast, punk song.

After the first couple of verses, someone in the band yells, "This song sucks!" It's good to hear that Less Than Jake doesn't take itself too seriously.

After listening to this song just once, it will stick in your head for the rest of the day.

Then Less Than Jake doubles the tempo of "Rainbow Connection" and creates a cover that would make Animal very proud. I especially liked the cool breakdowns between verses and the melody of the song being carried in the bass riffs. This song is guaranteed to make you smile.

While the A side is funny, the B side is where it really gets silly.

The first song on the B side is "Life's Little Movie," I think, because there are no song titles listed. Either way, it's a blazingly fast 20-second ditty.

The funniest song, though, is Less Than Jake's cover of "Mississippi Mud."

The trombonist, Buddy, sings it alone with no accompaniment.

Oh yeah, it's sung as fast as he can with a little trombone blast at the end.

This record is not to be taken too seriously. It's meant to be fun. I really like it, but I'm a huge Less Than Jake fan. Give it a listen if you're a fan, too.

Ex-CU chancellor to face charges of sexual harassment in federal case

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — A sexual harassment lawsuit against former University of Colorado Chancellor Jim Corbridge has been delayed while U.S. District Judge Daniel Sparr considers defense motions to throw the case out.

Jennifer Miller, 51, who worked for the university 28 years, says in her lawsuit she was forced from her job as assistant to the chancellor because she refused Corbridge's advances.

"She was required to work in a sexually hostile work environment created and dominated by a chancellor who was sexually harassing his own subordinates over and over again," Miller's attorney David Rees said.

CU and Corbridge's attorneys deny all the allegations. The university investigated and found no inappropriate conduct.

Corbridge, now a law professor, was chancellor from 1986 until he resigned from the post Aug. 1, 1994.

The lawsuit claims CU regents knew for years that Corbridge used his powerful position to entice female employees into sexual relationships, rewarding those who complied with promotions, pay increases and other benefits.

Corbridge's lawyer, Tom Rice, said his client did not sexually harass anybody anywhere at any time. Corbridge had left the chancellor's office before Miller resigned. Allegations against Corbridge became public last year when The Rocky Mountain News obtained a copy of a deposition by then-CU president Judith Albino in which she said she told regents about Corbridge's sexual behavior.

CU contends Albino's comments are based exclusively on rumor and speculation. The court file also contains an affidavit by Jane Branigan, a clerical worker in the office, who said, "Jennifer (Miller) read sexual intentions into situations where they just did not exist."

Former intern sues Yale after contracting AIDS

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — It was only a needle prick.

But the tiny wound created huge trouble for a Yale University intern, who now has the virus that causes AIDS.

The woman is suing the Ivy League university, claiming she was not trained or supervised on how to insert a line into an artery. She said her future has been ruined as a result of the needle prick she received as she cared for an AIDS patient.

"She has had to change all of her life's plans," her attorney, Michael P. Koskoff, told jurors Tuesday as the woman's lawsuit came to trial. The woman, now a specialist in internal medicine at an undisclosed university, was allowed to sue under the pseudonym Jane Doe.

Yale attorney William J. Doyle said the case is a tragedy but that all healthcare workers face the risk of being stuck by needles. He said carelessness may have played a role.

"Needle sticks are inevitable. There is no way to guarantee they won't happen," Doyle said. "Regardless of the skill of the health care worker, regardless of the training ... one moment of inattention is all it takes."

Jane Doe was 25 years old, fresh out of the University of Chicago Medical School and only seven weeks into her internship at Yale-New Haven Hospital when she was asked on Aug. 18, 1988, to insert an arterial line.

As blood gushed through the tube, she pulled out the line and capped it with her gloved thumb to prevent the blood from spraying around the room. At the same time, the needle, which she was also holding, punctured her glove and thumb.

Though terrified, she resumed the procedure until the line was inserted properly. Then she fled the intensive care unit, removed her gloves, scrubbed her hands and tried to bleed out the wound.

It was to no avail. Six weeks later, she tested HIV-positive.

The woman, now 35, has had to give up her dreams of marriage, family and a private practice in hematology or endocrinology, her lawyer said.

She is seeking general and punitive damages plus court costs and attorney's fees. In addition to treatment she receives to arrest the onset of AIDS, she has been treated for depression.

Koskoff said the woman had only performed the procedure successfully once before and wasn't confident she could do it again, but she wanted to impress her Yale supervisors.

Doyle said her supervisor had described a young woman brimming with confidence, who appeared competent when asked to insert the line. He said she had done similar procedures hundreds of times.

Clinton discusses racial issues at forum

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AKRON, Ohio — In a blunt exchange on racial tensions, President Clinton praised a college student on Wednesday who admitted that seeing a poorly dressed black man on the street makes him a little scared.

"That's a pretty gutsy thing for you to admit," Clinton told Jonathan Morgan, a white University of Akron student who joined eight other panelists at a presidential town hall meeting on race relations.

"But that's the kind of thing we have to get out on the table," Clinton told Morgan, saying he was proud of the young man.

The exchange was just what Clinton advisers hoped to produce by putting the media savvy president on a stool, microphone in hand, in front of a hand-picked audience instructed to talk frankly about the nation's racial divide.

Following months of deliberately avoiding tense racial issues, Clinton hoped the meeting would provide the candor needed to jump-start his laggard program for racial reconciliation.

After opening remarks in which he unveiled a new education initiative, Clinton left the lectern and sat on the stool, then told his audience, "Forget about all these people who are out there staring at you.

"When this is over, I want you to do this all over again at work and in other groups that your in ... because what we're trying to do here is drop a pebble in a pond and have it reverberate all across the country."

D.J. Beatty, a black University of Akron student, said a poor white youth can put on nice clothes, go to the mall and look middle-class. "I can't change the color of my skin," he said.

Morgan, the white student, said TV stars like Bill Cosby helped him to see blacks as equals.

Other shows, however, have affected him differently, leading Morgan to admit that when he sees a poorly dressed black man, "I might be a little bit scared."

Clinton said blacks and whites should not be afraid to joke about their differences. His audience paid heed.

Ronald Fowler, a black pastor at the Arlington Church of God, joked, "We've never done country music well."

After the laughter subsided, Clinton quipped, "I'll probably get a wire from Charlie Pride this afternoon." Pride is a black country music singer.

In his opening remarks, Clinton announced plans to create education opportunity zones modeled along economic development zones. He wants to provide financial incentives to 15 to 25 poor school districts that adopt dramatic reforms such as closing bad schools and firing bad teachers.

But he said government policies alone can't ease racial strife.

"Yes, there is a public responsibility, but this country in the end rises or falls on the day-to-day activities of its ordinary citizens," he said.

Since Clinton announced his effort last June, neither he nor his advisers have taken up racial issues that are laced with tension, such as a proposed apology for slavery or California's ban on affirmative action.

The White House has moved in recent days to bring conservatives into the debate, hoping to spice it up, but it also continues to cling to an approach that avoids blunt confrontation.

The White House admitted Tuesday that it should have moved sooner to hear the voices of critics in planning the race effort. "It may have been more useful to bring ... folks like that into the mix earlier," White House spokesman Mike McCurry said.

Aides also announced a series of intimate "One America conversations," to be convened by Cabinet secretaries, White House aides and members of Clinton's race advisory board in venues around the country in the days following Wednesday's meeting in Akron.

▶ The race issue
Clinton kicked off a new education initiave by moderating a forum on race issues at the University of Akron. As part of his new program, Clinton aides have developed public-service using slogans such as, "We can end prejudice if we can talk to one another."

Senate to vote on adding Spanish channel

KRISTIN BOYD
staff writer

Student Senate will vote tonight on the proposal offered by the Hispanic American Leadership Organization to bring the Spanish television network, UNIVISION, to the Manhattan cable system.

Tim Riemann, student body president, said he didn't see any problem with the proposal being approved by Senate.

"I think it will be unanimous. I can't think of any reason why someone would be opposed to it," Riemann said.

Most student senators are in favor of the proposition.

"I am definitely for it. I am a graduate student, and I teach Spanish I and III. I would like it for myself, and it would be a really good tool for students," Mary Copple, graduate school senator, said.

Riemann said he would definitely sign the proposal if it was approved by Senate.

"Not only do we have students who are Spanish, but we have thousands of students who are taking Spanish. This would be an obvious resource for students," Riemann said.

Richard Cofer, general manager of TCI of Kansas, said adding UNIVISION to the cable system would have to be at the expense of another channel. He said he didn't know if there were enough people interested in Spanish to add the channel.

Cofer said that even if the Student Senate approves the proposition, it will not necessarily guarantee UNIVISION will be added.

"We like to hear from our customers, and we certainly will take it into account if it is passed," Cofer said.

CARMIN ROSS-MURRAY, director of KSU Department of Resources, arm-wrestles Fred Rice, director of the KSU Small Business Development Center, at the Professional Business Development Seminar Wednesday morning at the Ramada Inn. Ross-Murray wanted to show that conflict can be won by both sides, especially if both parties aren't bound by expected rules.

CONFLICT MEDIATION

Seminar focuses on ways to avoid, resolve conflict

NATE JENKINS
staff writer

Engaging in conflict isn't a choice. It cannot be avoided. It surrounds everybody, everywhere, said Carmin Ross-Murray, director of employee relations at K-State.

Ross-Murray spoke about conflict at the 16th-annual Professional Development Seminar Series Wednesday at the Ramada Inn.

"We get caught up in the negative aspects of conflict, and that is what we need to get rid of," Ross-Murray said. "Instead, we should look at conflict creatively and as an opportunity."

A graduate of Ohio State University with degrees in both law and English, a former associate of a Manhattan law firm and a one-time prosecutor for the City of Manhattan, Ross-Murray has worked in conflict mediation and management since 1986.

At K-State, Ross-Murray said she mediates conflicts between employees in hopes that mutual understanding develops, not anger and frustration.

"We have learned to accept that mediocrity is fine when dealing with other people, that just getting along with somebody is an accomplishment, when it really isn't," she said.

Ross-Murray said conflicts can range from being upset at somebody for not showing up on time to having a longstanding grudge between family members or business associates. Approaching the conflict creatively, not blindly assuming that the person will act a certain way and not change, is the best way to handle friction with other people.

As Ross-Murray ended her speech she offered a challenge to the audience.

"I challenge you to take responsibility for the patterns you've built up dealing with conflict, to challenge your assumptions about people," she said.

Service fair aims to educate despite low participation

TONYA ALLOWAY
staff reporter

Not many students took part in the Social Services Fair in the K-State Student Union Wednesday. If they had, they would have gained much knowledge about the services available to them on campus.

Elizabeth Crain, staff assistant at the Women's Center, said only one person had come by for a flyer.

"That was the highlight," she said.

The table for the Women's Center offered informational handouts for many problems women face.

The center deals with issues like sexual assault, domestic violence, eating disorders, body image, crime prevention and self-defense, Crain said.

Another group concerned with safety was Lafene Health Center. Julie Tarara, graduate student in agronomy, said she was informing students about services available at Lafene.

"Our function is to promote student health," Tarara said.

Tarara said she was available to answer anyone's questions about health issues as well as questions about the health fee, although there wasn't much of a turnout for the fair.

Tim Gillette, senior in marketing and management, represented the Academic Career Information Center at the fair. He said the purpose of ACIC is to assist students in making decisions.

Gillette said although ACIC doesn't tell the students what to do, it can help them during the decision-making process.

"Basically, we help students in one of two ways, either by helping them select or choose a major that is right for them or by helping them do career exploration to find different career opportunities within their degree," Gillette said.

Traci McCauley, senior in agriculture economics, said ACIC helps about a thousand students do self-assessments.

"They assist students in finding a major or career," McCauley said. "We have Discover, which is computer-based, and a self-directed search that is done by looking through books."

McCauley said ACIC doesn't critique résumés anymore, which is a recent change. Now the critiques are done at Career and Employment Services instead, she said.

The choice is simple.

A COMMITMENT TO QUALITY EDUCATION

JIM BOYER, professor of foundations and adult education, is retiring after 26 years at K-State

STORY BY LORI GUILFOYLE

▸ PROFESSOR WORKS FOR CULTURAL diversity, justice for all K-State students.

Jim Boyer, professor of foundations and adult education, said he had no intention of staying more than two years at K-State.

But the drive for changes on issues of diversity and social and academic justice inspired him to stay a little longer.

Boyer said he knew almost nothing about the Midwest or K-State as a primarily agricultural land-grant institution.

During Boyer's 26 years at K-State, he has taught classes, created courses, directed urban education programs, developed curriculums and written numerous books and articles, which relate mostly to the multicultural education of students.

Boyer has served as faculty adviser to organizations such as the Black Student Union, United Black Voices and Black Men on Campus, in addition to working on university diversity, fair housing and religion committees.

His obligations to the university did not stop there. Boyer also helped establish the American Ethnic Studies program and the Multicultural Resource-Research Center in Hale Library.

After three years conceptualizing the American Ethnic Studies program, Boyer helped it become an official program on campus. In 1987, he was appointed to the American Ethnic Studies faculty.

Although Boyer is giving up teaching full-time, he will still take on a wider community activist role, continue research on African American males in the classroom, do consulting work and serve as pastor of Fellowship Temple. In spring 1998, he plans to help coordinate a symposium on "Black Males on Campus."

In addition, Boyer will be a K-State senior scholar and will work closely with the James B. Boyer Diversity Advocacy Fund, which he said will enhance diversity initiatives within the College of Education. The $10,000 annual fund will come from the College of Education's annual budget to support the activities of its Diversity Advocacy Group.

Boyer said he sees this as a way to increase consciousness by analyzing policies, programs, philosophies, practices and projections into the next century and how each looks at diversity.

> "Society is becoming increasingly multicultural and international. Our students are entering this world. If we don't expose them to the issues they will encounter, we can't expect them to be successful."
> • Mike Holen
> dean of the College of Education

Boyer said the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr., had a mobilizing effect on him. He said he remembers well the day he heard that King had been shot. He was a college student at Ohio State University attending a church group, made up of young people, when someone came in to announce the news.

"Martin Luther King Jr., represented non-violence and mobilized literally millions of us to that philosophy," Boyer said.

He was equally influenced by Mary McLeod Bethune, founder and president of Bethune-Cookman College, Boyer's alma mater. She was recognized by President Franklin Roosevelt for her leadership as an African-American educator and civil rights activist.

Both to the campus and the College of Education, Boyer has served as a spokesman of diversity-related issues for three decades, said Mike Holen, dean of the College of Education.

Boyer has helped make diversity training a priority in the development of the College of Education's curriculum, he said.

Holen said Boyer taught him that a diverse environment in a university is important because it reflects the nature of society.

"Society is becoming increasingly multicultural and international," Holen said. "Our students are entering this world. If we don't expose them to the issues they will encounter, we can't expect them to be successful."

Boyer is a graduate of Bethune-Cookman College, earned his masters in school administration from Florida A&M and a doctorate from Ohio State University. He was a high school teacher and administrator and taught at the University of Houston before joining K-State as an associate professor in 1971. In 1975, he became the first African American at K-State promoted to full professor.

Boyer was the initial recipient of K-State's Presidential Award for Distinguished Service to Minority Education and is a past recipient of the university's Martin Luther King Award for his contributions to higher education. He was named a Danforth Foundation Associate for humanizing college teaching in 1973. He is a founding member of the National Association for Multicultural Education.

"As I wind down 26 years here at K-State, what I discovered is that you cannot be a part of an institution for all those years and not have some emotional investment in that institution," Boyer said. "In some ways while I look forward to it, there is this emotional cord that I carry and I carry it because I think K-State has come miles down the road of diversity, which I consider my highest priority."

Kaczynski's cabin leaves for California to aid defense's case

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — The homemade cabin where Theodore Kaczynski spent 20 years as a hermit left Montana on Wednesday for Sacramento, where defense lawyers will use it to try to prove that the Unabomber suspect was mentally ill.

The homemade structure had neither running water nor electricity, only a small wood stove for heat and a piece of wood covered with a thin layer of foam for a mattress.

Jurors entering the tiny shack will step into the claustrophobic world of a mentally ill man, Kaczynski's lawyers said.

While the cabin began its 1,100-mile journey on a flatbed truck, U.S. District Judge Garland Burrell Jr. was laying out ground rules for the final days of jury selection.

By midday, the pool of jury candidates had grown to 62. But the judge said he now plans to select at least 70 prospects — up from the earlier figure of 64 — and will conduct mass questioning of that group before lawyers choose the final 12 jurors and six alternates. That process is likely to get underway next week.

Defense lawyer Quin Denvir, seeking to portray Kaczynski as suffering from paranoid schizophrenia, has suggested that the key to his client's defense is the 10-by-12-foot woodland shack that stood only 13 feet high.

The defense is paying for transport of the cabin, which left Malmstrom Air Force Base near Great Falls, Mont., shortly before dawn Wednesday. Officials would not say when it would arrive in Sacramento, but defense attorneys predicted the journey would take about three days.

The cabin will be stored at a former Air Force base in Sacramento until it is needed in the trial.

Although the cabin is small enough to fit in the courtroom, it is most likely jurors will be taken to the site where it is stored.

"You've got to see this cabin to understand the way this man lived," Denvir has said.

FBI agents raided the shack outside Lincoln, Mont., when they arrested Kaczynski in April 1996. They found the place crammed with evidence that they contend proves Kaczynski is the Unabomber.

Most prospective jurors questioned during the last four weeks said they knew about the cabin, had heard about or read the Unabomber's manifesto and suspected that Kaczynski was guilty.

They have been quizzed intensively about their feelings on the death penalty because Kaczynski would be eligible for the ultimate sentence if convicted in the killing of a timber lobbyist.

He is charged in one other death in the Sacramento area, but that occurred after the federal death penalty law went into effect. He is charged separately with murder in the death of a New Jersey advertising executive. He has pleaded innocent to all charges.

Prosecutors say Kaczynski carried out a calculated, 18-year siege that terrorized the nation. Defense lawyers say he was mentally ill and acting on irrational impulses.

But the judge has warned that unless Kaczynski agrees to the tests by government doctors, psychiatric witnesses for both sides will likely be limited to interpreting the defendant's writings.
